The most important lesson we have learnt is that the law of service is the one which should control our lives, and influence all the relations of men and women one to another. The spectacle of millions of men and women who have devoted themselves to the service of mankind, and very many of whom have given their lives or their health, or have been maimed for the sake of others, is the most inspiring thing the world has known. The individual acts of self-sacrifice of which there have been so many that they have become common, the recognised thing, have surely made us realise that self-sacrifice is that which is most worthy of human beings. There has been manifested a noble impatience against selfishness and self-interest, whether of individuals or of classes. There has been a great deal of selfishness evident no doubt, but the general sense of the community has been opposed to it—has condemned it.

On the other hand the law of competition, which before the war regulated our lives, had nothing in its results that commends it to men as one to be obeyed.

The conditions of industrial life were not such as to bring satisfaction to any section of the community.

Unrest, distrust, a nervous feeling that individuals and classes had always to be on the look-out for some trap that was being set for them—some advantage to be gained over them, or some loss of opportunity to score a point over others. These have been the results of the law of competition, and they are surely unworthy of civilised beings. The law of competition has been tried and found wanting—it is self-condemned by the very conditions it has created.

The law of service has proved itself, and has won the respect and homage of the human heart, for man is, after all said and done, made in the image of God: and that which is divine, awakens a response in the human heart.

But the danger is, that while the law of service may be recognised as the one most worthy of acceptance by human beings, and most certain to bring peace and happiness, the recognition will be theoretical only. What is needed is the will to practise, to translate into actual daily life, no matter what the effort may cost, that law of service to others which our hearts and minds accept. If we could honestly accept and act upon the principles that the rights and privileges of others are more important than our own; that our duties and responsibilities are more to be considered than those of others; that the benefit of the whole community is of far greater importance than the advantage of individual or section, we should have gone a long way towards the settlement of dispute—towards peace and contentment. Mutual trust would rule in the world.

No doubt loyal acceptances of such principles would mean the death-blow to the accumulation of huge fortunes by individuals, and to exclusive power by a class; but surely we have learnt that not material success and the gratification of earthly ambition are the things worthy of men and women who have lived through the last four years.

This law of service for others is essentially Christian. It was taught and exemplified by the life and teaching of our Lord. "I am among you as he that serveth." "The Son of Man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister." "He that saveth his life shall lose it, he that loseth his life for My sake shall find it." We have always believed it to be true; we have had a practical application during the last four years to drive the truth home. Is it not worth while trying to give the law a wider scope in every department of life?

It is no use waiting for the other fellow to begin, the one hope is that individuals will each in his own life act on it.

The second great lesson of the war is the outstanding importance and value of human beings. During all the four years the appeal has sounded again and again with ever increasing persistence for more, and yet more men for the army; more and yet more men and women for the munition works and for other necessary war works. Guns and munitions, all the various forces that were needed to be pressed into the service—all the knowledge that man had acquired, it was of no avail unless there were human beings to bring them all into action. The munition workers and all other home workers, the army behind the lines, the A.M.C., the sailors, the soldiers, the airmen—these have saved the world; without them no abundance of material resources, no knowledge of material powers could have been of any avail; and the moral force, which is human force, is what has been of most importance, for it is that which has made it possible to hold on when the end seemed uncertain, or at least very far away. Never again surely will it be possible for human beings to be treated as mere machines—merely as cogs in a great system. The predominant importance, the outstanding worth of human beings must surely be recognised, and economics must submit to have its conclusions modified by the recognition of the rights and privileges of human beings.

And this is but the extension, the application to daily life, of the truth of the Incarnation of the Son of God. Humanity in itself, apart altogether from all accidentals and the setting of human life, is of such supreme worth, that it is worthy to be united with God, fit to be the medium through which God Himself is revealed.

These two outstanding lessons of the war have a practical bearing in all that concerns the civilisation of the world. The law of service and the innate worth of human beings demand that they shall be recognised and have their full influence on character and conduct in controversy and in the settlement of disputes. Moral force, moral responsibilities, moral duties have to be recognised in the days to come. No elaborate systems and schemes will ever bring peace and happiness to the world unless morals have their place and influence. Social life and business and industry—in a word, civilisation—in the future can only be worthy of the cost at which it has been saved if morals are allowed their place and influence.

Miss Sindel, who went to Trubanamana little more than a year ago to take the school while Mrs Matthews was away, has gone to Ifly, a station near Normanton, as governess.

Miss Quinan, after rather more than three years' service at St. Paul's, Moa and at Trubanamana, has resigned from the staff of the latter Mission. Miss Quinan hopes to go to one of the other Missions of the A.B.M.

Mrs Matthews and the baby have returned from an extended furlough. The baby is very well, and it is believed there is no great risk of a return of the trouble with her, which made it necessary for Mrs Matthews to remain South nearly twelve months.

The Archbishop and the Bishops of the Church in Australia held a meeting in Sydney at the end of October, when various matters connected with the work of the Church were discussed.

Now that the war is over, the Church will have to face the problem of training the men who have found a vocation to the ministry in the trenches or while doing other war work. There is every probability that there will be a very large number of such candidates for ordination. The conditions of their preparation will have to be very carefully thought out, and a heavy responsibility rests on the Bishops in connection with this. They need the prayers of the faithful that they may be guided aright in coming to decisions. A large sum of money will be required, as no one, who has found his vocation, should be unable to respond for want of means to have the necessary preparation.

Reunion.

The Commission on Faith and Order of the Church in America has again asked all Christians to observe the Octave, January 18-25, as a special season of Prayer for Reunion. In view of the observance of this time of prayer, the following bulletin issued by the Secretary of the Commission is of great interest.

In June, 1917, the Commission of the American Episcopal Church on the World Conference on Faith and Order requested the whole Christian world to observe January 18-25, 1918, as a season of special prayer for the Reunion of Christendom, and for the guidance of the preparations for the World Conference. It is believed that the week was observed by more Christians of more Communion and in more parts of the world than had ever been the case with any such observance. The Commission is now asking for the observance of the same period next January for the same purpose.

One of the countries where the observance was most general and earnest was India, where, through the efforts of the National Missionary Council, different arrangements were made in each Representative Council Area for the observance of the week according to the different conditions prevailing.

In Bombay each congregation was urged to meet every day of the week for meditation and prayer, and a general meeting of the clergy in the city arranged the plans. The Church of the United Free Church of Scotland and the Hume Memorial Church of the American Marathi Mission were each open for an hour on each day throughout the week as places where Christians of every Communion could meet for silent prayer and meditation.

The Bishop of Madras, at the request of the National Missionary Council, prepared "Outlines of Meditation and Prayer" for use during the week. These were adapted and amplified and widely circulated, and used in Bombay and in other parts of the Province by Christians of every denomination.

A joint meeting for prayer in the Anglican Cathedral was held on Saturday, the day after the close of the Octave, because that afternoon was considered to be the best time for such a gathering. A small committee, with the Bishop of Bombay as Chairman, was appointed by the Bombay Representative Council of Missions to draw up the form of service, which was printed in English, Marathi, Gujarati and Urdu, the four languages representing the chief Christian communities of Bombay. It had not been possible to print also in Tamil, but many of the Tamil-speaking Christians in Bombay understand either English or Urdu; and many of the rest were able to bring their bibles and hymn books and so join in the service. The passages from Scripture were read first in English by the Bishop of Bombay, then in Marathi by the Rev. John Malelu of the American Marathi Mission, and then in Gujarati. The hymns chosen were those of which translations existed in all four of the Indian languages, so that each could join in his own tongue. The Cathedral was filled with between seven and eight hundred people of various communions and races.

The request for the observance of the same Octave January 18-25 in 1919 for special prayer for the reunion of Christendom has again been sent to Christians in every part of the world. It is hoped that they will begin at once to plan for the observance of the Octave, putting their whole soul into this outpouring of prayer by every communion, every race, and in every tongue, that, the unity of Christians being made visible to the world, it may believe that the Father sent the Son as its Redeemer.

Motor Car Fund.

The treasurer of the Motor Car Fund has sent a little more than £172 to the Diocesan Treasurer, Thursday Island, towards the cost of the car. Another £100 is needed to pay for the extras, freight, etc. Normanton and the Territory have subscribed well, but some parts of the Diocese have done little or nothing. Donations may be sent to Mr F. Rigby, Bank of New South Wales, Normanton.

The hospital at Trubanaman, the Mission Station for Aborigines was burnt to the ground in October, and all the contents were destroyed. The hospital was a substantial building of native material, which took nearly three months to build. About £80 worth of medicines and medical comforts were lost by the fire. Mrs Cole lost her books and her private instruments, while Mr Cyril Lane was a heavy loser. Just before he went to Mornington Island, twelve months ago, he removed all his possessions into one of the wards of the hospital as his house needed repairs. Mr. Lane, who is a keen naturalist, and has taken a great many photographs of animal and bird life, lost his camera with a very valuable lens, worth at least £50, and the collection of plates taken during the past three years.

Mr. R. D. Joynt, a member of the staff of the Roper River Mission, was ordained deacon by the Bishop of Bendigo, on Sunday, September 15th. Mr. Joynt returned to the Roper by the October boat from Sydney.

The Rev. J. J. E. Done with Mrs Done and their two children returned from furlough in December. Mr. Done was kept busy, doing deputation work for the Australian Board of Missions while he was down South.

Miss Hill has resigned her position as a member of the staff of the Roper River Mission for family reasons. Her mother, who is very old, needs her. Later on Miss Hill may be able to take up Mission work again.

Mr. Cyril Lane, after spending twelve months to relieve the situation for the Board of Missions of the Presbyterian Church of Australia, at Mornington Island, has returned to Trubanaman.

Mrs Newton accompanied the Bishop to the Gulf in November, and while in Normanton was the guest of Mrs Sherrin, and later of Mrs Allow.

Mass Movements in India.

The Bishop of Madras has sent the following memorandum to the Bishop asking that it might be published in the Carpentarian. The Government of India will probably enter upon new developments in a few years. There is a scheme for giving the people more influence in the government. This will affect the huge masses of the lower classes, and gives to missionary work amongst them a special importance:—

The Episcopal Synod of the Province of India and Ceylon passed at its recent session the following resolution:—

MASS MOVEMENTS.

Resolved: (1) 'That the Synod, having heard with deep thankfulness of the increasing strength, during the last few years, of the movement among the outcasts of Hindu Society towards the Church, especially in the Dioceses of Travancore, Madras, Dornakal, Bombay, Lahore, and Lucknow, recognises in the movement a wonderful opportunity of advancing the Kingdom of Christ in India and at the same time a very solemn responsibility; and in view of the urgent needs of making adequate provision without delay for pastoral ministrations to the large number of converts recently gathered into the Church and for the education of the children, and also of the serious danger that exists lest the present opportunity should pass away and be lost through neglect and indifference on the part of the Church, earnestly appeals to all members of the Anglican Communion to support all efforts that are being made to help the Church in India to respond worthily to this great call from God.'

(2) 'That a Committee, consisting of the Bishops of Madras (convener), Travancore and Dornakal be appointed to draw up a brief statement with regard to the work and needs of the Church of England in dealing with this movement, and to secure for it the widest possible circulation both in India and elsewhere; and also to prepare a more detailed report, to be published as soon as possible, so as to enable the members of our Communion to understand the urgency of the needs created by the movement, and to co-operate in the work by their prayers and alms.'

This short preliminary statement is put forth now by the Episcopal sub-committee appointed by the Synod, with a view to explain the present situation in the various dioceses and to enlist the prayers and help of Churchmen throughout India and elsewhere.

The outcasts of India, numbering some fifty millions, though in a state of virtual slavery, dense ignorance, hopeless poverty and moral degradation, constitute the backbone of the agricultural system of this country and form a very valuable economic asset to the State. Awakening from the lethargy of ages, these people are now feeling after freedom and the common rights of humanity, from which they and their forefathers have been debarred under the Hindu system of caste. This legitimate longing after a fuller life is naturally turning them to Christ. In many parts the conviction is growing among them that in Christ and in His Church alone lies their hope, and this finds expression in an insistent appeal for instruction, baptism, and pastoral care.

So far, about one hundred and fifty thousand of them have become members of our Church, and several hundreds of thousands have been admitted into other Christian bodies. But notwithstanding all the arrangements made for pastoral care by the Missionaries of our Church, much still remains to be done. The adequate and early provision of a trained pastoral agency and efficient educational institutions for training lay-workers is vital for discharging the grave responsibilities imposed upon us by the movement. Neglect now will seriously tell upon the future welfare of the Indian Church.

But apart from the obligations of work already undertaken, there is the silent appeal of the millions beyond the border of the Church. In some regions large numbers are waiting for teachers. In other parts extensive movements towards the faith will be set on foot as soon as the knowledge of the Gospel penetrates. This constitutes a challenge which the Church cannot ignore. But the Church in India is absolutely helpless in the face of this opportunity, through lack of Missionary forces, both foreign and indigenous, and funds for their support.

Meanwhile the opportunity may pass away, as it did in certain parts of the country, which witnessed large Mass Movements in former years. Convinced, therefore, that delay may work irreparable injury to the cause of the Kingdom of Christ in India, we put forth this short preliminary statement, so that the interest of the Church in India and abroad may be won, and the prayers of the faithful stimulated on behalf of one of the greatest calls the Church in India has ever had to face.

The situation in regard to each Diocese is as follows:—

The Travancore Diocese has already gathered in 36,000 converts. There are still 200,000 outcasts who are at present accessible. The Church Missionary Society is responsible for this work.

The Madras Diocese has in its Telugu area 60,000 adherents. The Church Missionary Society and the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel are both engaged in the task. A tenth only of the outcasts in the Telugu country have so far been gathered in.

In the Dornakal Diocese, the Church Missionary Society, the Indian Missionary Society of Tinnevely Society, and a Diocesan Mission, have divided the work between them. There are at present 10,000 converts, and about 200,000 are waiting to be gathered in. Eight taluqs in the diocese are absolutely untouched by any Missionary Society.

In the Bombay Diocese the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel and the Church Missionary Society have Mass Movements going on in their fields. The number so far gathered in is 4,000.

In the Lucknow Diocese the movement has commenced in great force in the field under the Church Missionary Society. Over 10,000 have already been gathered in.

In the Lahore Diocese 25,000 have been admitted into the Church by the Church Missionary Society. There are still 300,000 that can be brought in with proper effort.

These dioceses earnestly require additional Missionaries to take charge of districts and institutions, schools for training Indian lay workers and clergy, and money for the support of Indian agency, and the erection of prayer houses, village schools, and educational establishments.

"The harvest truly is plenteous, but the labourers few; pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest that He may send forth labourers into His harvest."

"He said: Launch out into the deep and let down your nets for a draught. When they had done this, they enclosed a great multitude of fishes, and their net brake. And they beckoned unto their partners in the other boat, that they should come and help them. And they came and filled both the boats."

We also beckon to our partners throughout the world and say: Brethren, pray, help.

HENRY MADRAS,
Convener of the Committee.
May, 1918.

Contributions for Mass Movement work in India may be sent to any of the following:—

- (1) THE SECRETARY, C.M.S.,
Salisbury Square, London, E.C.
- (2) THE SECRETARY, S.P.G.,
15 Tufton Street, Westminster, London.

(3) THE METROPOLITAN OF INDIA AND CEYLON,
The Palace, Calcutta.

SUBSCRIPTIONS TO "THE CARPENTARIAN."—
Per the Rev. F. H. T. Lane: Mrs. Waters 5/-, Miss Herbert 2/6, Mrs. Morris 2/6; per the Rev. H. R. Longmore: Mrs. Aplin 2/6, Mrs. Moran 2/6, Mr. Sabine 2/6, Rev. H. R. Longmore 2/6, Mrs. Greig 2/6, Mrs. Willcocks, 2/6, Mrs. Lucas 2/-, Mrs. Reese 2/-; Mrs. Kirk 3/-, Mrs. Owen 5/-, Miss Wilkinson 5/-.

Proposed Visit of Bishop Montgomery to Australia.

With reference to the proposed visit of Bishop Montgomery to Australia, Bishop Montgomery has written in the following terms to the Archbishop of Brisbane:—

"I wonder what interpretation Churchmen in Australia put upon the prospect of my revisiting Australia and Tasmania. It just occurred to me that some might imagine that I came as late secretary of the S.P.G. I am bound to say that such a thought never occurred to me when I sent my provisional acceptance, but it has come to me now, and I want to say at once that my whole-hearted intention has been to revisit Australia as late Bishop of Tasmania, and in no sense as late secretary of the S.P.G., to come as the warmest possible supporter of the A.B.M., and to push its cause forward. My own view is that the A.B.M., as now representing the whole Church in Australia and Tasmania, ought surely to work on the lines of the Board of Missions in the United States and in Canada and in South Africa, namely, as making itself responsible for its own outlying Missions in its own territory as well as amongst those not yet evangelised, unless otherwise ordered. And further, my own personal opinion is that the Australian Church should now give notice that it needs no help from any British Society. I think the time has come when the Church in Australia has found itself. I mention this in case any brethren think I came to push the cause of S.P.G. It is the last thing which I personally wish to do."

Church of England High School for Girls

HERBERTON.

Under the management of the Sisters of the Sacred Advent.

QUARTERLY FEES:

BOARDERS:		EXTRA SUBJECTS:
Tuition and Board	£15 15 0	Drawing { If both subjects are taken, the fee is 30/-	1 1 0
Laundry	1 1 0	Painting {	1 1 0
DAY SCHOLARS	2 12 6	Woodcarving	1 1 0
		Shorthand	12 6
EXTRA SUBJECTS:		Bookkeeping	12 6
Pianoforte	1 11 6	Typewriting	12 6

There are a few bursaries available.
For further particulars apply to the Sister-in-charge, St. Anne's School, Townsville.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND

Day & Boarding School for Girls

"DALTON," WILLS STREET, TOWNSVILLE.

Conducted by the Sisters of the Sacred Advent, Brisbane.
Splendid Situation. Healthy Locality.

QUARTERLY FEES.

BOARDERS—		Tuition, Board and Laundry ...		£10 10 0
DAY SCHOLARS		2 2 0
EXTRA SUBJECTS—		Pianoforte ...		1 11 6
		Drawing { If both are taken, the fee is 30/-		1 1 0
		Painting {		1 1 0
		Elocution ...		10 6
		Fancy Work ...		5 0

For further particulars, apply The Sisters, c/o Diocesan Registry, Townsville.
Correspondence invited

DIOCESE OF CARPENTARIA—MITCHELL RIVER CATTLE FUND.

(Administered by a Committee appointed by the Diocesan Council.)

STATEMENT OF ACCOUNTS FOR THE YEAR ENDING DECEMBER, 31st, 1918.

RECEIPTS				£	s.	d.	EXPENDITURE				£	s.	d.
Balance, January 1st, 1918	300	1	1	Medicines	85	15	9
Sales of Cattle	130	10	0	Wheels	14	0	0
							Saddles	22	5	7
							Boiler Tubes	3	19	6
							Harness	23	15	0
							Exchanges and Bank Charges	3	4	0
							Balance, December 31st, 1918—
							Diocesan Church Management Fund	£150	0	0
							Bank of Queensland Ltd.	127	11	3
											277	11	3
											£430	11	1

F. W. SLADE, Hon. Diocesan Secretary.

MITCHELL RIVER MISSION.

STATEMENT OF ACCOUNTS FOR THE YEAR ENDING 31st DECEMBER, 1918.

RECEIPTS AND EXPENDITURE A/c.

EXPENDITURE				£	s.	d.	RECEIPTS				£	s.	d.
Mission Station A/c	766	3	9	Grants—Australian Board of Missions	485	0	0
Staff A/c	113	4	11	Diocese of Carpentaria	87	9	0
Boat Stores and Wages	96	16	9	Queensland Government	350	0	0
„ Gear and Repairs	21	19	7							922 9 0
Insurance on Goods	3	11	3	Mrs Pritt, for upkeep of Boat...	10	10	0
General Expenses	28	4	9	S. Andrew's Waterside Mission, for Boat	10	0	0
Salaries and Wages	347	15	0							20 10 0
							From Cattle Fund, for Medicines, etc.	126	0	10
							Balance of A.B.M. Grant for 1917	53	17	10
													179 18 8
							Discounts	6	9	6
							Freight and Charges	6	9	1
							Donations	22	0	9
													34 18 7
							Excess Expenditure over Receipts			219 19 9
													£1,377 16 0

BALANCE SHEET, DECEMBER 31st, 1918.

LIABILITIES				£	s.	d.	ASSETS				£	s.	d.
Hodels Ltd.	377	19	7	Cash in Bank of Queensland	17	4	2
Diocese of Carpentaria	100	0	0	H. Matthews	19	18	4
Australian Board of Missions—							Australian Board of Missions—
Amount paid Rev. H. Matthews	48	15	0	Travelling Expenses charged wrongly	37	9	0
Purchase of Iron	1	6	0	Organ Fund		18	5
Hospital Building Fund	7	7	0	Spring Cart A/c	14	12	0
Natives' Wages held in Trust	14	2	1	Balance, Excess of Liabilities	459	7	0
											£549	9	8

Examined and found correct.—(Signed) E. J. HENNESSEY, Auditor.

(Signed) HODELS LIMITED,
Per GEO. CLARKE, Managing Agents,

1919.

Diocese of Carpentaria.

Bishop:

RT. REV. HENRY NEWTON, B.A.
Thursday Island, Queensland.

Sub-Dean:

REV. F. W. SLADE, B.A.

Diocesan Secretary:

REV. F. W. SLADE, B.A., Thursday Island.

Commissaries:

REV. POC. PONSONBY, M.A., The Rectory, Devonport, England.
REV. J. JONES, M.A., 242 Pitt Street, Sydney.
REV. W. P. GLOVER, Th.L., Warwick, Q.
REV. J. W. ASHTON, St. Kilda, Melbourne, V.

Clergy:

REV. C. HALL, Th.L., Normanton (on leave).
REV. F. H. T. LANE, Darwin.
REV. H. R. LONGMORE, B.A., Croydon.
REV. C. H. MASSEY, Th.L., Darwin (on leave).
REV. F. W. SLADE, B.A., Thursday Island.
REV. E. TAFES, Mossman.
REV. J. TWEEDIE, B.A., Cooktown.

Honorary Lay Reader:

MR. G. E. A. PATCHING, Cooktown
MR. D. A. ROBERTS, Darwin.

Diocesan Council:

REV. F. W. SLADE, B.A. | MR. GEO. CLARK,
REV. J. J. E. DONE. | MR. GILSON FOXTON.
REV. G. A. LUSCOMBE. | MR. A. SULLIVAN.

Honorary Legal Adviser:

HIS HONOUR JUDGE MACNAUGHTON.

Aboriginal Mission, Mitchell River:

REV. B. S. COLE (Chaplain). | MRS. COLE.
MR. J. W. CHAPMAN. | MRS. MATTHEWS.
REV. H. MATTHEWS, J.P. (Supt.)
J. Geibo, T. Solomon, J. Savo.

Roper River Mission:

MR. DYER | MRS. DYER.
REV. R. D. JOYNT.
REV. H. E. D. WARREN (Supt.)

Torres Straits Mission:

REV. J. J. E. DONE. | REV. W. H. MACFARLANE.
REV. G. A. LUSCOMBE. | MRS. LUSCOMBE. [Th.L.
Miss LUSCOMBE.

The Diocese.

The See was founded in 1900, and consists of such part of Queensland as is bounded by the sea on the north and east, by the Northern Territory on the west, and by a line drawn from lat. S. 19deg. 30min. on the western boundary of Queensland due east to par. 144deg. E. and thence N. to lat. S. 16deg. 40min. and thence east to the sea, together with the whole of the Northern Territory, comprising an area of not less than 620,000 square miles. The population, which is very widely scattered over this immense area, consists of about 10,000 whites, 5,000 Japanese, Chinese, and other aliens, and 35,000 aborigines. The white population is mainly mining and pastoral. The See town is Thursday Island, a pearling centre north of Cape York.

Finance.

The Diocese has no endowments beyond the Bishop's income of £395 per annum. Every parish needs a grant from central funds which come from subscriptions to the Diocese; and grants from English Societies.

Missions.

Missions are carried on amongst the Japanese at Thursday Island; the South Sea Islanders; the aborigines on the Mitchell and Roper Rivers; and among the Islanders of the Torres Straits.

Special Offertories.

On Easter Day the offertories are given to the Clergyman of the Parish, and on Good Friday to the Australian Board of Missions.

The "Church Standard."

Posted to any Address for 6s. 6d. per Annum.

The CHURCH STANDARD holds the unique position of being the only independent weekly paper published in the interests of the Church of England in Australasia.

Published every Friday Morning.

Appeals to all Members of the Church of England, Members of the C.E.M.S., Churchwardens, Side-men and Parochial Councillors, Sunday School Teachers, Lay Readers, Catechists, and Clergy.

Specimen Copies on application to

THE CHURCH PUBLISHING CO. LTD.,

ROYAL INSURANCE BUILDINGS, 16 SPRING STREET, SYDNEY.

Glennie Memorial School,

Church of England School for Girls

TOOWOOMBA.

PRINCIPAL - - - MISS LAWRENCE

(Assisted by a highly qualified Resident Staff).

The School is under the direction of
His Grace the Archbishop of Brisbane, and Council.

Thorough Education. Pupils prepared for University Examinations.

MUSIC AND LANGUAGE SPECIALITIES.

Pupils prepared for the Examinations of the Associated Board R.A.M., R.C.M.

The New Building, situated over 2000 feet above sea level in twelve acres of ground, has been constructed according to the most approved modern ideas. There is accommodation for fifty (50) boarders, and all the rooms are light and excellently ventilated. The health and comfort of pupils is specially studied.

THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND HIGH SCHOOL FOR GIRLS.

ST. MARGARET'S HOUSE, THE ALBION, BRISBANE
(ETON HIGH SCHOOL).

Under the Management of the Sisters of the Sacred Advent.

PRINCIPAL - - - THE SUPERIOR OF THE SACRED ADVENT.

Head Mistress: Miss J. M. LYON, L.L.A.,
On London Register of Head Mistresses for Secondary Schools.

Pupils prepared for the Sydney University Examinations and for the Trinity College and Associated Board R.A. Exams.

TERMS FOR BOARDERS - - - UPPER SCHOOL, 10 GUINEAS
LOWER " 8 "
TERMS FOR DAY PUPILS - - - UPPER SCHOOL, 2 GUINEAS
LOWER " 1½ "

MUSIC, GERMAN, DANCING, PAINTING—1 GUINEA EXTRA.

For Prospectus, apply to Sister-in-Charge, St. Margaret's House; or to Church House, Ann Street, Brisbane.

ST. CATHARINE'S (Stanthorpe) HIGH SCHOOL FOR GIRLS

Under the Management of the Sisters of the Society of the Sacred Advent.

PRINCIPAL - - - THE SUPERIOR OF THE SACRED ADVENT.

Head Mistress: SISTER EVELYN, S.S.A.,
assisted by a Staff of Competent Teachers.

Pupils prepared for the Sydney University Examinations and for the Trinity College and Associated Board R.A. Exams.

The House is situated 2,500 feet above sea level, and is fitted with all modern improvements as a Boarding School for Girls.

Prospectus on application to the Sister-in-Charge, High School for Girls, Stanthorpe;
or to the Eton High School, Hamilton, Brisbane.

Diocese of Carpentaria.

INTERCESSION PAPER

January, February, March, 1919.

THANKSGIVINGS.

LET US GIVE THANKS:—

1. For the victories granted to our Forces.
2. For Peace restored to the world.
3. For the self-sacrifice shewn during the last four years.
4. For Confirmations at Burketown, Armraynald, and Croydon.

We thank Thee and praise Thee, O Lord.

INTERCESSIONS.

LET US PRAY:—

1. For guidance and strength to apply the lessons taught us by the war.
2. For the spirit of service to rule our lives.
3. For the guidance of the Holy Spirit for the members of the Peace Conference.
4. For the Reunion of Christendom.
5. For a sincere desire to know the truth, and grace to follow where it leads us.
6. That we may know the Will of God, and may make His Will our will.
7. For those who have been confirmed.
8. For the Missionaries on the Roper and Mitchell Rivers during the wet season.

We beseech Thee to hear us, good Lord.

The Carpenterian

FOR THE DIOCESE OF CARPENTARIA, NORTH AUSTRALIA.

Vol. XIX.—No. 74.]

THURSDAY ISLAND, APRIL 1, 1919.

[PRICE 2/6 A YEAR.
POST FREE.]

NOTICE.

All communications to be addressed to the Editor of The Carpenterian, Bishop's House, Thursday Island, to whom subscriptions may be sent. Subscription, 2/6 per annum, post free.

NOTICE TO CONTRIBUTORS.

All contributions of Parish News, etc., must reach the Editor before the last day of February, May, August, and November in each year.

Christmas and New Year in the Islands.

I returned from the Gulf on Saturday, December 14th, 1918, and left Thursday Island again with Mrs Newton by the "Herald," for S. Paul's, Moa, on Friday, December 20th. As Mr Luscombe was away on furlough, I had arranged to give the people at S. Paul's, at Adam, and at Badu their Christmas Communion. On the fourth Sunday in Advent there were full services at St. Paul's, and again on Christmas Day. The people had decorated the Church for the festival and had a fine new mat or the alleyway in the centre of the building. This had been plaited by the members of the Mothers' Union at S. Paul's, and they had worked hard to have it ready for Christmas. The mat is wide enough to go under the seats on each side of the alley, and so will not curl up at the edges. In the evening of Christmas Day carols were sung, and after the service, the people had their dancing. We all went to see it, but did not remain till midnight, when it was to come to an end. During the evening, there were some native songs—mostly choruses—one of which, quite a modern one, called "Eastern Post," is remarkable for the beautiful blending of the parts; the words and music are said to be local and modern. On S. Stephen's Day there was again a celebration of the Holy Communion, and those who had not been able to come on Christmas Day had an opportunity of making their Christmas Communion. On Friday, December 27th, I left S. Paul's by the "Herald" for Adam. We got away early, and though there was little wind, we got to Adam soon after mid-day. That afternoon we had Evensong and preparation for Christmas Communion. The next morning (Holy Innocents' Day), there was a celebration at 7 a.m., with a goodly number of communicants. The Adam people had made a collection for S. Paul's College, amounting to £2 3s. 6d., and this was given to me to be handed over. When the churchwarden gave me the money, I counted and found that there was a five-pound note in the money; the old man had made a mistake and put the wrong note in when making up the amount. I sometimes wonder if these people ever make such a mistake when doing business in Thursday Island after they have been paid-off; but most of the boys who sign on have a good idea of the difference between a five-pound note and a one-pound note.

A short run across the Strait between Adam and Badu, and round one or two islands to avoid reefs got us to Badu the same day, and after having lunch at Dogai, where Mr and Mrs Walker of the Papuan Industries are always hospitable. I went on to the village to camp over the Sunday, so as to be on the spot for the services. Mrs Zahel, the Government teacher, was away for the holidays, and her assistant, Miss Davidson, was at Dogai, so I was able to stay in the teacher's house, which is much more comfortable than the "prophets' chamber." Mr Luscombe has built near the Church. Late in the afternoon a deputation came to see me from Adam. It seems a man wished to be married, and they would like me to marry them while I was in those parts. Now the rule in the islands is, that a man must have his house built before he can be married, and the Government teacher has to be satisfied that the house has been built and that it is a decent house—not a mere hut built on the ground. Those are the orders of the Government, and they are good ones. I could not quite make out why I had not been told about the marriage when I was at Adam, and so save the people the trip over in a dinghy. So I wanted some particulars. It was all right I was told—"Teacher" knew all about it, the Protector had said everything was all right before the bridegroom had gone away twelve months before to sign on to one of the fishing boats. Is the house built? Well, no; but it is partly built, and another man will lend a house till the new one is finished; and they were very anxious that the marriage should take place at once. Is the bridegroom intending to sign on again? Oh, no! he is going to stay at home now for a time. It did not seem wise for the newly married couple to be at the mercy of a friend for house room; and under such circumstances it might be a long time before the new house is finished; so I said I would be back in about a month, and if the house was finished by then I would marry the couple, and with that they were content. We had Evensong and preparation for Communion, and the next day (Sunday, December 29th) there was a very large number of communicants at 7 a.m. Matins was said at 10 a.m., when there was a large congregation; in the afternoon there was Sunday School; at evening carols were sung.

The people had decorated the Church and had plaited a dorsal of pandanus leaves with a border about three inches wide of flowers, made by working in strips dyed black. At the top is a large star with trails of glory from it, made of thin strips of pandanus dyed black, and not drawn tight. On the Epistle side is a long pastoral staff, the crook just under the star, the end of the staff half way down the border; in the centre is a design of branches, spreading out on each side, and V shaped, just about the level of the top of the altar cross, so that they look like rays of glory from the cross. All this is of the initiative of the people themselves. And as the Church is called Bethlehem, the symbols are appropriate not only to the season, but to the dedication of the Church.

It rained in torrents, as it can rain only in the tropics, on the morning of the next day when we returned to S. Paul's. There was little wind, but fortunately the tide favoured us, and we were at anchor before dark.

I had to wait at S. Paul's till New Year's Day for the election of the Village Councillors, which is held in January. On New Year's Eve we had a Watch-night Service, and then a party of village folk went round to all the houses, dancing and singing at each in turn, and receiving some small present, and on New Year's morning there was a celebration of Holy Communion. The meeting to elect the three Councillors was held in the school room and was well attended; there were several nominations, and the voting was by ballot. Of the three who received most votes two were a tie, the third receiving a less number. This necessitated another ballot for the post of head councillor. The names were subsequently submitted to the Protector for the election to be confirmed. The Councillors at all the settlements on the islands are responsible for the care of the villages and the good conduct of the people; through them the Government teacher—at S. Paul's the Superintendent—administers the affairs of the community, and they have power to hold court and to inflict certain punishments—fine or imprisonment for minor offences against the law and the regulations of the reserve. They have a good deal of work and worry, and are tied to their homes by their duties, and they receive some slight remuneration from the Government. On the whole the system works well, especially where the powers that be have the wisdom and tact to use it to full advantage.

We expected to get back to Thursday Island on January 2nd, but the weather was wet and squally, and Mr Walker, of Badu, who had kindly promised to take us home by the "Goodwill," was not able to start from Badu till the Friday. We were out to meet the launch when she was near the passage, through the reef to the anchorage, and had a good run to the island.

The Bishop's Visit to the Islands.

I arranged to spend the greater part of February and March this year in the islands of the Torres Straits. It is not exactly the best time of the year to be travelling, when the north-west should be in full swing; squalls and rain are to be expected any time, and at all times, and the anchorages, not bad and quite safe in the south-east, are more than uncomfortable in the north-west. Still, if travelling is bad in the Torres Straits in the north-west, it is impossible altogether in many other parts of the Diocese. It so happens that for the first part of the visit to the Eastern Islands during February we had most wonderful weather, south-east nearly all the time, and we could lie quite comfortably in the south-east anchorages. Still Mr Done, who took me in the "Herald," grateful as he was, did not care to impose on our good luck and stay too long at Murray, Yorke, and Coconut especially. "We can't expect this to last" summed up his feelings.

Mr. Walker kindly took me out to Badu in the "Goodwill," and on the way we left Mrs Newton and Miss Inman at S. Paul's to keep Miss Luscombe company during part of the time her brother is away.

I wanted to get to Badu, Adam, and S. Paul's, to give the people another celebration; it was a little over a month since I had been there. We left Thursday Island on February 10th and arrived at Badu that evening. It was too late for service that night, but we had a celebration of Holy Communion the next morning, when there were 81 communicants, and later on in the morning I confirmed 3 infants. Mr Done had arrived from Mabuiag in the "Herald" an hour or so before we anchored in the "Goodwill," and had anchored at Adam. Late at night he came across in the dinghy, and we arranged for him to take the celebration at Adam the next morning, which would save a day. At Badu the people, with the Adam folk, had made a large number of native implements, ornaments, etc., of old-time days for an exhibition got up by Mrs Walker of Badu, and prizes had been given. I saw a great number of these at the School at Badu on the Tuesday morning, and coveted them all for the A.B.M. Travelling Missionary Exhibition. A model of a native house was given to me by the man who made it; but Mrs Walker—who is going to England shortly—wants as many of the exhibits as she can take with her; and as she had all the work of arranging the exhibition, it is only right she should have the first choice. There would be material for a most interesting lecture, and exhibits to illustrate it.

Mr Done sent the "Herald" dinghy for me on the Tuesday, and I went across to Adam about 11 o'clock in the morning. The Government Teacher had not been able to get over and see the house for the waiting bride at Adam, but the people had said it was "nearly" finished; so I was to marry the couple if the house was in the state it was reported to be! The wedding had been put off for a month as it was. When I got to the village and went to the house, I found there was no floor in it—houses are supposed to be built with the floors off the ground in these days—the old houses built with ground as floor are tabooed by the Government, very wisely. Evidently the people had just put on a spurt a day or two before we were expected! I had to say the wedding must be put off for another month.

Perhaps in nothing so much as in house-building are the people dilatory. Never do today what you can put off till to-morrow is the principle on which they work in many things, and especially in house-building.

We got to S. Paul's by the "Herald" on Tuesday, February 11th, and the next morning, after the celebration of Holy Communion and the baptism of a baby, we left for Yam. There was little wind, and we did not make much progress before the tide turned, and then to save what we had gained—for the tide would have swept us back—we anchored in the open sea.

There is shallow water in that part of the Straits, so it is always possible to anchor: but it is a risky thing to do, especially in the north-west season, as there is, of course, no shelter, and if a blow came up in the night it would mean "up anchor and go." But we were to have south-east weather all the time we were out in February, a most unusual thing.

Soon after midnight the tide turned; we were off again, and arrived at Yam Island about 9 a.m.. Here we found Miss Quinan, late of the staff of the Mitchell River Mission, in charge of the Island as Government Teacher. She had been about a week on the island. I gave the children a lesson, and then we went on. We were anxious to make as much use of the south-east weather as we could, for anchorages in the Eastern Islands are very dangerous in the north-west season. We were through the opening between the Warrior Reef and Mangrove Island before dark, and so were able to keep on all night, finding ourselves off Yorke Island at daylight. Very little wind all day Friday, we drifted with the tide, and late in the afternoon we were doing nothing, so Mr. Done, with two boys, took me in the dinghy on a reef to see if we could spear some fish. It was very interesting. A boy puts on a pair of swimming glasses, takes a spear, and swims under water or just on the surface very quietly and when he comes to a fish spears it—or misses it. Meantime the dinghy is pulled about quietly near the swimmer. The boy can remain under water for quite a long time, and with the glasses can see everything very distinctly. Sometimes there is a big haul, especially if there is a big stone on the bottom where the fish find their food. We only got one edible fish, but various interesting things were brought up for us from the reef.

We anchored at Darnley about 9 p.m. and went ashore at once, but not to sleep for many hours. Missionaries have no conscience when they meet, they talk and talk and talk, so that it was nearly three o'clock on Saturday morning before we got to bed. Mrs MacFarlane was wiser and retired fairly early. On Saturday there were people to be interviewed, amongst them one of the Churchwardens, who was anxious about provision for his wife when he himself should die. He is getting old; his one son, by a former marriage, is one of the students at S. Paul's, and so may not be living at Darnley, and the old man was anxious about the future. It was good of him to have the anxious thought, but I could not commit the Mission to pensions for stepmothers and other relations of prospective students, but I did assure the old chap that the Mission would see that the widow did not starve.

Mr MacFarlane has begun work on the church, and has drawn up plans which will make practically a new church, and that exceeding magnificent. An arch is to be cut in the present east end wall, and a new Apsidal Chancel is to be built on. At the west end is to be a porch, at one side of it a tower, and cloisters built along two sides of the building. These will strengthen the building and improve it greatly. There must be material bought for a new roof as the iron on the present building is very much rust eaten. The church is on the foreshore, and the south-east wind blows straight on to it. The people are doing all the work themselves: burning the lime, getting the material and doing the building under Mr MacFarlane's direction. They have also about £60 in hand to buy material for roofing. The walls for the Chancel are already some two feet up and the foundations for the porch are down. It will perhaps take many months before the whole work is completed. The men give one day a week to the work, and as most of the able-bodied men have to sign on for work on the boats, it will depend on the older men to do the building. It is a fine thing that the people should of their own labour and money build such a House of God.

About 6 p.m. on Saturday, February 15th, when the people had returned from their gardens, we had a service for the laying of the foundation-stone of the chancel. There was a large congregation gathered on the grass at the east end of the Church. A procession of the Clergy and Churchwardens was formed, with processional Cross and banner; and a hymn in the native language was sung as the procession marched round the Church to the east end. The laying of the stone was not the simple matter it usually is in Southern places, where there are all sorts of conveniences. The stone, a very weighty slab, was suspended from sheer-legs, and when the time came, was lowered by block and tackle. There was time and labour needed, and I did some of the work in getting it into position—straight and level; then I tapped it three times with a trowel and declared it well and truly laid, in the Name of the Blessed Trinity. Afterwards, the casing was filled in with lime and sand and stone, and all had to be rammed. There was no natty little toy trowel to be used but a real bona-fide mason's instrument. After the service, we went into the Church for Evensong and preparation for Communion; then we went home for tea.

On Sunday, February 16th, there was a celebration of Holy Communion at 7 a.m., with 64 communicants, Mattins and sermon at 10 a.m., Sunday School after that; and at Evensong Mr MacFarlane presented 14 candidates, 6 male 8 female, for confirmation. At night, a deputation waited on me to discuss various matters, so it was a full day.

On Monday we left for Darnley, but had not enough wind to take us there in the day, so a little before sundown we anchored on the edge of a reef. It was not safe to go further. Daylight on Tuesday saw us on the way again, but head wind from south-east meant slow progress, and we did not get to the anchorage till after mid-day. We, and especially Mr Done, did not mind that, for if the south-east held, we should have a safe anchorage at Murray Island; if the north-west came on well it would at least be an anxious time, if we had not to clear out altogether.

There were some questions of discipline to be gone into at Murray, and one we were able to settle that afternoon; another had to wait till the next day. In the evening Mr MacFarlane presented twenty-one candidates—12 male and 9 female—for Confirmation.

After the celebration of Holy Communion on the Wednesday morning, when there were 94 communicants, I went into another case of discipline, and Mr. McFarlane had a wedding. We spent the rest of the day on the island, and in the afternoon Mr. Bruce, the Government teacher, whose guest I was, took Mr. Done and me over the island, a beautiful walk, and the more interesting in company with Mr. Bruce, who knows more about Murray than any other white man, the old customs, and legends and fairy stories. Mr. MacFarlane was much too busy looking after his people to come with us. Indeed, when you visit an island with him you see very little of him, cannot even be sure of seeing him at meals.

On Thursday, February 20th, we left Murray before daylight, thankful to get away before a change in the weather. A good breeze and fair wind got us to Stephens Island early in the afternoon, and we went ashore at once. Mr MacFarlane had three candidates for Confirmation—2 male, 1 female—at Stephens Island. There were some babies to be baptised; and a meeting of the people was held to talk over various Church matters. It was my first visit to this island, on which there are only about two dozen people, all told—the children go to Darnley for school, living with friends there. There is a debt on the Church; the people are willing to pay it off, but they have never seen any accounts, and were under the impression that they had paid all off the cost of building. The matter goes back some years—before our time—and it looks as if the Mission will have to pay it off. We took over debts and credits when we took over the buildings.

Just before dusk a very heavy storm showed up, and we had to hurry on board, and got to the cabin just before the rain came down.

Before daylight on Friday we were under sail, and got to anchor at Yorke Island early. Here there were four men to be confirmed, a few minor matters to be gone into; and as Mr MacFarlane was to remain here and would be able to give the people their Communion, Mr Done and I left late in the afternoon for Coconut Island, where we anchored about 7 p.m. We went ashore at once for service; fixed up one or two matters that needed attention; arranged for a celebration of Holy Communion for the next morning, and then back on board for our supper. There were seventeen Communicants at the service on Saturday morning, and we were able to leave by nine o'clock for Yam. There we slept ashore, the "Herald" anchoring well out in case of a change of weather. We had Evensong with preparation for Communion that night, and although it rained in torrents the next morning, so heavy indeed that I could not make myself heard, there were 43 Communicants. It was raining on and off all day but there were good congregations at both Mattins and Evensong. We found Miss Quinan settled into her new work and happy in it.

On Sunday night we went on board the "Herald," intending to get away at midnight, but it was so dark and the weather so dirty that it was nearly daylight before we got up the anchor. A good run took us to S. Paul's early in the day, and Mr Done left me to get home to Mabuiag, where he could have ten days before picking me up to visit the western islands, and also be at Mabuiag for Ash Wednesday. On Thursday, February 27th, I went to Thursday Island by the "Banzai" to get the mail, intending to return on the Saturday, but heavy north-west squalls made it impossible to leave on that day, so I spent the Sunday on the Island, and returned to S. Paul's on Monday, March 3rd. I am to be at Badu for Sunday, March 9th, where Mr. Done will meet me, and we go to visit the rest of the islands in the Straits, but that will be after this goes to press.

We were very fortunate in the weather, and for that we are very thankful. All we did and all we saw shows that the work of the Mission prospers. Of course, the day of large numbers of candidates for Confirmation is past. Most of the older people have been Confirmed, and for Confirmation the work must now be concentrated on the younger people. We must aim at having all the boys confirmed and taught regular habits of Communion and worship before they are old enough to go to work. It is difficult to find time to teach them when they are signed on to the fishing and shelling boats, and to get the opportunity for their Confirmation, as they are at home only for about two months, and then not all at the same time. On nearly every island there were cases of discipline to be decided. This we must, of course, expect, and we ought to be thankful it can be done. It is not the large number of communicants at the celebrations, the large congregations, and the hearty services that show the development of spiritual life so much as a deepening of the sense of sin, and the exercise of discipline tends to that. Probably the priests do not know of every fall; only those of a public nature are dealt with in a public manner. There are many others which come to the knowledge of the priest privately, and the people can be treated as private penitents. That such confession should take place is in itself the best proof of spiritual life. Things of outward show, in Church building, in Church service, even in Communion made, may be of mixed motive, but confession of sin springs from a sense of sin, and of a need to unburden the soul.

The Bishop's Movements.

The Bishop was in the Islands for Christmas and New Year, and in January visited the Parishes of Cooktown and Mossman. He left Thursday Island on Friday, January 10th, and arrived in Cooktown early on Monday, January 13th. Soon after leaving Thursday Island on the Friday night, when there was a haze which made it difficult to pick up landmarks, the steamer was stopped, and the strong, erratic tide carried her on to a mud-bank; the impact was so gentle that one at least of the passengers did not know of it till the next morning. It meant a delay of a few hours, and there was a further delay off Cooktown, as the ship anchored till daylight on the Monday morning. On Wednesday, January 15th, the Bishop went on to Port Douglas by the "Kurandah." A week was spent in the Mossman Parish, and the Bishop returned to Cooktown, where he spent another week, arriving back in Thursday Island on Friday, January 31st. On February 8th the Bishop left Thursday Island to visit the Torres Straits Islands; and after visiting the Western Islands of the Mission, he returned home for a couple of days on February 27th. The Bishop hoped to visit the rest of the islands of the Mission in March, after the Carpentarian had gone to press.

Mossman and Port Douglas.

The Bishop visited the parish of Mossman and Port Douglas in January. He arrived at Port Douglas by the "Kurandah" from Cooktown on Wednesday evening, January 15th, and was met on the wharf by the Rector of the parish, the Rev. E. Taffs. The next day he travelled by tram to Mossman, and in the evening was the guest of Mrs W. S. Johnston, of Drumsyne. Friday was taken up in visiting Church folk in the township, and in the evening the Bishop confirmed six candidates in S. Alban's Church. There was very heavy rain just before and during the service, yet there was a good congregation. Visiting outside the township filled up the Saturday, and in the evening the Bishop took a service of Preparation for Holy Communion and of Intercession for the Reunion of Christendom. The Octave of Intercession for Reunion asked for by the Conference of Faith and Order began that day. On Sunday, January 19th, the Bishop celebrated the Holy Communion at 7.30 a.m., with special intention for Reunion. It rained very heavily yet there were 38 Communicants, some of whom had come two miles through the pouring rain. It was a very beautiful and helpful service. The Bishop preached at Mattins and at Evensong on Reunion, and he also addressed the Sunday School children in the afternoon.

On Monday, accompanied by Mr and Mrs Taffs, the Bishop went to Port Douglas, and in the afternoon was driven by the Rector to visit Mr and Mrs Crees, some four miles out of the township. It rained in torrents during the drive and again at night, so there was no service, though we heard the next morning that a few people had braved the weather and were getting near the church when, a little after eight o'clock, Mr Taffs put out the lights. On the Tuesday morning the Bishop left Port Douglas for Cooktown.

Church matters in the Mossman parish are on the up grade. For the second year the parish decided on a free-will offering instead of a sale of work, and was justified by the result. Nearly all debts are paid, some of which had been due for payment for some time. The general account is still in debt to the Church building fund, and there is good prospect that this debt will also be cleared off this year. There will then be over £80 to the credit of the church building fund, and as the war is over the price of cement may allow building operations to be resumed. Mr Taffs is quietly preparing for the time when the church is completed. He has a class of boys to whom he is giving instruction in woodcarving, and they have finished one piece for the beam of a rood screen; he hopes that the screen will be the work of the class entirely. It is good to have boys brought up to give of their own labour to the beautifying of God's House. There are other than material signs of life in the parish of Mossman, and these are of greater importance than those, and account for them.

The Carpenterian

FOR THE DIOCESE OF CARPENTARIA,
NORTH AUSTRALIA.

Vol. XIX., No. 74. Thursday Island, April 1, 1919

The following article is a review, published in the English Guardian, of a book, a Study in Church Unity, written by the Rev. J. H. Shakespeare, one of the leading Baptists in England. In view of the importance of the subject, of the steadily increasing interest in it, and of the need for all Christians to learn how others think, especially those not of their own communion, the editor of the Carpentarian has thought it well to republish the article:—

Getting Ready for Reunion.

THE CHURCHES AT THE CROSS ROADS.

A Study in Church Unity. By J. H. SHAKESPEARE,
Williams & Norgate. 7s. 6d. nett.

This is a book which should do good service to the cause of religious reunion. It is written by a leading Nonconformist who has had exceptional opportunities of understanding the thought and temper which prevail in his own and other denominations, and who is whole-hearted in his desire to see Christianity made more effective in its application to the problems and needs of our modern world. He wins our confidence, if we may say so, by his outspoken loyalty to what he knows to have been good in the ideals of his own past. He has no doubt at all that Nonconformity has contributed most valuably to the maintenance and progress of true religion among us. It has stood for spirituality and for freedom. "Indeed freedom is a central and passionate idea of Nonconformity, freedom in every direction, in worship, ecclesiastical government, theological thought, freedom as the very air it breathes." He is convinced that "the Established Church would have been a grave spiritual danger in the absence of a powerful Nonconformity."

But the outstanding thought of his book is that a true loyalty to the past is not to be proved by a blind adherence to the old methods under entirely altered conditions. Speaking with affectionate pride of "the nameless heroes and quiet saints of the meeting-house," he says, "We shall honour them by fighting the good fight in our day as they did in theirs, and by being faithful to the light we have." Their witness for spirituality has borne fruit more widely than they ever imagined, and "the battle for the freedom of the Church in relation to the State in this country is as good as won." This being so, it is for Nonconformity seriously to reconsider how best it can now serve its generation according to the will of God. If it does this, it will be constrained to recognise a fact which, when it is recognised, must work what can only be described as a religious revolution. The fact is that, to put it plainly, the day for separateness is past. As to this Mr Shakespeare, the secretary of the Baptist Union, has no sort of uncertainty. After speaking of "that method of division which received its chief historic impulse from Puritanism," he does not hesitate to say that, in his opinion, "we have reached a stage when the gains do not outweigh the loss. So far as English religious life is concerned, the era of division has spent its force and lost its moral appeal." The reasons for this conclusion can only be realised by those who will read the candid analysis of the situation, and the carefully gathered statistics, which are here provided. The writer knows very well what he is talking about. And more, he is quite clear in his own mind as to the goal that ought to be earnestly, if patiently, pursued. No mere federation of the Nonconformist bodies can be accepted as the final solution, however much that proposal is to be welcomed as a step in the right direction. What is demanded is corporate reunion, and that of such a nature as will bring Nonconformity back again into union with the Mother Church. "The Catholic and the Puritan are complementary to each other. They need each other for full-orbed faith and order." "The greatest thing about the Catholic Church is that it has kept the faith."

Nothing could be more frank and courageous than the way in which the requirements of the whole position are set forth. "In my judgment, federation is not a practical method of union between Nonconformity and the English Church. There is no middle way between the present separation and corporate union." What this must involve is deliberately faced. "It is no use concealing my conviction that reunion will never come to pass except upon the basis of Episcopacy. I did not think so once, but that was simply because I did not understand it." No doubt there are conditions and qualifications that will have to be considered. The existing method of choosing Bishops is not such as commends itself to Free Churchmen, and when they return to us they will ask for large modifications of our present ideas of uniformity in the conduct of worship. "Every suggestion," moreover, "that Free Church ministers are to cast any doubt or suspicion upon their own ordination to the ministry must be expressly excluded." And further, "It is certain that there must be a striking historic act in which visible unity is achieved."

For all this the time is not yet, though the hands of the clock are steadily moving on, and it is for us all to labour in preparation for the striking of the appointed hour. "No one," says Mr Shakespeare, "could ever regard me as an indifferent Baptist. I plan and toil for the Church of my own faith, that when the grand festival of union comes she may be led to the Altar in radiant beauty, a bride whom anyone may be proud to have." That sentence well expresses the intention and exhibits the spirit of this volume. We cordially welcome it, and hope that it will be widely and sympathetically read.

Christ Church, Cooktown.

Needed repairs have been done to the rectory, and for the first time for many years an obstinate leak in the roof has not manifested itself this wet season. Many of the piles under the building needed renewal, and the consequent levelling up of the building without doubt closed the leak. More than enough money was raised for the repairs by free-will offerings; so there is some in hand for the future.

The Honour Board has been placed in position in the Church, but the names have not yet been placed on it, so the Bishop could not unveil it and dedicate it as it was hoped he would when he visited the parish in January.

The Bishop passed through on the way to Mossman; spent two days in the parish; during that time he baptized an adult and spoke at a welcome home to the soldiers at the Council Chambers. He was with us for a week on his return. Unfortunately he arrived just too late to be the celebrant at the Holy Communion on Wednesday, January 22nd, when there were special intercessions for Reunion, but he preached on that subject at Evensong, and again at Mattins and Evensong on the following Sunday. On Friday, January 24th, seven candidates, all adults, were confirmed. Once again we had the Bishop as one of the speakers at a welcome home to soldiers. We are glad to welcome back so many of our boys. Cooktown responded well to the call of the Empire, and some of those who volunteered at the beginning of the war have come home. Many, alas, we shall not see on earth again. We are not less proud of them than of those who have faced four years of danger with courage and distinction, and while we are glad to have them back, the mothers and fathers of others have our sympathy. A committee of Cooktown people sees to it that every soldier of the district is welcomed, and receives a memento and token of gratitude in the form of an illuminated address. Some of those who have cheerfully faced death have not the courage to face the expression of appreciation on the part of their friends.

In Memoriam

ANNIE SARAH CARTER SLADE.

We wish to express our sincere sympathy with the Sub-dean of the Cathedral in the great sorrow that has come into his life by the death of his wife.

Mrs. Slade had never been strong, and one or two serious operations when she was a young woman had left her delicate. Indeed, the belief that a warmer climate would be better for his wife's health was one of the considerations which helped the Sub-dean to accept the offer of work in Thursday Island. She had suffered so much from the cold in Victoria that a change promised improvement, and on the whole Mrs. Slade had better health during the two years she lived in Thursday Island than she had enjoyed in Victoria.

Christmas Day, 1918, was the last time Mrs. Slade was able to be in Church; she refused at first to lay up, but she had to do so early in the new year. For a week she was with Mrs. Newton at Bishop's House, and as there was no improvement in her condition then the doctor advised her removal to the hospital, where she was taken on Friday, January 10th. There she lingered for three weeks, and although everything possible was done by the doctor and nurses, she passed to her rest early in the morning of January 31st. Pneumonia had set in, and though there were hopes even till the last week of a recovery, the heart could not stand the strain. The Churchwardens of the Cathedral, fearing that the end might come before the Bishop returned from Cooktown, sent a launch out to Mabuag on the Wednesday before Mrs Slade died, to bring in Mr Done, an act of thoughtfulness for which the sub-dean, who did not know what was done, was very grateful. However, the Bishop arrived early in the morning of January 31st, and was able to take the funeral, assisted by the Rev. J. J. E. Done. The cathedral was filled at the service by a large and very reverent congregation made up of all sorts and conditions of people, who wished to shew their respect for Mrs Slade, and their sympathy with the Sub-dean. Those present will not soon forget the singing of "Rock of Ages" at the end of the service in the Cathedral. A very long procession, led by Mr Done carrying the cross, wended its way up the hill to the grave, which was nearly filled with crosses and wreaths when the coffin had been lowered.

On the following Sunday the Bishop said a few words expressing the sympathy of the congregation with the Sub-dean; and after service the organist played the Dead March.

Mrs Slade, because of her weak health, had not been able to take a very active part in the work of the Cathedral parish during the two years she had lived in it. Her life was perforce retired, but she did a good deal in a quiet way for the Mothers' Union, and for the Girls' Friendly Society, having charge of the candidates' branch, and of course she worked steadily for the Red Cross, but it was her cheerfulness in spite of ill-health, growing out of her quiet, steadfast faith in the unseen, that was her contribution to the life of the Church of God, a strengthening example to those who knew her. "Oh, well, never mind, it will all come right," was her philosophy, and that not from mere easy-going optimism, but from the certainty of her faith in God. In days of hurry and bustle, when most people want to see something doing, it is well to be reminded that there are other things less showy but not less important.

"They also serve who only stand and wait."

Mission Notes.

The Rev. J. J. E. and Mrs. Done, with their two children, returned from Sydney early in January by the "Changsha." They stayed in Thursday Island for a couple of days, and then went on to Mabuag by the "Herald."

The Rev. G. A. Luscombe, with Mrs. Luscombe and their children, should arrive in Thursday Island, on their return from furlough, at the end of March. Owing to the quarantine regulations, however, it is doubtful whether it will be possible for travellers from New South Wales to get berths for Queensland ports.

The College of S. Paul's, Moa, is closed at present for the vacation, which will be a little longer this year as the Warden is away on furlough.

We in the north are very anxious about pneumonic influenza, and are thankful that so far the State of Queensland has been kept free from infection. It would mean a very heavy mortality in the Torres Straits, and amongst the aborigines should it reach us. There are unofficial reports which tell of the terrible havoc influenza has caused in the East Indies.

The New Guinea Mission is badly in need of priests. There is no one to take up the work of Copland King at Ambasi. Menapi ought to be vacant, as the priest in charge, the Rev. J. Hunt, has been waiting for years to go inland for new work amongst the mountain tribes in from the head of Goodenough Bay. Priests are needed for Samarai and Port Moresby, centres of white settlement. There is no priest at Wamira, where there is a large number of Christians depending for the Sacraments upon the overworked priest at the head station, Dogura. The Bishop could find work, and most of it amongst native Christians, for five or six more priests. There are only seven white priests and one Papuan priest on the staff, so that the number should be nearly doubled, and there are plenty of openings for new work.

The spell of dry weather at the end of January and during the earlier part of February has interfered with planting work at the Mitchell, so that it is feared that the returns from the farm may not be as great as was hoped.

Mrs Cole, the Nurse on the Mitchell River Mission Staff, was very ill in December, 1918; and it was necessary for her to come to Thursday Island. On the way up the coast in the "Francis Pritt," she was so ill, that her husband was afraid she would not live through the voyage. Fortunately at Mapoon, where the party landed, relief was gained, and a rest there made it possible for the journey to be resumed.

We are grateful to Mr and Mrs Hey for their help and kindness. Early in January Mrs Cole went on to Brisbane, and the doctors there decided that first one and then a second operation would be necessary. The last news received is, that Mrs Cole is better; but it is not likely she will be able to return to the Mission before August.

The Rev. H. E. Warren, Superintendent of the Roper River Mission, is in Victoria on furlough. The Rev. R. D. Joynt is in charge of the Mission during the absence of the Superintendent.

The Australian Board of Missions is undertaking work amongst the Coolies in Fiji. Most of the labour on the sugar plantations comes from India. The conditions under which the Coolies live are not such as should be in a part of the British Empire, judging from reports that have been made, and the Church has a duty to these people which she dare not neglect.

The Australian Board of Missions is also to make a definite effort to help the Jerusalem and the East Mission. As our Australian Force has had such a large share in freeing Palestine from the yoke of the Turk, the Australian Church may well continue the work of liberation by bringing to the people a spiritual liberty and life. Our interest in Palestine has been awakened and deepened, so much help should be forthcoming for the newly-accepted obligations of the A.B.M. in that country.

The Rev. O. Oberlin Harris has been appointed Chaplain at Yarrabah, and was to take up his duties there on February 1st.

The Right Reverend Cecil Wood has resigned the See of Melanesia, and the resignation took effect at the end of the last year. Bishop Wood was consecrated in 1912, and was the fourth occupant of the See, not including the great Selwyn of New Zealand, whose Diocese included the Islands of the Pacific.

The Australian Board of Missions is organising three Lenten Offerings for 1919. This number of the Carpentarian will not be in the hands of some subscribers till nearly the end of Lent; however, in case any readers should not have heard of this effort, it is well to let them know.

The CHILDREN'S LENTEN OFFERING is an old friend, one who has grown from infancy to maturity in seven years. The first year the offering amounted to £30, last year—at seven years of age—it amounted to £1,250. Of course it will still grow bigger and bigger every year; the children will see to that. It is for general or special work as desired.

THE WOMEN'S LENTEN OFFERING, as in former years, is on behalf of the Medical Mission work of the Church. The Women's Auxiliary aims at £500, most of which would be used to enable a doctor to visit the Missions of the A.B.M. and advise and guide Missionaries in the treatment of the sick. Of course that is only a sort of stop-gap thing—the best we can do at present; but surely the Australian Church will do something more definite and worthy in the way of Medical Missions.

The third effort, THE MEN'S LENTEN OFFERING, is for a very prosaic business like object, but one which should appeal to men, and especially business men. It is to provide a Permanent Emergency Loan Fund of £3,000, and for this object nearly £1,000 is in hand. The people at headquarters need this fund. The income of the Board of Missions even if large enough, and it ought never to be that for the field is the world, comes in at irregular times, the bulk of it towards the end of the year. Churchwardens and other treasurers hold back contributions till there is something worth sending in, instead of remitting regularly every month, and if 1000 such do that it is evident there are months when the income is small, but the expenses are going on all the time and accounts have to be paid. A loan fund of £3,000 would enable the treasurer of A.B.M. to lend the various missions sums during the lean months to be repaid when the money comes in. At present it means getting accommodation from the bank, and that has to be paid for. The Board wants to do its own accommodating. The plan is such a sound business proposition, and so necessary to save worry that it must surely appeal to the business instincts of the ordinary layman. The Church is always being criticised for its unbusiness-like methods, so that when she does shew a business idea it ought to be converted into practical reality at once. If any reader of the Carpentarian has not made an offering to one or other of these—be the reader man, woman or child—when this copy is read, the neglect can be made good by sending a postal note to the Rev. F. W. Slade, the Vicarage, Thursday Island, and a slip with it to say to which offering the money is be credited; and the time for receiving such offerings should be not later than the end of May—the earlier the better.

Motor Car Fund.

The Treasurer of the Fund has sent a further cheque for £60 to the Diocesan Treasurer towards paying for the Motor Car. There is still a debt of about £40. It is hardly necessary to say that both the Treasurer of the Fund and the Diocesan Treasurer will be glad when the debt is paid off. Contributions should be sent to Mr F. Rigby, Bank of New South Wales, Normanton, Q.

Diocesan Accounts.

As is our custom, we publish the Annual Statement of Accounts in this, the April number of the Carpentarian, for the information of the Churchpeople in the Diocese, and of friends of the Diocese in other parts of Australia and in England. A comparison with the balance for the year 1917 with that for the year 1918, now published, shows that we are about £150 worse off this year than we were twelve months ago. This is not quite accurate, as the Australian Board of Missions held a little more than £100 for the Diocese, and as this money had not been paid to the Diocesan Treasurer, it could not appear as an asset. Even so we have used up nearly £50 of our reserves for current expenses, and that is a serious matter. The late Bishop carefully put by out of donations to the Diocese certain sums for special and emergency occasions, and these should be treated as capital, or at least used only for some special development work; they should not be used for the ordinary current expenses of the Diocese. The fact of the matter is that our income is decreasing, and the two sources which show a decrease are contributions from England and from Australia paid through the Australian Board of Missions. We have to face the possibility of the English contributions falling still lower, and we ought not to mind if they ceased altogether, for the Church in England has a big burden to carry, and Australia ought to be able to pay for all the work of the Church within the Commonwealth. The time should soon come when, instead of being a burden, we are a help to our Mother Church, relieving her of some of the obligations within the Empire, and in the Mission field outside.

The Carpentarian Association in England and the Australian Board of Missions raises money for the work amongst white people in the Diocese, and for various reasons there is not a single centre in the Diocese of Carpentaria which can do without outside help. Even the Cathedral parish has to receive a grant though that is chiefly for work amongst the coloured people in and about Thursday Island, and Darwin receives a grant to pay for visits to Pine Creek and along the railway. If we are to keep up the work, and the Clergy are to receive even the small, inadequate stipends they receive, we must have help from outside the diocese; and it is to Australia we look for it rather than from England. There are many people living down South who are drawing wealth from the Gulf and the Territory; there are many others who realise that the strong should help the weak—and the Diocese of Carpentaria is one of the weakest financially in Australia. We appeal to such as these for help. Donations can be sent through the Australian Board of Missions, 242 Pitt Street, Sydney, ear-marked for the Diocese of Carpentaria, or to the Diocesan Secretary, the Rev. F. W. Slade, the Vicarage, Thursday Island.

Besides the work amongst the white settlers to which the above remarks refer, the Diocese of Carpentaria is responsible for Missionary work on the Roper River, in the Northern Territory; on the Mitchell River, in the State of Queensland; and in the Torres Straits Islands. The Church Missionary Society of Australia takes the whole financial responsibility of the Roper River Mission, but depends for its income upon contributions from the faithful. Contributions for that work can be sent to the Secretary, C.M.S., Cathedral Buildings, Swanston Street, Melbourne, V.; and those who feel responsible for the spread of the Kingdom, and more especially amongst the aborigines of Australia, whether they live in the Diocese of Carpentaria or beyond, should help the C.M.S. in this work.

For the support of the Mission to the aborigines on the Mitchell, and for the work amongst the Torres Straits Islanders, the Diocese depends upon grants from the Australian Board of Missions and the Queensland Government in Australia; the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel, and the S. Andrew's Waterside Mission in England. The grants are never sufficient to do all that is needed. With the Mitchell we have cut our coat according to our cloth, and the coat does not cover. We cannot do anything like all that is waiting to be done. With regard to the Torres Straits Mission, we have got into debt, as the accounts, which will be published in the June number, will shew. We tried to run the Mission too cheaply.

Now we ought to be able to tell the two English Societies that Australia will raise the money needed for the Missions in the Diocese of Carpentaria; but that cannot be done unless the Australian Board of Missions gets a very great deal more help for work amongst the aborigines, and for the Torres Straits Mission. The Diocese of Carpentaria cannot raise the necessary money, though we might do far more than we do, but we would appeal to the friends of the Diocese in Australia to make a special effort to strengthen the funds of the Australian Board of Missions for work amongst the aborigines that we may transfer the support we receive from England for that work to A.B.M. At present the money given to A.B.M. for aboriginal work is ridiculously small, shamefully inadequate; our grants really come out of General Fund. These things ought not so to be.

The Bishop expects to leave Thursday Island for Darwin early in April, and to start on a long overland trip by the car early in May. All being well, he hopes to get as far South as Alice Springs, on the overland telegraph line, returning to Powell's Creek, and thence to the Barclay Tableland, and on to Burketown via Camooweal. He will spend some time in the Gulf, and hopes to get on to the Mitchell in September. If the whole trip can be managed, the Bishop will be away from Thursday Island for about six months. It is, of course, quite impossible to be sure of dates on such a trip. Many things may happen on the road.

SUBSCRIPTIONS TO "THE CARPENTARIAN."—Per the Rev. F. H. T. Lane: Mr S. Davies 10/-, Mrs S. Davies 2/6, Mrs Lauder 2/6; per the Rev. E. Taffs: Dr. H. P. Elliott 3/-; per the Rev. H. R. Longmore: Mrs A. Rains 2/6. Each 2/6: Mrs Zabel, Mrs Fergusson, Mrs Allen, Mrs Woodhead. Mrs. Norgate 3/-

Church of England High School for Girls HERBERTON.

Under the management of the Sisters of the Sacred Advent.

QUARTERLY FEES:

BOARDERS:			EXTRA SUBJECTS:
Tuition and Board	£15	15 0	Drawing	If both subjects are taken, the fee is 30/-	1 1 0
Laundry	1	1 0	Painting		1 1 0
DAY SCHOLARS	2	12 6	Woodcarving		1 1 0
EXTRA SUBJECTS:			Shorthand		12 6
Pianoforte	1	11 6	Bookkeeping		12 6
			Typewriting		12 6

There are a few bursaries available.
For further particulars apply to the Sister-in-charge, St. Anne's School, Townsville.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND

Day & Boarding School for Girls

"DALTON," WILLS STREET, TOWNSVILLE.

Conducted by the Sisters of the Sacred Advent, Brisbane.
Splendid Situation. Healthy Locality.

QUARTERLY FEES.

BOARDERS—		Tuition, Board and Laundry	...	£10	10 0
DAY SCHOLARS		2	2 0
EXTRA SUBJECTS—		Pianoforte	...	1	11 6
		Drawing	If both are taken, the fee is 30/-	1	1 0
		Painting		1	1 0
		Elocution	...	10	6
		Fancy Work	...	5	0

For further particulars, apply The Sisters, c/o Diocesan Registry, Townsville.
Correspondence invited

Diocese of Carpentaria—DIOCESAN CHURCH MANAGEMENT FUND.

Statement of Accounts for the Year ended 31st December, 1918.

EXPENDITURE.		£	s.	d.	RECEIPTS.		£	s.	d.
Walter & Eliza Hall Trust Grants—					Balance 1st January, 1918 ...		598	6	0
Parishes of Cooktown, Croydon, Mossman, each £50 ...		150	0	0	Subscriptions to the Diocese ...		13	19	0
"The Carpentarian": Printing and Postages... £45 5 8					Walter & Eliza Hall Trust Grants... ..		150	0	0
Less Subscriptions received... 23 16 3					Diocesan Fees		12	7	9
		21	9	5	Parochial Assessments		4	4	0
Religious Instruction in State Schools		1	10	0	Interest (Christ Church, Darwin)		17	10	0
Bishop's House Maintenance		18	14	4	Carpentarian Association Donations		140	0	0
Melanesian Work £42/15/1, less Contributions 9/-		42	6	1	Sundry Refunds (Quetta Churchwardens)		10	0	0
Carpentarian Association Donations, allotments—					Special Trusts—
Parish of Darwin £24 0 0					Christison Fund (£241/16/3 and interest,
Parish of Normanton 54 13 4					per Bishop of Carpentaria) £263 11 9
Quetta Churchwardens 20 0 0					S.P.G. Grants 100 6 0
"The Carpentarian" subscriptions 12 0 0					S.A.W.M. Grants 20 0 0
Clergy Travelling Expenses 24 12 0					Collected for Australian Board of Missions 86 18 8
		135	5	4	Christ Church, Darwin, Reduction of Debt 100 0 0
Payments to Clergy (Grants in aid of Insurance)		56	18	1	Bursaries... .. 50 0 0
Printing £6/2/6, less Contributions 7/-		5	15	6	Car 172 10 11
Postages, Telegrams, etc.		16	19	0	Offeratories and Donations for Special Purposes 483 15 4
Grants to Torres Straits Mission		46	10	0	Christison Legacy... .. 27 15 0
General Expenditure		48	9	8	Sundry Refunds 95 0 0
Special Trusts disbursed—					Loan from Mitchell River Cattle 150 0 0
S.P.G. Grants:							1549	17	8
Torres Straits Mission £12 10 0
Mitchell River Mission 87 16 0
		100	6	0
S.A.W.M. Grants:
Quetta Churchwardens 10 0 0
Mitchell R. Missions 10 0 0
		20	0	0
Australian Board of Missions 86 18 8
Car 286 3 5
Charles Hall 1 0 0
Christison Legacy 15 0 0
Sundry Disbursements 95 0 0
Offeratories and Donations for Special Purposes (including Morrison Fund for S. Paul's, Moa, £165/4/3) 347 1 3
		951	9	4
Held for Special Trusts, still unspent, included in complete statement of assets and liabilities at 31st December, 1918 598 8 4
		1549	17	8
Balance 31st December, 1918		402	9	4
		£2496	4	5			£2496	4	5

Assets and Liabilities at 31st December, 1918.

LIABILITIES.		£	s.	d.	ASSETS.		£	s.	d.
Charles Hall		81	12	4	Christ Church, Darwin		250	0	0
Bursaries		150	0	0	Stocks		175	0	0
Offeratories and Donations for Special Purposes (including Gertrude Robson Legacy £110) 136 14 1					Car, Balance of Advance for		113	12	6
Christison Fund 263 11 9					Q.N. Bank Current A/c		154	15	3
Loan from Mitchell River Cattle 150 0 0					Q.N. Bank Fixed Deposit A/c		503	14	9
Christison Legacy 12 15 0
Excess of Assets 402 9 4
		£1197	2	6			£1197	2	6

Diocese of Carpentaria—EMERGENCY FUND.

Balance 31st Dec., 1918, Deposit Q'land Government Savings Bank	£259 13 3	Balance 1st Jan., 1918, Deposit Q'land Government Savings Bank	£246 6 9
		Interest	13 6 6
	£259 13 3		£259 13 3

Examined and found correct,

E. J. HENNESSEY, Auditor, 28/1/19.

F. W. SLADE,

Hon. Diocesan Secretary.

1919.

Diocese of Carpentaria.

Bishop :

RT. REV. HENRY NEWTON, B.A.
Thursday Island, Queensland.

Sub-Dean :

REV. F. W. SLADE, B.A.

Diocesan Secretary :

REV. F. W. SLADE, B.A., Thursday Island.

Commissaries :

REV. FRER. PONSONBY, M.A., The Rectory, Devonport, England.
REV. J. JONES, M.A., 242 Pitt Street, Sydney.
REV. W. P. GLOVER, Th.L., Warwick, Q.
REV. J. W. ASHTON, St. Kilda, Melbourne, V.

Clergy :

REV. C. HALL, Th.L., Normanton (on leave).
REV. F. H. T. LANE, Darwin.

REV. C. W. LIGHT, Normanton.
REV. F. W. SLADE, B.A., Thursday Island.
REV. E. TAFES, Mossman.
REV. J. TWEEDIE, B.A., Cooktown.

Honorary Lay Readers :

MR. G. E. A. PATCHING, Cooktown
MR. D. A. ROBERTS, Darwin.

Diocesan Council :

REV. F. W. SLADE, B.A.	MR. GEO. CLARK.
REV. J. J. E. DONE.	MR. GILSON FOXTON.
REV. G. A. LUSCOMBE.	MR. A. SULLIVAN.

Honorary Legal Adviser :

HIS HONOUR JUDGE MACNAUGHTON.

Aboriginal Mission, Mitchell River :

REV. B. S. COLE (Chaplain).	MRS. COLE.
MR. J. W. CHAPMAN.	MRS. MATTHEWS.
REV. H. MATTHEWS, J.P.
(Supt.)
J. Geibo, T. Solomon, J. Savo.

Roper River Mission :

MR. DYER
REV. R. D. JOYNT.	MRS. DYER.
REV. H. E. D. WARREN
(Supt.)

Torres Straits Mission :

REV. J. J. E. DONE.	REV. W. H. MACFARLANE.
REV. G. A. LUSCOMBE.	MRS. LUSCOMBE. [Th.L.]
	Miss LUSCOMBE.

The Diocese.

The See was founded in 1900, and consists of such part of Queensland as is bounded by the sea on the north and east, by the Northern Territory on the west, and by a line drawn from lat. S. 19deg. 30min. on the western boundary of Queensland due east to par. 144deg. E. and thence N. to lat. S. 16deg. 40min. and thence east to the sea, together with the whole of the Northern Territory, comprising an area of not less than 620,000 square miles. The population, which is very widely scattered over this immense area, consists of about 10,000 whites, 5,000 Japanese, Chinese, and other aliens, and 35,000 aboriginals. The white population is mainly mining and pastoral. The See town is Thursday Island, a pearling centre north of Cape York.

Finance.

The Diocese has no endowments beyond the Bishop's income of £395 per annum. Every parish needs a grant from central funds which come from subscriptions to the Diocese, and grants from English Societies.

Missions.

Missions are carried on amongst the Japanese at Thursday Island; the South Sea Islanders; the aboriginals on the Mitchell and Roper Rivers; and among the Islanders of the Torres Straits.

Special Offertories.

On Easter Day the offertories are given to the Clergyman of the Parish, and on Good Friday to the Australian Board of Missions.

The "Church Standard."

Posted to any Address for 6s. 6d. per Annum.

The CHURCH STANDARD holds the unique position of being the only independent weekly paper published in the interests of the Church of England in Australasia.

Published every Friday Morning.

Appeals to all Members of the Church of England, Members of the C.E.M.S., Churchwardens, Sidesmen and Parochial Councillors, Sunday School Teachers, Lay Readers, Catechists, and Clergy.

Specimen Copies on application to

THE CHURCH PUBLISHING CO. LTD.,
ROYAL INSURANCE BUILDINGS, 16 SPRING STREET, SYDNEY.

Glennie Memorial School,

Church of England School for Girls

TOOWOOMBA.

PRINCIPAL

MISS LAWRENCE

(Assisted by a highly qualified Resident Staff).

The School is under the direction of
His Grace the Archbishop of Brisbane, and Council.

Thorough Education. Pupils prepared for University Examinations.

MUSIC AND LANGUAGE SPECIALITIES.

Pupils prepared for the Examinations of the Associated Board R.A.M., R.C.M.

The New Building, situated over 2000 feet above sea level in twelve acres of ground, has been constructed according to the most approved modern ideas. There is accommodation for fifty (50) boarders, and all the rooms are light and excellently ventilated. The health and comfort of pupils is specially studied.

THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND HIGH SCHOOL FOR GIRLS.

ST. MARGARET'S HOUSE, THE ALBION, BRISBANE
(ETON HIGH SCHOOL).

Under the Management of the Sisters of the Sacred Advent.

PRINCIPAL

THE SUPERIOR OF THE SACRED ADVENT.

Head Mistress: Miss J. M. LYON, LL.A.,
On London Register of Head Mistresses for Secondary Schools.

Pupils prepared for the Sydney University Examinations and for the Trinity College and Associated Board R.A. Exams.

TERMS FOR BOARDERS	-	-	-	UPPER SCHOOL, 10 GUINEAS
				LOWER " 8 "
TERMS FOR DAY PUPILS	-	-	-	UPPER SCHOOL, 2 GUINEAS
				LOWER " 1½ "

MUSIC, GERMAN, DANCING, PAINTING—1 GUINEA EXTRA.

For Prospectus, apply to Sister-in-Charge, St. Margaret's House; or to Church House, Ann Street, Brisbane.

ST. CATHARINE'S (Stanthorpe) HIGH SCHOOL FOR GIRLS

Under the Management of the Sisters of the Society of the Sacred Advent.

PRINCIPAL

THE SUPERIOR OF THE SACRED ADVENT.

Head Mistress: SISTER EVELYN, S.S.A.,
assisted by a Staff of Competent Teachers.

Pupils prepared for the Sydney University Examinations and for the Trinity College and Associated Board R.A. Exams.

The House is situated 2,500 feet above sea level, and is fitted with all modern improvements as a Boarding School for Girls.

Prospectus on application to the Sister-in-Charge, High School for Girls, Stanthorpe;
or to the Eton High School, Hamilton, Brisbane.

INTERCESSION PAPER

April, May, June, 1919.

THANKSGIVINGS.

LET US GIVE THANKS :—

1. For the blessings vouchsafed to the work in the Torres Straits.
2. For Confirmations at Mossman, Cooktown, and in the Islands.
3. For deepening and widening interest in the Reunion of Christendom.
4. For the work of the Rev. H. R. Longmore in the Croydon and Georgetown districts.

We thank Thee and bless Thee, O Lord.

INTERCESSIONS.

LET US PRAY :—

1. For all who have been confirmed.
2. For the work of the Torres Straits Mission.
3. For the work of the Mothers' Union and the Girls' Friendly Society.
4. For the vacant parishes, and that priests may be sent to the Diocese.
5. For the members of the Peace Conference, that they may be guided aright in all things.
6. For the Conference on Faith and Order, and wisdom for those responsible for organising the Conference.

We beseech Thee to hear us, good Lord

The Carpenterian

FOR THE DIOCESE OF CARPENTARIA, NORTH AUSTRALIA.

Vol. XIX.—No. 75.]

THURSDAY ISLAND, JULY 1, 1919.

PUBLISHED ON THE FIRST DAY OF EACH QUARTER.

[PRICE 2/6 A YEAR.

POST FREE.]

NOTICE.

All communications to be addressed to the Editor of The Carpenterian, Bishop's House, Thursday Island, to whom subscriptions may be sent. Subscription, 2/6 per annum, post free.

NOTICE TO CONTRIBUTORS.

All contributions of Parish News, etc., must reach the Editor before the last day of February, May, August, and November in each year.

Sara Newton.

All our readers will know by this time of the Bishop's sorrow. The whole heart of the Diocese goes out in sympathy for him, and not only the Diocese but very many elsewhere who have known him and Mrs Newton are now grieving with his grief.

Sara Newton was a native of Brisbane, the daughter of a stout old sea captain whose early life had been a school of hardness, and this may in part—only in part, for there was a deeper reason—explain the unruffled cheerfulness and courage with which she endured a lifelong experience of such hardships and disabilities as the comfortable Queensland citizen knows nothing of.

Her life may be divided up into three parts. There were the early days when she was a regular worshipper and worker of All Saints under three Rectors (Messrs Robinson, Pringle and Cardew), and was known to Canon Beasley, who was for a time Curate there. Then there was her life in New Guinea, whither she went as one of the original band who accompanied Bishop Stone-Wigg after his consecration in 1898: and then there was the third stage when in 1915 she tore herself away from New Guinea and undertook new and different responsibilities at the Bishop's House, Thursday Island. The first warning of the end came last year when a slight stroke shook her system and caused considerable anxiety to her friends. But she rallied from this, and it was in the hope of completely restoring her health that the Bishop persuaded her to go south to her relatives at the beginning of this year. But her heart was affected, and in spite of the happiness of the months spent with her family in the place of her birth, she steadily lost ground. By the beginning of July it was found necessary to summon the Bishop to break off his great journey in Central Australia and hurry to Brisbane. He arrived on July 11th in time to find her alive and satisfy her great desire to see him once more. She died without any suffering on Monday, July 14th.

Two things stand out. First her lifelong devotion to the service of others. For thirteen years she nursed a suffering mother. In New Guinea she gave her whole heart and mind to the care of the natives who soon learnt to find in her a mother, nurse and friend. Indeed, the atmosphere at the Mission House at Dogura was beautiful to see, for love and confidence marked all the relations between missionaries and people. Again, when the call came to Thursday Island, Mrs Newton shewed the same spirit in utterly different conditions. She saw what was wanted and supplied the need. Throughout her time the Bishop's house was not only a home for the Bishop but an attractive and comfortable resting place for all missionaries and workers in the Diocese: and she soon won the respect and affection of the people. The Mothers' Union and G.F.S. in Thursday Island owe much to her. But another striking characteristic reveals itself as we review her life and influence. Behind all the work she did was a genuine, sane and unpretentious love. Among the many features of the Mission Field which stir our faith is the growing capacity which many missionaries shew for loving their coloured flock. It seems as though God gives a special power of loving to those who obey His call to the mission field. Mrs Newton never spoilt her girls; she never made any show of sentimental affection; but it is not too much to say that her love for the girls and indeed for the people was the characteristic which most struck the visitor at Dogura. The break from New Guinea was a bitter grief to her and she never forgot her friends there. And it was the same in Thursday Island: first her sense of duty and then her genuine interest in the life and people there made her a power for good which it will not be easy to replace.

May God rest her soul and comfort him who in loneliness mourns her loss.

ST.C.B.

The Bishop's Movements.

During March the Bishop finished his visitation of the Torres Straits islands. He returned to Thursday Island on March 26th and remained there till April 15th, when he left for Darwin in the s.s. "Victoria." While in Thursday Island the Bishop presided at a meeting of the Diocesan Council, confirmed one candidate in the Cathedral, addressed a public meeting to welcome home returned soldiers, and held an informal conference with the priests of the Torres Straits Mission on the work of the Church in the Islands. Unfortunately, owing to delays due to quarantine regulations, Mr Luscombe was not present at the conference.

The Bishop arrived in Darwin early on the morning of Good Friday, when the steamer anchored out in the stream waiting for the doctor who came on board about 9 o'clock. There was first a careful examination of the passengers and crew, and the order was given that all were to go into quarantine. There were stud bulls and horses on board and arrangements had to be made for landing these, so it was after dark when the passengers were landed—some thirty of them—at the quarantine station. On Easter Sunday, while in quarantine, the Bishop held three services, a celebration of Holy Communion at 7 a.m., Mattins and Evensong. There was a plentiful supply of books and the week passed off much more comfortably than was expected. Most of the passengers were able to be released on Friday, April 25th, and arrangements were made for a launch to go over early in the morning for the Bishop, who was thus able to celebrate and preach at the ten o'clock service on Anzac Day in Christ Church, Darwin. The Bishop remained in Darwin for ten days; he preached at the morning and evening services, and celebrated on Sundays April 27th and May 4th, and presided at the annual meeting of parishioners on May 1st. He also preached at the 10 a.m. service on H.M.A.S. "Melbourne" on Sunday, May 4th. On May 5th the Bishop left Darwin for Pine Creek, where he spent Sunday, May 11th, going on to the Katherine on Tuesday, May 13th, to start on the overland journey to Alice Springs, and then to Camowael and the Gulf.

The accounts of the Torres Straits Mission which are published in this issue of the Carpenterian, show a deficit of over £400. The Australian Board of Missions has given the Mission a special grant of £350 towards defraying this debt, and has also increased the grant for this year. Some friends in New South Wales gave the Rev. G. A. Luscombe donations towards the debt. So it is hoped that the accounts will be square at the end of this year. As the A.B.M. has made this special grant, we feel that we ought to urge our readers and others interested in the Diocese of Carpentaria, to send some special donations to the General Fund of the A.B.M., either through the diocesan channels, or direct to the Treasurer, 242 Pitt Street, Sydney.

The Walter and Eliza Hall Trust has kindly given an additional grant to the diocese of £150. This is a special grant, and is not likely to be available another year. The Diocesan Council will allocate the money about October. The grant was received by the Bishop just before he left Thursday Island for Darwin.

Will surrogates and others please remember that the fifth year of the Bishop's episcopate begins on September 21st, 1919.

The Carpentarian

FOR THE DIOCESE OF CARPENTARIA,
NORTH AUSTRALIA.

Vol. XIX., No. 75. Thursday Island, July 1, 1919

Bishop's Visit to the Northern Territory and to the Gulf.

I arrived from Pine Creek, at the head of the Railway Line, from Darwin on Tuesday, May 13th. It had been a slow run by the train—about 60 miles—and it took over four hours to do it, but we had to stop and unload sleepers on the way. It seems that, although the line has not been opened two years, 3,000 sleepers have to be replaced, owing to the damage done by white ants. Apparently, the sleepers that had been "Powellised" have withstood the ravages of these pests, those not so treated have had a very short life. This experience of the Railway Department shews one of the difficulties under which people in the Territory live. The little beasts eat everything, and when you are looking forward to getting some return from fruit trees, you find the white ants are in them, and all your labour has gone for nothing—and there are few timbers they will not attack.

I visited the people at the Katherine Rail-head. Emugallan, the Station is called, to distinguish it from the telegraph station, about three miles away on the other side of the river, one of the stations on the overland telegraph line from Darwin to Adelaide. In the evening we had service in the waiting-room at the Railway Station, and I had suggested that people bring hurricane lamps with them to the service, as the only way of lighting the waiting-room. Many folk had promised to come to the service, but very few kept their word. I was the guest of Mrs. Osborne, at the station-master's house; and on the Wednesday morning I was able to give Mrs. Osborne her Communion, the first opportunity she had had for years.

Unfortunately, Mr. Edmondson, the mechanic who came with me on the overland journey last year, and who had agreed to come again this year, had been down with fever a good deal during the fortnight he had been at Emugallan, and he had not been able to do as much to the car as he had hoped to do. However, she seemed to be in good order when we left the Railhead on Wednesday morning about 9 a.m.; but we had not gone a mile on the road before a piece of welding, done by the local blacksmith to the support of the rear running-board, broke.

Our first trouble was to cross the Katherine River, about two miles from the Railway. The season had been abnormal, and though, by the end of April, the river is very low, she had been a-swim then, and we could not cross with the car in more than about twenty inches of water. Many and varied were the opinions as to whether we should get over. Some said it was impossible, some we might, some we could get across. The only thing was to get there and see, and when we did get there, the prospect was not encouraging. The mechanic waded nearly across to test the depth; a half-caste rode down from the old hotel on the top of the bank on the other side and rode through—it would be touch-and-go for us.

Mr. McEddie, who has lived at the old hotel for years and knows the vagaries of the Katherine as well as anybody, came down to the water's edge to direct us across. We covered up the carburettor with chamois leather, to keep water out, hoping the car would work when so choked—and she did till we were in the middle of the river, and then she stopped. By that time we felt sure we could manage, and so the chamois was taken off; the engine started, and we rushed her through with only a cough or two to send the splashes of water out off the carburettor.

That day we ran down the Katherine about nine miles to Munballoo, which will probably be in the course of time the head depôt for Vestey's cattle station, and the main depôt for the cattle to be trucked to the works in Darwin. At present it is decidedly primitive, but there is a good forge and a good blacksmith, so we were able to get a good job made of our running board. We had service in the evening and a celebration of Holy Communion the next morning.

On Thursday, May 15th, we ran back to the Katherine, called at three houses, picked up mail for people down the line, and made our real start on the overland journey about mid-day. That afternoon we arrived at Maranboy, a tin-mining centre, and on the road dropped one of our water-bags—the first of a series of mischances. We had travelled 39 miles from the Katherine in about three hours, so the car was apparently doing very well.

I visited as many of the people at Maranboy as I could, but we had not much time to spare, for we were already a week late in starting, and there is little hope of saving time on such a trip—one wants to have a little in hand. In the evening we had service, when there was a nice little congregation; nearly everyone who could be present had turned up. At Maranboy there is a Government hospital, staffed by a nurse provided by the Presbyterian Inland Mission, with a companion to break the loneliness for the nurse. The two at present in the hospital are sisters from the Murray River district, in the south of New South Wales, and they have been in Maranboy about nine months. The nurses have done very good work and have been a great comfort to the miners. There is a good deal of fever at times at Maranboy.

About the end of April there was a very serious accident at the battery. In some way a man had his thigh broken and a deep wound inflicted. The nearest doctor was in Darwin, and to get the injured man there it was necessary to take him 43 miles to the Railhead and then 200 miles by train. Nurse Moritz set the thigh and did all she could to the patient, and then set off by road with him for the hospital. The journey to the railway took part of three days, two nights camping out. Where the road was good the man was taken in a cart, where it was rough the jolting and jarring was so severe that he had to be carried on a stretcher. Of course the policeman at Maranboy, and some of the miners with a number of black boys, went with the party and acted as carriers. You have only to go to the bush to find everyone ready to do all he can to help a man in trouble, especially one who has met with an accident—no trouble incurred, no time lost, is of any account. But these men were used to such travelling. When the party got to the river she was in flood, and they had to cross in a boat near the railway. Fortunately the Commissioner of Railways was on a tour of inspection of the line, and there was a special train waiting. It had been possible to get into touch with the Commissioner by telephone from Maranboy to the Katherine. The patient, in spite of his experiences, was doing well in the Darwin Hospital, and Nurse Moritz returned to Maranboy. When we arrived she was down with rather a nasty attack of fever herself, but fortunately there were no other patients in the hospital.

The incident shows what people may have to put up with in the Never Never; what fine work the nurses are ready to do; and how important it is that there should be more medical attendance available for those who go out as pioneers. In the whole of the Northern Territory there is only one doctor, the man in Darwin. He has to do the hospital work, the private practice amongst over 2000 people, and the quarantine work, so what hope is there of his being able to attend to the needs of country people unless patients are brought to him.

Surely if the Government wish to see the country settled they should consider the needs of outside people. How can it be expected that wives and children will be taken where there is no chance of medical attendance. If a doctor were stationed at the head of the line, given a motor car, and allowed to use the railway with a tricycle, he would be available during the greater part of the year for calls from a big radius. There are not at present many people, and there would not be much private practice, so that the doctor would have to receive a stipend from the Government.

On Friday, May 16th, we left Maranboy for Mataranka, and had the misfortune to drop one of my bags on the road, and that the one with all the warm clothes I expected to require when we got inland. We went back five miles to look for the bag and met some black boys coming with packs, and as they had seen nothing of it we decided to let it go. The real trouble was that we were afraid of using up petrol, as we expected to be short at our depôts. That day we passed a man with a mob of 100 donkeys and mules. He had brought them all the way from Oodnadatta by himself. We also passed teams with wool from Mataranka.

The car on this day began to give some trouble. There was an ominous knock once or twice, but it left her, and we hoped all was well. Fifty-three miles was the run for the day, including ten looking for the lost bag. Mr Palmer, the manager of Mataranka, kindly sent a boy to look for the bag, and we thought we might get it before we went on from Elsie Station, but it was not to be. The bag has been found, and I expect to get it along the line on our return. We had news of its being picked up over the wire.

On Saturday we ran on to Elsie Station—McMinnis Bar—19 miles from Mataranka on the road to the Roper, and we were there by mid-day. I intended staying at Elsie over Sunday, but we found everyone away except the Chinamen cook and carpenter, and Mr and Mrs Shadforth would not be back for at least a week, so we decided to go back to Mataranka and on down the overland telegraph line as far as Mr Gorey's camp, near the old Elsie Station. That meant our doing about 56 miles in the day, and we did it before dark in spite of stoppages. This was the longest run we had done so far, and before we got to the camp we found we had a bad knock in the engine. There was nothing else to be done but to look for the fault, and the mechanic found two bearings gone. That meant we could not get started again till Monday afternoon, when we hoped to get as far as No. 2 Well, where there is a wind-mill, but that was not to be. We had travelled about 10 miles when the knock was worse than ever, and we decided to run back to the Warlock Ponds, do repairs and camp. Before we had gone so far we had to stop. There was about two and a-half hours' daylight, and in that time Mr Edmondson had got out the bearing and put in another. This burning out of bearings was very mysterious, and thinking there might be something in the engine we drained all the oil away.

It was just dark when we started again, and we wanted to get to water, though we had enough for a dry camp, and to run the engine for some time. The trouble was to find the ponds in the dark; they are nearly a quarter of a mile from the road. We ran along till we thought we were opposite them, and I went off exploring, but found no water. On for a little way, parallel to the road, with no better success. I went back to the car, and we went further along, and again I went exploring, and this time I managed to strike them; it was a miserable business, struggling through the long cane grass in the dark. We had trouble finding wood for a fire, but managed to get some; boiled our billy, had our tea, and then turned in for the night.

Next day, Tuesday, May 20th, we made an early start and did well for twenty-seven miles to the first bore. The windmill at this bore is out of action, but we had plenty of water to carry us on; but travellers have camped at the water-hole, a little away from the bore, so we had trouble in finding the road. We searched about and at last struck one with wheel-tracks and followed it. Unfortunately, it was not the right one, but it led us to the telegraph line, along which there is traffic in the wet season, as the line keeps to the higher ground. We did not care to go back, and we expected to find the road crossing the line a mile or two further on—so we followed the line. The further we went, the more we hoped to get the road, and the less we were inclined to turn back; but, if only we had known that we should have to do twenty-two miles on the line! It was terrible; high grass, stumps, ant-beds, and boulders at every little rise, with an occasional hole to drop into. We got through, but it was a dreary business, the line stretched on and on ahead, apparently never ending—monotonous. We could only travel about four miles an hour, and were nearly all the time on low gear. We had passed the second bore before we struck the road, which, with what the Yankees call the eternal cussedness of things, ran along the line, crossing it again and again—frequently for miles—when once we had the relief of getting on to it! We made the third bore before dark and camped, and had covered about 62 miles. Had we been on the road, we should have been at Daly Waters that night. As it was, we camped at the Ironstone Bore.

On Wednesday morning we found it difficult to start the engine, but we got going at last—but only for half-a-mile—when again a knock, knock, knock warned us something was wrong. Get out and get under was the only thing, and then we found another bearing gone. Four bearings in about 250 miles was aggravating. By mid-day we were ready for the road again, and all went well till we got near Daly Waters—32 miles—when again there was a knock, though not a serious one. We ran on to the Station, and decided on a thorough overhaul, and to clean the engine. When the engine was taken down, it was found a bearing was just saved. It took three days to overhaul everything, and new bearings had to be moulded on to the connecting-rods; some were burnt out completely. We could not afford to throw more oil away, but what was in the engine we strained. They were strenuous days for Mr Edmondson, though he was fortunate in finding a good forge at the Daly Waters Telegraph Station.

We did not leave Daly Waters till Tuesday, May 27th, as it took us all day Monday to mould the bearings; and it was a late start, 10.30 a.m., for a long run of 90 miles to Newcastle Waters; so late indeed that we did not get through, though another half-hour of daylight would have been sufficient. The engine worked splendidly and we had covered 82 miles to North Newcastle, including 14 miles of Stent's Plain, a very bumpy, lumpy piece of road, by a little after six o'clock in the evening. At North Newcastle we found little streams running into the lagoon, and they looked very boggy, so we decided to head them, which meant going bush over very bumpy ground. That lost us time and when we had gone another two miles or so it was dark, and as our sparking plugs were asking for a little attention, and we could not see well enough to avoid stumps and antbeds we decided to camp, though the station was only six miles off.

On Wednesday, May 28th, we made an early start. It was hard work starting the engine after the cold windy night, and about two miles from the station we had our first puncture on the trip. Everyone was away from Newcastle except the Chinaman cook, who gave us breakfast and some tucker for the road. We had to pick up petrol and oil and of course the car wanted something done to her. It is well to fix the gender of a car as feminine, for it needs a lot of attention and is a contrary creature—uncertain, coy and hard to please. However, we got away at 12.30 p.m., taking with us mails we had brought for the manager, Mr Burkett, whom we should find, the cook said, 26 miles on at the South Newcastle yards. Nine miles from Newcastle we met a teamster coming across from Queensland to the Katherine, with a very big wagon, empty, but fit to carry 20 tons of loading, seven inch tyres, and the back wheels seven feet high. The party was camped at a lagoon, and as they had come across from Anthony's lagoon, the way we want to go back, I was anxious to make enquiries about the road. Strange to say three years ago in June I met the same teamster coming across with an empty wagon when I was driving to the Roper. Unfortunately Mr Bone was away looking for goats; he travels with a flock of goats and other luxuries. We had lunch at the camp and waited about three-quarters of an hour, and then had to come away without my being able to renew my acquaintance with Mr Bone, but we had a long way to go and time was passing. Eleven miles further on we came to where Mr and Mrs Rogers were camped. They were travelling with a mob of cattle, and I had mail for them. At the South Newcastle yards we found Mr Burkett with a number of aboriginals, the finest specimens of the race I have seen, busy branding. We gave him his mail and then went on. We were now on a road we had not been over before, as Newcastle Waters was our limit south last year. The country becomes a little more ridgy south of Newcastle Waters, but on the whole the road was good to Powell's Creek, where we arrived just after dark. It so happened that one of the Daly Waters staff was at Powell's Creek to take delivery of cattle for the Daly Waters Telegraph Station, and another man from south was there also giving delivery, so we had a congregation of five at the service that night.

Some years ago every telegraph station on the overland line had its own herd to supply the staff with beef, but at Daly Waters the water gives out rather early in the season and the cattle had to be watered at one of the wells. When the Territory Government took over the wells a charge was made for watering stock, and the Telegraph Department sold the Daly Waters herd. Of course if the wet season is not a good one all the telegraph stations that have stock must water the herd from wells. The biggest herd is at Tennant's Creek, and it supplies the beef, or some of it, as far as Daly Waters to the north and Alice Springs to the south. The Territory is a dry country for stock—very few of the surface waters last through the long dry season, and the cattle stations need wells or bores to water the stock for some weeks before the wet season begins. Fortunately in the centre and north, sub-artesian water is to be got at anything up to about 300 feet, but that means pumping. The two bores just north of Daly Waters—Rodericks and the Ironstone—were tested just before we passed by, and they gave a flow of 21,000 and 31,000 gallons a day. Nothing like the artesian flow, of course, but still a good supply. Unfortunately one-half of the bores along the road north of Newcastle Waters are out of action. They are pumped by windmills.

We left Powell's Creek on Thursday about eleven o'clock in the morning, intending to do a short run of 30 miles to Helen's Springs, where there is a small station. Twenty miles from Powell's Creek we came to Renner's Springs, where we had lunch, and as this is the place where we are to leave the road to go across to Anthony's Lagoon on our way back, we wished to make sure of Mr Bone's wagon tracks in case travelling stock obliterated them. We are depending on the wagon track as our guide across the Downs, where there is little traffic. Unfortunately we missed the turn-off to Helen's Springs, and had gone so far before we discovered this that we decided, late as it was, to go on to Bauka Bauka, a cattle station. We thought the plainest road led to Helen's Springs, and probably when we were in the bush and grass, dodging washaways or sand, we missed the other road. We got to Bauka Bauka just after dark, having covered 60 miles, and spent a good deal of time on the road. Unfortunately I had mail for Mrs Bohning at Helen's Springs, but Mr Ambrose, one of the brothers who owns Bauka Bauka, promised to send a black boy with it the next day. We were delivering mail that had left Sydney on May 1st—probably in record time for this part of the world. Whereas they get their mails every six weeks, these are sometimes eleven weeks' old when they arrive.

We left Bauka Bauka at eleven o'clock on Friday, May 29th, taking with us a bottle of butter for one of the residents at Alice Springs. They make beautiful butter at Bauka Bauka. We had tasted and enjoyed it at Powell's Creek. They have also a very fine vegetable garden. As a matter of fact we were all ready to start at Bauka Bauka at nine o'clock that morning but there was something wrong, and we were delayed two hours putting it right—and we were to be sorry for the delay before the day was done. It is 60 miles from Bauka Bauka to Tennant's Creek, and we thought we had plenty of time, but the road is awful, the worst we had struck. There is very little wheel traffic on it. The loading as far as Newcastle comes by camels from Oodnadatta. There are miles of sand of the heaviest kind, washouts, holes and ant beds, several bad creeks and some stony ground.

None of the creeks stuck us up; we never had to unload the car, and on very few occasions had I to get out; but it was slow travelling and heavy work for the engine. To add to our troubles, we had two punctures, which delayed us half an hour, so when it became dark, we were still six miles from Tennant's Creek. We went on in the dark for another three miles, but something went wrong. We could not see the road properly, so after bumping one or two ant-beds, we decided to make a dry camp—three miles from comfortable quarters at Tennant's Creek Telegraph Station! It was a great difficulty to find firewood in the dark, but we got a little, started a fire, and then set clumps of spinifex alight, which gave us a good light sufficient to enable me to cut down two small dead gum trees I found, and then we had enough wood to last the night. We had brought enough tucker to last two meals; foolishly, I had refused more at Bauka Bauka, so we had a good tea and a poor prospect for breakfast!!

It is cold camping out on the plains at this time of the year, especially if the south-east wind keeps up all night. We made a breakwind with our calico cover for the car, and kept a good fire going all night.

On Saturday, May 31st, we were early at work. I made a breakfast off some tinned meat I heated up in the tin, but Mr Edmondson preferred to be content with tea only. We had to take out some of our cylinders, as there had been a knock the evening before, and we were running no risk—but all our bearings were good. We scraped a little carbon off the cylinders but did nothing else, and could find no cause for the knock. We were camped on a sandy plain, with a strong south-east wind blowing, and sand everywhere; so, before we began work, we had to screen the car carefully to keep sand out of the engine, and to cover the oil we had drained out of the crank-case. It was a case of doing repairs under difficulties. By mid-day the car was going again without any knocking, and we ran in without trouble to Tennant's Creek in about twenty minutes! There we stayed the day; and of course, Mr Edmondson was under the car as soon as we had had lunch, making sure and certain everything was right.

At Tennant's Creek we heard that the pioneer survey party for the aerial service had reached Newcastle Waters on Friday, May 30th. We had been hoping to meet them on the road, especially as Mr Edmondson had been in communication with them by telephone from Normanton to Cloncurry at the end of March. A telegram had been sent to me at Normanton by the leader of the party, asking for particulars about the road, and as I was not there, the postmaster at Normanton received instructions to give the wire to Mr Edmondson, and he got into telephone communication with them.

We spent Sunday, June 1st, at Tennant's Creek and made an early start on Monday morning. The road was good for some distance but then got rough with long grass in places. We had done about 50 miles by mid-day and then hit an ant bed, the first we had not missed, and he was a big one. It could not well have been avoided as we were on a small clay flat in long grass some seven feet high. On the left we suddenly came on a deep wash-away and to avoid that hit the ant bed hidden in the grass. For a minute we thought the axle was broken, and were relieved to find the only damage was bent radius rods. We decided to have lunch and straighten things out, and after three hours work were going again as good as ever, but the day was spoilt, and when we had gone another 14 miles we decided on a dry camp at sundown a couple of miles from Bonny's Well. We had passed a camel team, the first we had seen, about a quarter of an hour before we camped.

We made an early start on Tuesday morning and got to the Wickliffe Well by mid-day. The road had been heavy, miles of sand and a big sand hill. We tried going straight over it but only got halfway up. Then Mr Edmondson backed to the bottom and taking to the bush got right over without a stop while I walked wearily on through the sand for half a mile. At Wickliffe Well we found a woman and two children living; the husband and only son were away. It is as dreary an existence as one could imagine for a woman and children, but Mrs Crook, who has only been out from England ten years, is as bright and cheerful as possible. Just fancy the change from the fields and lanes of the west of England to the dry, dusty centre of Australia. Mrs Crook gave us lunch and the mechanic found he had to sweat in some solder to a small hole in the crank case where we were losing oil. The car was carefully covered round to keep off the wind and with a blow lamp Mr Edmondson did a very neat piece of work cleverly. We went on in the afternoon hoping to get to Taylor's Well but heavy sand made the going slow, and we made a dry camp again, having travelled 51 miles.

Thirteen miles the next morning brought us to Taylor's Crossing, a long sandy creek, part of which we had to corduroy with bushes, and the gum trees showed some one else had done the same thing a few years earlier. We arrived at Barron Creek about mid-day, having come 39 miles.

At Barron we found the petrol was less than we expected, and we had to get the telegraph to work to find out what there was at Alice Springs; we heard it was short there, too, from leakage. We were afraid we had not enough to take us the 168 miles and back, but we were not going to be beaten so near the end. We wired to a station at Horseshoe Bend, where there is a car, and asked if they could send some to Alice Springs by the mailman, but the manager was away. Then we wired to the sergeant of police at Alice asking him if he could meet us with a trap at Birt's Well on Saturday morning. This would save 70 miles on the double journey, and we knew we could manage that. It was two o'clock on Thursday before we got things fixed up, and then a quick run took us to Stirling Station, 22 miles from Barron Creek. We had now 129 miles to do by morning, the time we had arranged to meet Sergeant Stott at Birt's Well, but we heard the road was good and we had every hope of keeping our appointment. We left Stirling at nine o'clock on the Friday morning, taking with us a guide—an aboriginal—to shew us a way to avoid two big sandhills. We were running across country to get to the road, and when a mile and a-half on the way we hit a small stump hidden in the grass bang in the middle of our front axle. It was badly bent, and the only thing to be done was to go back to the station and straighten things out. That took us till two o'clock, and after having lunch we made a fresh start. Our guide shewed us a road clear of sand but bumpy, over some dry swamps, and left us at Hansen's Well. We started bowling along over a good road, but had not gone far before we ran to a creek with a wide sandy crossing. That delayed us for a time, but the great anxiety was using up petrol. To save as much as we could we got out a long rope and tried to pull the car with a Spanish windlass, but all we did was to break the rope, so we had to get back to her own power, and when the low gear band had been tightened up we ran through. Another 17 miles took us to Bullocky Soak at sundown, where we found a camel team camped. We were debating as to whether we should fill up our bags and jar with water and get on a few miles further, when pop went one of our tyres like a pistol shot. The aboriginal in charge of the camel team, who was standing near by, jumped, and we decided the question was settled for us. We had 104 miles to go yet and no hope of meeting the sergeant at the time appointed. However, we knew that bushmen understand that motor cars are not absolutely reliable, and that we might be expected to be late, so we did not worry on our own account.

On Saturday we made an early start at 7.30 a.m.; passed a mob of cattle on the road. They were to my surprise not much disturbed, though we went through them. At Tea Tree Well we found the repair party for the telegraph line for whom we had mail, but we did not stay long with them. The long sandy crossing at the Woodford gave us some trouble, but on the whole the road was good and we were at Ryan's Well before one o'clock. Mr Wicker gave us some lunch, and we were on the road again before half-past one, with about 42 miles still to do before we got to Birt's Well, but the road was good, and we travelled well. A few minutes were spent at Conner's Well for water. We passed the mailman going north, and pulled up to talk to him for a few minutes, and another man, who is in charge of the wells along the road and who told us the sergeant was waiting for us. By twenty minutes past four we were at our rendezvous, and we had barely passed greetings when we had sounded our tank, and found we had enough petrol to take us on. We had averaged 22 miles to the gallon from Barron Creek; we had reckoned on 15. I asked the sergeant if he could trust the boy to bring in the buggy, and when he said yes, I said then we were going on and taking you with us. The sergeant demurred, he did not think we had time to get through before dark, and the last nine miles of the thirty-five were very rough in the mountains and the Wiggly Gorge. There was no time to argue the point; we took off part of our load and left it for the buggy to bring on, and in the rush our tucker bag was left, though no one noticed it at the time. By half-past four we were going again with 20 miles of good road in front of us, and Mr Edmondson got the car up to 35 miles at one time. We were just getting to the MacDonald Ranges when pop went a tube. The pace had been too hot for one of our patches. There was no time to be lost, so we put in a new tube and went on. A little further on a bump over a stone sent the sergeant's hat flying, much to his disgust, as every minute of daylight was of value. We were over the roughest of the road by dusk, but still had the Wiggly Gorge and two long sandy crossings of the Todd to negotiate. Fortunately the road through the Gorge has been done up, and the sergeant knew every twist and turn, so he was able to guide us, and there was a little moon, but some shadows. Up and down we went, and in and out, now running along the sandy bed of a creek, now over a steep rise, and round sharp corners. Two or three times we two had to get out where sand was heavy, as we did not want to risk a stoppage. We were past the telegraph station by a quarter to seven, but we did not stop, though I had a mail bag, for just in front was a long sandy crossing of the Todd. We passengers walked over and the car ran through without trouble, then on a couple of miles to the next crossing, where we stopped in the middle, but three or four aborigines were on hand; their pushing got us right through, and we were at the police station by seven o'clock. We had travelled 136 miles in the day, the last nine miles over a rough, heavy road, and the car ran splendidly.

A very warm welcome awaited us at Alice Springs with all the hearty hospitality one finds, especially in the Australian bush. Mrs Stott could not do enough for us—in her opinion. We thought differently.

On Sunday we had service in the schoolroom. It was Whit Sunday, but things had been too uncertain to arrange for services till our arrival. We had a celebration of Holy Communion on Monday morning, and again on Thursday morning, as well as Evensong on Thursday night. I visited the folk up at the Telegraph Station, two miles north to the old Police Station, two miles south, just past the Heavy-tree Gap; and during the week I gave the half-caste children lessons in the school. Mr Edmondson was busy on the car.

Alice Springs is a small settlement, beautifully situated between the Macdonald Ranges, in a long narrow valley. After the rains, it must be one of the most beautiful spots in Australia. Good fresh water is found at a shallow depth, and the southern side of the valley is covered with saltbush.

There is a settlement of half-caste children (38) in the hostel. Mrs Standley, the Government teacher, takes the white children in the mornings and the half-caste children in the afternoons; 35 of them come to school. There are 8 or 9 white children in the school.

We hope to leave on the return journey on Friday, and I have to apologise for this issue of The Carpentarian being late. Unfortunately I missed the Adelaide mail by four days, so this story of our trip cannot get to the printer till the end of the first week in July.

To be continued.

Christ Church, Darwin.

The Rev. F. H. T. Lane having resigned the position of Priest-in-charge of Darwin, left by the "Changsha" with Mrs Lane and their son on May 4th for Thursday Island. There is at present no prospect of a priest being found for the parish. The Bishop has been trying for seven months to find a man but without success. Darwin is an important place and it will be a great pity if the parish is left vacant for a lengthy period. Mr Lane took charge of the parish at the urgent request of the Bishop in January, 1917, when the Rector, the Rev. C. H. Massey, was appointed Chaplain at Rabaul, and he has done very faithful work for over two years, waiting long after he should have been relieved in the hope that a Rector would be found, when Mr Massey could not return. The work in Darwin is in many ways very difficult, but there is a fine field and magnificent opportunities for a priest who is not afraid of work and has faith and devotion to overcome difficulties. Fortunately there are two loyal lay-readers in the parish who will see to it that the Sunday services are held regularly.

At the annual meeting held in the Vestry on May 1st, the usual business was transacted. The Wardens and the members of the Parish Council were elected. The accounts showed that while there is still a debt on the Church funds, the debt has been increased during the year only by so much as the cost of installing the Gloria light. The Wardens have always been careful that the Rector's Stipend be paid regularly whatever else had to wait. During the year £100 was paid off the debt to the Diocese for a loan to the Rectory Building Fund, as well as the interest on the loan for the year.

The Sunday School picnic was held on Saturday, April 26th, when a large number of children with many adults had an enjoyable day on the beach some four miles out of town, an ideal spot for such an outing.

On Anzac Day, the festival of St. Mark, there were celebrations of the Holy Communion at 7.30 a.m. and at 10 a.m. The soldiers were present at the 10 o'clock service, when the Bishop was the celebrant and preacher. He got out of quarantine that morning early, and so was able to take the service. The offerings at both the services were given to the Church of England Soldiers' Help Fund. During the year Darwin has done well for that fund, nearly £90 was raised for the Lavender Day effort.

Mrs Lane is visiting her brother at the Mitchell River Mission and renewing old acquaintances where she lived and worked for some years.

Arrangements are being made for the meeting of the Lambeth Conference in England during 1920. This is a Conference of all the Bishops in communion with the Church of England. The Conference meets about every ten years, and should have met in 1918, but it had to be postponed owing to the war. The meeting in 1920 should be a very important one, several important questions, amongst them the Reunion of Christendom, are sure to be discussed. The Bishop of Carpentaria hopes to be able to go to the Conference, but nothing definite has been arranged by him in connection with the trip.

Visit to the Torres Straits Islands.

Continued.

When the April number of the Carpentarian went to press I was at S. Paul's, Moa, having completed the visitation of the eastern islands of the Straits. One of the Ouncillors at S. Paul's had signed on to work on a fishing boat, so a meeting had to be held to elect one to fill the vacancy. First one man was elected who declined the honour, then a second who followed suit, a third was elected in his absence and we assumed he would accept the office. He did.

On Friday, March 7th, I left S. Paul's for Adam in the "Banzai," and made arrangements to take the twice postponed marriage the next day. The house for the bride was nearly finished, quite habitable, and the Government teacher was satisfied. The wedding was after Mattins on Saturday morning and as one of the parties was in disgrace it was a very quiet affair. In the Islands we mark the disgrace in this way. The marriage was taken at the door of the Church instead of at the altar and the bride was not arrayed in the glories delighted in on such occasions. We hope in this way to teach the Island people in general a lesson, as well as to emphasise the position of those under discipline. After the wedding I went across to Badu, made arrangements for the Sunday services and held service; preparation for Communion at night. Several people who were under discipline came to see me after the service to arrange about their restoration to Communion. Sunday was a busy day: a celebration of Holy Communion at 7.30 a.m., with a very large number of Communicants, morning and evening service, and Sunday School, where there was a large number, very many of them adults; Sunday School resolved itself into a Bible Class, which I took.

Mr Done had arrived on Saturday night, but before he got to an anchorage at Adam the tide had turned, so he was not able to take the celebration at Adam on the Sunday morning. He was in time for the other services, and gave the people their Communion on the Monday morning.

I went across the strait between Badu and Adam early on the Monday morning in the dinghy belonging to the native teacher—a Government employee—who lives at Badu and often comes across for the week-end. It was a very pleasant sail across in the early hours of the morning, and just as we got near the "Herald" we met their dinghy coming over for me. Mr Done was ashore at the service, but we got away soon after he got back on board for Mabuiag. It was a heavy beat up against a head wind and tide; a nasty, short sea was running, and hardened though I am I was not happy.

On Tuesday we had a good run to Dauan, though there was little wind. We had service that night ashore, and a celebration of the Holy Communion next morning, with 27 communicants. The Church at Dauan has been much improved since my last visit. A chancel has been built on and other improvements made. All the work has been done by the people themselves. It did not take us long to get to Saibai, where there were various matters to be seen to, some questions of discipline to be decided. We had service in the evening and then back on board, where we had mosquitoes galore, though we were well out from the shore. The next morning we were busy with a celebration of Holy Communion, with 74 communicants; a wedding taken by Mr Done; and a meeting of all the people, whom I had been commissioned to warn against going to the New Guinea coast, as there was a possibility of pneumonic influenza travelling down from Dutch New Guinea. These admonitions were to be addressed to the people at Saibai, Dauan and Boigu. There was not a Government teacher at Saibai at that time. We hoped to get to Dauan that night, but there was little wind, the tide turned, and we found ourselves aground after dark. We hailed a passing canoe and were taken on to the village. It was too late to have service, but we wished to let the people know we were near. We went back to the "Herald" by canoe about midnight, and on the rising tide got off and to the anchorage. We went ashore for Mattins and Evensong, leaving the celebration of Holy Communion till the next morning, when there were 38 communicants. There was a little touch at Boigu which shows the innate courtesy of the people. When we went ashore on Saturday morning we found in the little house used as a vestry two drinking coconuts husked, and on a plate on the table with two tumblers.

We left Boigu on Saturday morning, hoping to get to Mabuaig that night, but we had little wind and had to anchor in the open, and again on Sunday we made little progress and anchored well within sight of the island. On Monday we drifted in close with the tide, went ashore in the dinghy and walked round to the Mission House.

There was a good deal to be done at Mabuaig, and I stayed over the Tuesday. Something had to be decided about the leak into the building, which is very bad. The original plan had a parapet along each side wall outside—and above the roofing—to act as guttering. It has turned out that this is not enough to carry off the water, and it looked as though the roof would have to be taken off. However it was decided to make some large openings in the cement of the parapet and let the water out. We hope that will solve the difficulty. There were several cases of discipline to be gone into, and other matters to be attended to. We had Mattins and Evensong on the Tuesday. A celebration of Holy Communion on the Wednesday with 67 communicants, and then we left for S. Paul's, where we arrived that evening. Mr Done returned home and I remained at S. Paul's till the following Wednesday, taking the Sunday and daily services and a celebration on Lady Day. Mr Done called for us with the Herald on Wednesday, March 26th, and we had a good run to Thursday Island.

This is the longest visitation I have been able to make to the islands, and the most thorough. Even so the time was not long enough. There is a steady development in the work of the Mission, but there are difficulties, and some seem to develop as time goes on. On the whole the number of cases of discipline were not many. On some islands there were none. There was very much for real thankfulness and to give the missionaries good courage.

The Bishop was the guest of Mr and Mrs Tamblin of the Cosmopolitan Battery, during the time of his visit to Pine Creek in May.

Personal.

Mrs Newton left Thursday Island by the "Tango Maru" on Sunday, April 6th, for Brisbane. She intended to remain South for six months and to return to Thursday Island in October, about the time the Bishop expected to get back from the visit to the Northern Territory and to the Gulf. Shortly after her arrival in Brisbane, Mrs Newton was very ill, and was for a few days an inmate of S. Helen's Hospital. After that, she was much better for a few weeks, but a serious heart attack, early in July, confined her to bed, and she died at her brother's residence, Kangaroo Point, Brisbane, on Monday, July 14th. Word had been sent to the Bishop at Camowea, and he arrived in Brisbane on Saturday morning, July 12th, after a very hurried journey by motor to Longreach and thence by rail. Mr Riley, of Camowea, kindly drove the Bishop to Winton in his car. The distance—580 miles—was covered in a little over 57 hours, including times for meals and rest.

On the day of the funeral, Wednesday, July 16th, the Archbishop celebrated the Holy Communion in S. Mary's, Kangaroo Point, where Mrs Newton made her last Easter Communion, and was not able to get to Church again. The first part of the funeral service was taken at All Saints', Wickham Terrace, in which parish Mrs Newton had worked for some years, before she went to New Guinea in 1898. The Archbishop of Brisbane and the Rev. H. Gradwell took the service both at All Saints' and in the Cemetery at Toowong.

The Rev. F. H. T. Lane has taken charge of the parish of Croydon for three months from June 1st.

The Rev. H. Warren, superintendent of the Roper River Mission, left Sydney early in June by motor car for the Roper River. He has a very long overland trip. The Bishop hopes to meet him early in July about Camowea.

A priest has offered to the New Guinea Mission for Samarai, and the Bishop of New Guinea expected to be able to send one to Ambasi in May of this year to take up the Rev. Copland King's work in that district.

Miss Inman has gone to the Mitchell River Mission on a visit for about five months.

The Rev. G. A. Luscombe and Mrs Luscombe with their two children arrived in Thursday Island early in April. They were quarantined for seven days after they landed and were not able to get to S. Paul's till after Easter Day.

Our congratulations to the Rev. J. J. E. Done and Mrs Done of the Torres Straits Mission on the birth of a son in June. Mrs Done was staying at Bishop's House in Thursday Island.

Motor Car Fund.

The Treasurer has received two hundred and forty-nine pounds ten shillings for the fund; about £38 is still required to pay the debt due to the Diocesan Council on the car. Contributions may be sent to F. Rigby, Esq., Bank of New South Wales, Normanton, Q.

SUBSCRIPTIONS TO "THE CARPENTARIAN":—Per Rev E. Taffs: Mrs Crees, senr., Rev E. Taffs, each 2/6; per Rev H. R. Longmore: Mrs A. Rains, Mrs Jewell, each 2/6; Mrs Lucas, 4/-; per Rev F. H. T. Lane: Mr Tamblin 5/-, Mr H. F. L. Finnis 2/6, Mrs Iliffe 2/-; Ven E. J. Nash 3/-, Mr Wardrop M. Hill 5/-, Mrs Jones 3/-, Miss Paige, Mr Toulasik, Mrs McLeod, Mrs G. Clarke, Mr McClosky, each 2/6.

Church of England High School for Girls

HERBERTON.

Under the management of the Sisters of the Sacred Advent.

QUARTERLY FEES:

BOARDERS:			EXTRA SUBJECTS:
Tuition and Board	£15	15 0	Drawing	1	1 0
Laundry	1	1 0	Painting	1	1 0
DAY SCHOLARS	2	12 6	Woodcarving	1	1 0
			Shorthand		12 6
EXTRA SUBJECTS:			Bookkeeping		12 6
Pianoforte	1	11 6	Typewriting		12 6

There are a few bursaries available.
For further particulars apply to the Sister-in-charge, St. Anne's School, Townsville.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND

Day & Boarding School for Girls

"DALTON," WILLS STREET, TOWNSVILLE.

Conducted by the Sisters of the Sacred Advent, Brisbane.
Splendid Situation. Healthy Locality.

QUARTERLY FEES.

BOARDERS—		Tuition, Board and Laundry ...	£10 10 0
		Day Scholars	2 2 0
EXTRA SUBJECTS—		Pianoforte	1 11 6
		Drawing { If both are taken, the fee is 30/- }	1 1 0
		Painting { }	1 1 0
		Elocution	10 6 0
		Fancy Work	5 0 0

For further particulars, apply The Sisters, c/o Diocesan Registry, Townsville.
Correspondence invited

Examined and found correct.—E. J. HENNESSEY, Auditor.

1919.

Diocese of Carpentaria.

Bishop:

RT. REV. HENRY NEWTON, B.A.
Thursday Island, Queensland.

Sub-Dean:

REV. F. W. SLADE, B.A.

Diocesan Secretary:

REV. F. W. SLADE, B.A., Thursday Island.

Commissaries:

REV. FRED. PONSONBY, M.A., The Rectory, Devonport, England.
REV. J. JONES, M.A., 242 Pitt Street, Sydney.
REV. W. P. GLOVER, Th.L., Warwick, Q.
REV. J. W. ASHTON, St. Kilda, Melbourne, V.

Clergy:

REV. C. HALL, Th.L., Normanton (on leave).
REV. F. H. T. LANE, Darwin.

REV. C. W. LIGHT, Normanton.
REV. F. W. SLADE, B.A., Thursday Island.
REV. E. TAFFS, Mossman.
REV. J. TWEEDIE, B.A., Cooktown.

Honorary Lay Readers:

MR. H. F. L. FINNISS, Darwin
MR. G. E. A. PATCHING, Cooktown
MR. D. A. ROBERTS, Darwin.

Diocesan Council:

REV. F. W. SLADE, B.A. | MR. GEO. CLARK.
REV. J. J. E. DONE. | MR. GILSON FOXTON.
REV. G. A. LUSCOMBE. | MR. A. SULLIVAN.

Honorary Legal Adviser:

HIS HONOUR JUDGE MACNAUGHTON.

Aboriginal Mission, Mitchell River:

REV. B. S. COLE (Chaplain). | MRS. COLE.
MR. J. W. CHAPMAN. | MRS. MATTHEWS.
REV. H. MATTHEWS, J.P. (Supt.)
J. Geibe, T. Solomon, J. Savo.

Roper River Mission:

MR. DYER. |
REV. R. D. JOYNT. | MRS. DYER.
REV. H. E. D. WARREN (Supt.)

Torres Straits Mission:

REV. J. J. E. DONE. | REV. W. H. MACFARLANE.
REV. G. A. LUSCOMBE. | MRS. LUSCOMBE. [Th.L.
Miss LUSCOMBE.

The Diocese.

The See was founded in 1900, and consists of such part of Queensland as is bounded by the sea on the north and east, by the Northern Territory on the west, and by a line drawn from lat. S. 19deg. 30min. on the western boundary of Queensland due east to par. 144deg. E. and thence N. to lat. S. 16deg. 40min. and thence east to the sea, together with the whole of the Northern Territory, comprising an area of not less than 620,000 square miles. The population, which is very widely scattered over this immense area, consists of about 10,000 whites, 5,000 Japanese, Chinese, and other aliens, and 35,000 aboriginals. The white population is mainly mining and pastoral. The See town is Thursday Island, a pearling centre north of Cape York.

Finance.

The Diocese has no endowments beyond the Bishop's income of £395 per annum. Every parish needs a grant from central funds which come from subscriptions to the Diocese, and grants from English Societies.

Missions.

Missions are carried on amongst the Japanese at Thursday Island; the South Sea Islanders; the aboriginals on the Mitchell and Roper Rivers; and among the Islanders of the Torres Straits.

Special Offertories.

On Easter Day the offertories are given to the Clergyman of the Parish, and on Good Friday to the Australian Board of Missions.

The "Church Standard."

Posted to any Address for 6s. 6d. per Annum.

The CHURCH STANDARD holds the unique position of being the only independent weekly paper published in the interests of the Church of England in Australasia.

Published every Friday Morning.

Appeals to all Members of the Church of England, Members of the O.E.M.S., Churchwardens, Sidesmen and Parochial Councillors, Sunday School Teachers, Lay Readers, Catechists, and Clergy.

Specimen Copies on application to

THE CHURCH PUBLISHING CO. LTD.,
ROYAL INSURANCE BUILDINGS, 16 SPRING STREET, SYDNEY.

Glennie Memorial School,

Church of England School for Girls

TOOWOOMBA.

PRINCIPAL - - - MISS LAWRENCE

(Assisted by a highly qualified Resident Staff).

The School is under the direction of
His Grace the Archbishop of Brisbane, and Council.

Thorough Education. Pupils prepared for University Examinations.

MUSIC AND LANGUAGE SPECIALITIES.

Pupils prepared for the Examinations of the Associated Board R.A.M., R.C.M.

The New Building, situated over 2000 feet above sea level in twelve acres of ground, has been constructed according to the most approved modern ideas. There is accommodation for fifty (50) boarders, and all the rooms are light and excellently ventilated. The health and comfort of pupils is specially studied.

THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND HIGH SCHOOL FOR GIRLS.

ST. MARGARET'S HOUSE, THE ALBION, BRISBANE
(ETON HIGH SCHOOL).

Under the Management of the Sisters of the Sacred Advent.

PRINCIPAL - - - THE SUPERIOR OF THE SACRED ADVENT.

Head Mistress: Miss J. M. LYON, L.L.A.,
On London Register of Head Mistresses for Secondary Schools.

Pupils prepared for the Sydney University Examinations and for the Trinity College and Associated Board R.A. Exams.

TERMS FOR BOARDERS	-	-	-	UPPER SCHOOL, 10 GUINEAS
				LOWER " 8 "
TERMS FOR DAY PUPILS	-	-	-	UPPER SCHOOL, 2 GUINEAS
				LOWER " 1½ "

MUSIC, GERMAN, DANCING, PAINTING—1 GUINEA EXTRA.

For Prospectus, apply to Sister-in-Charge, St. Margaret's House; or to Church House, Ann Street, Brisbane.

ST. CATHARINE'S (Stanthorpe) HIGH SCHOOL FOR GIRLS

Under the Management of the Sisters of the Society of the Sacred Advent.

PRINCIPAL - - - THE SUPERIOR OF THE SACRED ADVENT.

Head Mistress: SISTER EVELYN, S.S.A.,
assisted by a Staff of Competent Teachers.

Pupils prepared for the Sydney University Examinations and for the Trinity College and Associated Board R.A. Exams.

The House is situated 2,500 feet above sea level, and is fitted with all modern improvements as a Boarding School for Girls.

Prospectus on application to the Sister-in-Charge, High School for Girls, Stanthorpe;
or to the Eton High School, Hamilton, Brisbane.

Diocese of Carpentaria.

INTERCESSION PAPER

July, August, September, 1919.

THANKSGIVINGS.

LET US GIVE THANKS :—

1. For the safe arrival of the Bishop at Alice Springs.
2. For special gifts to the funds of the Diocese.
3. For the blessings vouchsafed to the Missions in the Diocese.
4. For the increased observance of the octave of prayer for the Reunion of Christendom.

We thank Thee and bless Thee, O Lord.

INTERCESSIONS.

LET US PRAY :—

1. For a just and lasting peace.
2. For industrial rest.
3. For the Bishop on his journey in the Territory and Gulf.
4. For the Rev. H. Warren on his overland journey.
5. For Priests for vacant Parishes in the Diocese.
6. For guidance to those responsible for the arrangements of the Lambeth Conference.

We beseech Thee to hear us, good Lord.

The Carpenterian

FOR THE DIOCESE OF CARPENTARIA, NORTH AUSTRALIA.

Vol. XIX.—No. 76.]

THURSDAY ISLAND, OCTOBER 1, 1919.

PUBLISHED ON THE FIRST DAY OF EACH QUARTER.

[PRICE 2/6 A YEAR.
POST FREE.]

NOTICE.

All communications to be addressed to the Editor of The Carpenterian, Bishop's House, Thursday Island, to whom subscriptions may be sent. Subscription, 2/6 per annum, post free.

NOTICE TO CONTRIBUTORS.

All contributions of Parish News, etc., must reach the Editor before the last day of February, May, August, and November in each year.

The Bishop's Movements.

The Bishop remained in Brisbane until Saturday, July 26th, when he left for Sydney to see the chairman of the Australian Board of Missions about various matters in connection with the Missions in the Diocese of Carpentaria. While in Brisbane the Bishop spoke at the meeting at the Cathedral on the night of St. James' Day in connection with the work of the New Guinea Mission. He arrived in Sydney on Sunday, July 27th, and left by train for Newcastle on Wednesday, July 30th, where he caught the steamer for Byron Bay that night. He was on the Richmond River for three days, and on Sunday, August 3rd, he celebrated the Holy Communion and preached at St. Paul's, Wollongbar, and also preached at St. Andrew's, Lismore, on the evening of the same day. He arrived in Brisbane on August 6th by train from Lismore, and remained in Brisbane till August 20th, when he left by train for Maryborough. While in Brisbane the Bishop celebrated the Holy Communion and preached at St. Augustine's, Hamilton; he also preached at St. Mary's, Kangaroo Point, and at St. Andrew's, South Brisbane. He travelled from Maryborough to Longreach by train, thence by motor car to Winton and on to Hughenden by train. After spending a day at Hughenden the Bishop travelled to Cloncurry by train, and was met by Mr Edmondson there with the car, which he had brought up from Normanton. The Bishop left Cloncurry in the car on Saturday, August 30th, to visit the Gulf.

The Bishop's Visit to the Gulf.

It is only the first part of my visit to the Gulf of which I can give an account in this number of the Carpentarian as the MSS. must go to the printer in a few days, and I have really only begun the work in that district.

I left Cloncurry for Burketown in the car on Saturday, August 30th, and I was "on my own." Mr Edmondson had bought a car for himself in Cloncurry and had to take it down to Normanton. I waited a couple of days in Cloncurry till he was ready to start, as our road was the same for the first 68 miles to the Donaldson, and on that part of the road there are some bad creeks. After the thousands of miles I had "ridden" in the car I ought to know something about it, but alas, though I had driven her a good deal it was only on good roads, and I had had no experience in sand and creeks. I started first as I was likely to travel slowly, but I had not got out of the town when I was in trouble in a little sandy gully, and had to wait till Mr Edmondson got me out. And so it was at every creek and gully; it seemed hopeless, and when she ran away amongst trees twice it looked pretty hopeless. At last I managed to bump into a tree, though I did no damage except to the running board, and I almost decided it was no use my trying to do anything with her, and that the best thing I could do was to travel to Normanton with Mr Edmondson and get the pony and sulky for the work. However, things improved a little during the day, and when we had camped out after doing 61 miles, I felt a little more confidence the next day, and left my travelling companion at the Donaldson, while he went to Normanton and I to Burketown. I had 16 miles to go to Oullulal and only one bad creek two miles from the station, and though I had a little trouble in a sandy patch, I got to the creek safely. I took no risks, and though it was mid-day and broiling hot I unloaded the car and carried everything over; it was eight loads, and four of them cases of petrol. To my delight and surprise I got the car through and just on to the bank when she stopped and I had to back into the creek and stop there. I walked to the station and Mr Craigie with some of the men came out to help me. A push behind and all trouble was over! We had a splendid service that night at Oullulal, and the next day I got to Kamilorai for lunch and to Lorrance in the evening. There I found two children to be baptized. The next day I got to Augustus Downs, picking up a mate on the way who helped me through creeks. I had service that night at Augustus and gave a lesson in the catechism to the children. Mrs Pointon arranged for a horse to be sent to the Leichhardt Crossing to get me over the river, and on Wednesday night I was at Burketown, having done better than I hoped.

On Thursday I travelled to Gregory Downs and had Mr Field with me. We did the 75 miles quite easily and had no trouble at all. Service that night at Gregory Downs, and after a baptism the next morning we went on 12 miles to Planel Downs, where there was another baby to be baptized. Back to the Gregory by mid-day and on as far as Brooklands that night. We got back to Burketown early on Saturday morning. On Sunday we had good services at Burketown and I left on Monday for Armaraynald. Unfortunately Monday was a holiday, so I was not able to take the school children. At Armaraynald we had service in the evening and a celebration of Holy Communion the next morning. I also gave the children a couple of lessons in the catechism. I had arranged with Mr Simpson of Wernadinga to meet me with horses at the Floraville crossing on Tuesday at mid-day, and was there to time as was also another car; that party had heard of my plan and were careful not to be late, for the crossing of the Leichhardt at Floraville is almost impossible without help. So we were a large party at lunch on the bank of the river that day. I hoped to get to Inverleigh that night and to have the people in the other car to help me through "M" creek, but I got behind and they were uncertain as to whether I would pass Wernadinga and so did not wait. I got to "M" creek and got badly stuck. It meant camping the night. The next day the mailman came along with a passenger whose push was not enough, so I had to wait patiently while the mailman went on to Inverleigh, 20 miles, and sent back help. I had reading matter and spent a quiet day philosophically and camped out another night. At daylight next morning Mr Burnett of Inverleigh turned up and we got the car down the bed of the creek but she would not face the bank on the other side; however, you can't beat a bushman for ingenuity. Mr Burnett cut some wire out of a fence, backed his buggy against a tree, tied the wire to the car, passed the other round the hub of the wheel a couple of times, turned the wheel, which was jacked up, while I pulled in the slack and up she came. One more short stop and I was at Inverleigh. There we had service that night and a celebration of Holy Communion the next morning. I gave the children a lesson and Mr Burnett came with me to see me over the river. We had some trouble in a heavy bit of sand in the Flinders and got to the Big Bains just as the mailman was boiling his billy for lunch. The Churchwardens in Normanton, knowing I was in difficulties, had sent a mechanic out and with three of us pushing we got through the river without trouble and I was in Normanton before six o'clock. In the thirteen days I had travelled 600 miles and visited most of the stations at the western side of the Gulf.

The Rev. H. Steward, a member of the staff of the Mission, has been nominated by the staff as Bishop of Melanesia, but the nomination has to be confirmed by the Bishops of New Zealand, of which province Melanesia is a part, and as there is a movement on foot to divide the Diocese of Melanesia, there may be some delay in confirming the nomination made by the staff.

Caterpillars :

A PEMBA PARABLE

It was rather a barren little patch of garden, for no one had time to pay it much attention, but somebody had planted any number of white spider-lilies there, and about Christmas-time and right on into January a large part of the garden was a mass of the lovely flowers, shooting up their tall heads from a forest of cool, green, spear-like leaves. Ten to fifteen pure white blooms to a head, and three or four heads to a clump, new ones coming on every day and keeping the whole place sweet with their delicate fragrance.

"How pleasant it is here in the sunshine and with this fresh breeze blowing," said a newly-opened lily-head to its nearest neighbour, one scorching Sunday morning in January. "And that beautiful rain yesterday has freshened us all up, and brought out no end of new blossoms." And, even as she spoke, very little reports could be heard on all sides, one after another her younger sisters softly popped themselves open from buds into full blown flowers.

"All the same," answered her neighbour, in rather a faint, weak voice, "I am not feeling very well to-day; I don't quite know what is wrong with me; only yesterday I was being admired so much by those very handsome caterpillars one often sees about in this garden; they were saying they had seldom seen a more perfect clump of lilies than this one of mine, and never a more absolutely faultless head of flowers than myself." And she swayed gently to and fro with some complacency, as she remembered the flattering words.

"Caterpillars, my dear!" said the first lily rather sharply, "surely you were never such a fool as to encourage them; they are the curse of this garden and the ruin of hundreds of our friends and relations. Never listen to them for one moment; if they can find a soft spot anywhere and get inside your stalks or leaves, you are as good as done for; I may almost say nothing can save you. But I do hope you knew better than to heed their lying, flattering words, which they only make use of in order to deceive and destroy any poor white lily who is foolish enough to listen to them."

"Is that really so?" said the second lily. "If so, I fear I must be in a bad way, for I saw no harm in what they said, their manners were very good, and I must admit that I gave them some encouragement. I even invited one who seemed rather tired, to rest, in the cool, down among my leaves, while the sun was at its hottest."

"Turn him out quickly, at once, my dear friend," the other lily whispered in great distress. "It is fatal to keep him there. Oh, if I could only help you to get rid of the vile creature;" and she waved violently to and fro and rustled all her green sheaths in her agitation.

"Nonsense, child," said a new voice, rather a cracked and ugly one, speaking thickly and confusedly, "never you mind that fussy old thing, she is only interfering out of jealousy because you and I got all the admiration yesterday; take no notice of her, our guests are gentlemen and would never abuse our hospitality; take my advice and invite ever so many more of them, as I have done—the more the merrier is my motto, and I should say I have scores of visitors now in my clump."

The wise lily murmured a hurried warning. "Just look at her, my dear, she is absolutely ruined, a mass of horrible corruption; her leaves are perforated, and stained as if with blood in great patches, and see, her flowers are drooping off in dozens, withering before ever they come to maturity—death is very near her now, and she is blind and does not even know her danger."

The younger lily gazed in horror upon the ruined plant, and saw that it was only too true; some of the fairest blooms had dropped to the ground and were lying dragged and stained on the earth, and all over them, feasting greedily on their prey, were black and yellow caterpillars, some large, fat and juicy, having gorged themselves thoroughly on the unhappy plant, others quite tiny, some barely to be detected, but all busily, hungrily at work, devouring, ruining, destroying their miserable victim. And she could still plume herself on her beauty and on the pure whiteness of her flowers, which were now only unsightly and loathsome to behold.

Crash! Another great head has fallen, the stem eaten through and through by the voracious parasites who lie hidden within it.

Just at that moment a step was heard and down the garden came a white woman, one of the missionaries who lived in the queer little house in the middle of this garden.

"I must just do my little bit of Sunday labour," she was saying as she came, "but I do hate the job; still, it is worth while if I can save a few white lilies;" and she began carefully examining the plants, hunting everywhere for caterpillars, throwing them out and stamping on them when found.

"She never stays more than a quarter of an hour or so," said the lily who had spoken first, "the sun is too hot for her at this time of the morning; but if only she gets to you before she goes back to the house, you may yet be saved. Oh, cry with all your might, my dear, and try hard to make her notice you; rustle your leaves; wave your head, anything, if only she can be made to see your danger."

But the sun was blazing and the missionary turned to go indoors. Just as she was passing the poor, terrified, trembling plant, however, she spied a huge, fat caterpillar on one of its leaves, and pouncing upon it slew it. "I can't have this lovely one ruined," she said, and she proceeded to search thoroughly all through the clump, here and there pulling off a leaf altogether and even ruthlessly tearing out a new head of flowers which had just formed but was withering away, being infested at its very heart by the horrible caterpillars.

"Thank you, thank you," sighed the lily, when the cruel but saving work was over and she stood, bereft indeed of much of her former beauty, but healthy and sound again. "Thank you, I feel better already. To think that all this should come from welcoming just one of the horrible creatures. Never, never again will I let one get so much as a look of encouragement from me. And as to you, my dear friend," and she turned to the first lily, "how can I ever thank you enough? You have saved my beauty, my purity, my very life, for without your warning, by to-morrow or next day I should have been like that poor creature there;" and she looked with shuddering pity at the unfortunate wreck which had so lately been a lovely plant.

* * * *

There are a few white lilies of another sort in Pemba—newly baptized and still in their white robes, with their souls washed whiter; little children who have not had time to learn the evil and wickedness which surrounds them, and some who once were clean and pure, but who have come very near destruction, and, thank God, some also, even though they may be very few in number, who will warn and guide and help these weaker brothers and sisters, until by the mercy of God and through the grace of His Sacraments even these may be delivered, saved and set free, strengthened, cleansed and revived to take their share in making their little garden in God's Church fair and sweet and bright.

But the caterpillars are always there, countless enemies, worldly, fleshly, spiritual, far more in number than the poor lilies and always, always on the watch. Some bold and daring, others sly and flattering, some almost unperceived until untold harm has been done and the sweet flower is almost ruined; others easily seen from the first, but encouraged and welcomed by their poor, foolish victim. Let but one get a real footing and the flower's decay is terribly rapid, for caterpillars such as these have no idle moments and lose no time when once they get to work. And woe betide the missionaries who are called to play the gardener's part, if their enthusiasm, diligence and zeal does not at least equal that of the enemy hordes.

E.M.V.

From Central Africa U.M.C.A. monthly paper.

The Carpentarian Association.

Now that the war is over an effort is being made to revive the Carpentarian Association in England, and Miss Theodora Scarth has offered her services as secretary. A meeting of the Association was held in June, 1919, at which Sir George Le Hunte, at one time Lieutenant-Governor of New Guinea and afterwards Governor of South Australia, presided. Amongst the speakers were the Rev. R. S. Halse and the Rev. C. Hall. It is to be hoped that interest in the Diocese of Carpentaria will be revived in England, as the Diocesan funds have suffered during the war and we are only able to pay our way with great difficulty. During the war we could not expect England to do much for us, but English capital is invested in the Diocese and from that we may fairly claim support for the work of the Church in the Diocese.

The Very Reverend R. S. Hay, Dean of Hobart, was consecrated Bishop of Tasmania, on St. Bartholomew's Day, August 24, in St. Andrew's Cathedral, Sydney. The new Bishop of Tasmania is a graduate of Durham University, England. He worked for many years in the diocese of Brisbane, where he was rector of Laidley, Bundaberg, Warwick and St. Andrew's, South Brisbane, before he was appointed Dean of Hobart.

Christ Church, Cooktown.

The town of Cooktown has fallen on evil days. It is estimated that 170 persons have left the town and district during the last two years. A special meeting of the Parochial Council was held on July 10th, 1919, to consider the financial position of the parish. The Council had to face the fact that the income of the parish had fallen so low, owing to the exodus of parishioners, that they could not see their way to guarantee a living wage to a Rector, and they also felt they had no right to expect to have a priest unless the stipend were sufficient for even a single man. The Church people in Cooktown have faced a growing difficulty bravely and the Wardens have paid their way, but they cannot see how it is to be done now, and they have had the honesty to face the facts. It is a case where larger help should be given from Diocesan funds, but unfortunately these funds are low. And Cooktown is not a place that can well be worked in conjunction with another parish.

S. David's, Mossman.

It has been decided by the ladies of the parish to hold a Sale of Work during this year to raise funds towards the building of the Chancel of the new Church. Building operations have been in abeyance since 1914 owing to the cost of material.

Australian Board of Missions.

THANK-OFFERING FOR PEACE.

The Australian Board of Missions is appealing for £30,000 from Australia as a thank-offering for Peace. The one real hope for the peace of the world is that the teaching of the Prince of Peace shall be accepted by the nations of the world. And how shall they hear without a preacher? And how shall they preach except they be sent? We have known the horrors of war as never before; we have felt the relief of peace again.

Shall we not show our gratitude to God, and also make some real sacrifice so that by spreading the Gospel the hope of permanent peace may be assured. Contributions to the thank-offering may be ear marked for any Mission, but the work which the A.B.M. has undertaken in Fiji needs help at the present. In our Diocese of Carpentaria with parishes vacant it is very difficult to organise any effort. I would earnestly plead with our people to send contributions to this thank-offering to the Rev. F. W. Slade, the Vicarage, Thursday Island. Surely we can do our duty in this matter without personal appeals.

(Signed)

HENRY, Bishop of Carpentaria.

Motor Car Fund.

The treasurer of the above fund, Mr. F. Rigby, wishes to announce that sufficient money has been received to pay for the car, and that the account is now closed.

World Conference on Faith and Order.

REUNION OF CHRISTENDOM.

After nearly nine years of effort the World Conference on Faith and Order is practically an accomplished fact, though very much remains to be done in making the detailed arrangements. That will require much time, for it involves correspondence with nearly 100 commissions scattered all over the world. But apparently all the invitations necessary, and at present possible, have been or are being issued, and the acceptances have been so far universal that it will probably be thought that immediate steps can now be taken to convene the Conference or at least to consider where and when it can be convened.

Early in this year a deputation of the American Episcopal Church sailed to invite the co-operation of the Churches of Europe and the near East. The deputation had behind it the approval of the whole Anglican Communion, of almost every important Protestant communion outside Europe, the unofficial but weighty assurances of the Patriarch and many influential members of the Church of Russia, the active and cordial sympathy of eminent representatives of the Holy Orthodox Eastern Churches in Greece and elsewhere, of many distinguished Roman Catholics all over the world, and of leading Protestants on the continent of Europe. The deputation has been cordially received everywhere.

At Rome the Pope has not felt able to appoint representatives to the conference, considering submission to Rome as the only possibility of re-union, but in Athens, Sofia, Belgrade, Constantinople, their reception was more than cordial. The deputation was to visit Switzerland, France, Belgium, Holland, Denmark, Norway and Sweden, and two members are going to Alexandria, Jerusalem and Antioch.

Personal.

The Rev. James Tweedie has resigned the parish of Christ Church, Cooktown, and will be locum tenens in charge of the parish of Gladstone in the Diocese of Rockhampton. Mr Tweedie will leave Cooktown early in November.

The Rev. C. W. Light at the end of the twelve months for which he undertook the charge of the parish of Normanton, returned to Brisbane in August. Mr Light has accepted the parish of Christ Church, Darwin, and intends to leave Brisbane for the north early in December. He is to be married to Miss Dora Ganly on November 27th.

The Rev. R. S. Halse, the head of the Community of Saint Barnabas, in the Diocese of North Queensland is in England recruiting priests for the community. If a sufficient number of priests offer, the Bishop of Carpentaria hopes to arrange with the community of S. Barnabas to open a branch house in the Gulf and to work that district on Brotherhood lines, but of course Mr. Halse has to think of the Diocese of North Queensland first.

The Rev. W. J. Elsey, who has been for some years head of the Brotherhood of S. Boniface in the Diocese of Bunbury, has been elected Bishop of Kalgoorlie.

There were 11 students at S. Francis' College, Nundah, when the College was re-opened in June. Several of the students have been to the Front and some were in residence when the war broke out. Amongst them is Mr Skelton, who is being prepared with a view to work in the Diocese of Carpentaria.

Another student of S. Francis' College, Mr C. D. Gillman, who intended to come to Carpentaria, also enlisted. He has suffered very badly from trench feet and has decided to remain in England for a time to get treatment. Meantime he is attending lectures at King's College, London.

Mr. N. A. Fettell, a member of the staff of the New Guinea Mission who enlisted in 1915, has been keeping up his reading and hopes to be ordained at the end of the year. Mr. Fettell also took the opportunity while in England to attend lectures at King's College, London.

The Church's Duty towards Nationalism.

The questions of nationalism obviously affect the very existence of the Church, but it is not easy to define the Church's duty towards nationalism. Broadly considered, the Church must embody a two-fold purpose, leading individual souls aright, and empowering the human race to realise its destiny. The Church is "called to season human society with the salt of grace, to illuminate it with the light of truth." "The nations shall walk amidst the light thereof." For this reason our Lord prayed that the Church might be in the world, not out of the world, and, being in the world, might be sanctified in the truth. The Church must be at the heart of every movement among men, purging it of its dross, helping the good to mature, and in every way enriching it with life-giving power. It is quite conceivable that the Church might have to oppose nationalism even to the point of martyrdom, that is if nationalistic principles were contrary to Christ's teachings; but can it be maintained seriously that such is the case? Nationalistic movements are often anti-Christian, not invariably from a dislike of Christ, but from a fear that His religion is being presented in a Western fashion. The idea has got abroad in India that Christianity is anti-national. Possibly this belief has behind it some reason. Unintentionally, but no less really, Christian men—laymen perhaps even more than Clergy—have conceived that the duty of the Church is to Westernise rather than to Christianise. The futility of such a mistake should be beyond discussion. The function of the Church is not to reproduce Europe in Asia or in Africa, but rather to establish the Kingdom of God everywhere in such a fashion as to bring out the best that characterises each nation and gives it individuality. There is much in the nationalistic movements that is bad, and more that is dangerous; but the duty of the Church is to look beneath the surface.

BISHOP FRODSHAM.

The Carpentarian

FOR THE DIOCESE OF CARPENTARIA,
NORTH AUSTRALIA.

Vol. XIX., No. 76. Thursday Island, October 1, 1919

The Bishop's Visit to the Northern Territory.

Continued.

The account of the journey to Alice Springs was sent by post from there to the publishers, the return journey to Helen's Springs, and across to Queensland at Camooweal, remains to be recorded.

We found that we had a little more petrol at Alice Springs than we had expected, but even so there were only 36 gallons received out of 64 sent, leakages and evaporation accounted for the rest. Of course carriage by camel teams is rough, but strange to say, while had one tin nearly knocked out of shape quite full, we had others without a mark on them quite empty. The real trouble seemed to be that the soldering round the cap at the intake of the tin was too thin, just a smear, instead of a good coat of solder. That consignment of petrol cost just about twenty two shillings a gallon, railled from Adelaide to Oodnadatta and thence by camel transport.

I could have spent a month profitably at Alice Springs working from there as a centre to the cattle stations round about, and to other centres, but this year I had neither the time nor the petrol to spare. There are other parts of the Diocese to be considered besides the Northern Territory. It was a great pleasure to give the half-caste children in the School at Alice Springs some religious teaching every day I was there, and to find how much they knew of the life of our Lord. The children listened with rapt attention to the lessons, which were long, as Mrs Standly allowed me a free hand to have the children the whole of the school time.

I left the settlement very early on Friday morning, June 13th, as arrangements had been made for a celebration of Holy Communion at the Telegraph Station before starting on the return journey. Mr Baker kindly drove Mrs Standly and me to the Telegraph Station, and Mr Edmondson came on with the car about 10 a.m., when we started again. We were to call at Bond Springs, a cattle station about seven miles off the road, but when we arrived we found everyone away except the cook. We wondered as we came through the Wiggly Gorge how we had managed to negotiate it in the dark the previous Saturday! We had with us a returned soldier going to work with the well party on the road, and he was to find out what a Ford car can do, for after lunch at Bond Springs we got off the road and had some experiences.

I flatter myself, from what I have since heard, that the cook gave us bad directions for getting back to the telegraph line another and shorter way. At all events after travelling about four miles or so along a very nice valley we found ourselves on the bank of a sandy creek and a low gap in the range just across it. We knew we must be wrong, but also we were too proud to turn back, so we walked to the top of the gap and saw the plain country just the other side not half a mile away. If we could get over then it seemed quite clear going, turn due west and we should strike the telegraph line. No vehicle had ever crossed that creek or that gap in the range, but we did after a good deal of labour. Unfortunately just as we were on the top of the gap the clutch bands needed attention, and one required new lining. That meant delay, but what was more serious we found later on that one of the washers from the exhaust had dropped out and of all places lodged itself on the edge of the lower cover of the crank case, and of course prevented a close joint. We did not notice the loss till we were putting on the exhaust and then thought the washer had got buried in the sand. That meant a leak for oil from the crank case and was to give us some anxious times until we discovered what was causing the leak. We did not worry very much about the delay, as we thought we were over our troubles with good going ahead of us. But alas, soon after we got to the plain country we struck a sandy creek, and as we thought there was more chance of finding a crossing further from the range we ran along the creek to the north-east and got over. We were in for it now. There was no use thinking of going back across the range. We must make as nearly west as was possible. We did, and struck another sandy creek which again pushed us easterly to cross it. By this time it was getting late in the afternoon and we decided to camp. We had enough water for a "dry" camp. Next morning, Saturday, we made an early start, but another sandy creek again threw us eastward, and after crossing that we struck a road which exactly corresponded with the description given us of the one to take us out—except that it was not going in the right direction! However, we tried it for a mile and not being satisfied we swung off it to go west. Almost at once we saw a sandy ridge to our right, and thinking the road deviated to get round the ridge we decided to try it again, and it did seem to turn nearer the direction we wanted to go, but we were not satisfied, and after another half-mile were just deciding to turn back and get to our western direction again when we saw dust ahead and soon overtook a horseman. He sent us back three miles and then go due west, rather unkindly remarking "I suppose you know which is the west." We did as we were told but evidently did not keep quite west enough as we struck the edge of a Gidyea Scrub which gave us great trouble, but we got through it, thick as it was, and found ourselves on the telegraph line just a mile further on than we should have hit it had we got the right road. We had lost time, which was bad; still worse, we had used up petrol.

It was ten o'clock in the morning of Saturday, June 14th, when we got back on the road, and by dark that night we were at the Woodford Crossing where we camped, having travelled 104 miles. The next morning we managed the crossing with very little trouble and got to Sterling before dark. There a day was spent in overhauling things and the worst job was a consequence of my carelessness. In screwing down one of the cylinder head bolts I broke it over flush with the top of the cylinder. The bolt had to be bored out with a breast drill and then the worm was damaged, so a stud had to be put in, but Mr. Edmondson was equal to such emergencies.

On Tuesday we were at Barrow Creek, and as our supply of petrol was getting low the postmaster at Barrow Creek promised to let us have horses to pull us as far as Taylor's Crossing 26 miles, and we should then have enough petrol to take us to Tennant's Creek, but it meant waiting one day while the horses were got in and rather more than another day to do the 26 miles. We camped on Thursday night on Taylor's Creek a few miles from the crossing, and the next day got to Wickliffe Well, where we camped. I gave the children a lesson in the catechism; we had a short evening service by the light of the fire, and the next morning I gave Miss Crooks her communion. Then I rode to Wauchope Wolfram Camp on a horse I borrowed from Mr. Crooks, and he also provided horses to drag the car over a big sandhill. This would save us a good deal of petrol, as it was a heavy pull on a short distance.

It was an 18 mile ride to the Wolfram Camp, and I have not ridden a horse for some time, also the paces of the horse were not the easiest. Still worse, I was wearing an overcoat, and as the flapping might startle the horse I was advised to keep the coat tucked under me on the saddle, the consequence was that it was many days before I could sit anywhere with comfort.

We had a nice little service at the Wolfram Camp on the Saturday afternoon in the store there. Unfortunately there was, as so often happens in small communities, some little friction amongst the residents, and it was not possible to find a perfectly neutral place for the service, and this may have made an excuse for some of the men not to attend the service. I left the camp late in the afternoon to get out on to the road where the car was waiting for me, and on the way called to see another settler some four miles from the camp. I had arranged to meet Mr Edmondson at the Wauchope Crossing, about eight miles from the Wolfram Camp, and the policeman from Hatches Creek, who was at the camp with a black tracker, kindly sent the aboriginal with me to act as guide, and to see after the horse I had borrowed from Mr Crook at Wickliffe Well. Unfortunately I made a mistake as to which is Wauchope Crossing, thinking it was a big sandy crossing of a creek in the neighbourhood, also we struck the telegraph line late at night where the road is not along it. However, we ran the line down some distance to the south, and then looked for car tracks with matches, and we saw that the car had gone on, so we turned back along the road, which was not very distinct. We had trouble following it in the dark, but we found the car and Mr Edmondson asleep under it. I had ridden about 30 miles that day, the car had come about 11 miles.

On Sunday, June 22nd, we got away about half-past eight in the morning, and hoped to get to Tennant's Creek that night; but alas, first of all in crossing a very rough creek we jolted our tool box off the running board and had to go back two miles to find it; then we got badly stuck in a creek seven miles north of Bonney's Well. We had crossed it with no trouble at all going south, but the get-out on the north bank was very bad and heavy. Three times we backed across the creek and tried to rush the car up, but the sand was too heavy. We tried everything we could think of but it seemed hopeless, and it was impossible to jack up the wheels in the sand. At last we improvised a lever out of a gum sapling, and with a forked stick as a fulcrum we levered first one back wheel up and then the other, packing under each with sticks and stones, and corduroying the track. That got us a few feet, and the operation had to be done three times before we were out of the creek. The delay was fully five hours, so we could not manage Tennant's Creek that night. Instead, after doing 50 miles we made a dry camp at dark half-a-mile or so south of Kelly's Well. An early start next morning got us to Tennant's Creek, 30 miles, about 11 a.m., and we found that Mr Dixon, the Post Master, was just sending off pack horses with petrol for us, as he thought we must be delayed for want of it, but we still had nearly a gallon left and our supplies along the road were sufficient to see us through. We spent the rest of the day at the Telegraph Station, and left on Tuesday morning for Bauka Bauka. On the road we met Mr Rogers with his cattle—we had passed him south of Newcastle on the way down—and he had brought a tin of lubricating oil from Bauka Bauka for us in case we should be short of it. We did the 60 miles from Tennant's Creek to Bauka Bauka comfortably by four in the afternoon. At Bauka Bauka we found a drover with nearly 300 horses who had come from Kapunda, in South Australia, and was taking the mob to the Fitzroy, in Western Australia. The drover was anxious about water in the Murinjai Hole, west of Newcastle Waters. If there were not enough to water the mob he would have to go over 600 miles round by the Katherine instead of about 300 miles across. I believe he managed to get across by Murinjai, but had a dry stage of 135 miles!

We left Bauka Bauka on Wednesday, June 25, for Helen's Springs, a short run of about 30 miles which only took us three hours to do. There is one bad creek on the road, and when we got to it Mr. Edmondson and I expected to look for a better crossing, and suddenly on the other bank there appeared a very small black boy on a very big horse and in his hand a very big stick, arms and legs and stick making much movement. "I'll show you road," the apparition called out, and he worked his beast with much labour across the creek and showed us a good crossing.

At Helen's Springs we found Mrs. Bohning living with four young children, the youngest about three years old I baptised that night, the first opportunity the mother had had of getting her baby baptized. When I took the particulars for entering in the Registrar of Baptisms I was told the baby was born at Renner's Springs. I asked the mother who had looked after her and she said quite casually, "one of the lubras." There was not a white woman within 200 miles of her at the time.

We had been advised to start across country from Helen's Springs instead of from Renner's as we had intended doing, and we decided to act on the advice. We found an aboriginal who might know something of the country and who came as guide. Mrs. Bohning rode ahead of us to show us the crossing and to give us our directions. We were to follow the track of travelling cattle, a couple of mobs had been along the track within two months and they would bring us to Moon-Moona waterhole from which we were to travel west and have the possible help of the track of a waggon that had come from Anthony's Lagoon some three months before. But we were soon in trouble, the cattle tracks led us through some thick scrubby country and then to a big sandy creek that was impossible. Had we gone into it we could never hope to get out.

We started in different directions on foot to find a crossing but it seemed hopeless, and at last Mr. Edmondson and I got back to the car and decided to run the creek up. Our guide was nowhere to be seen, we coo-eeed, and coo-eeed, but got no answer, and we decided he had given us the slip and made a start. About three miles up we managed to get over, and camped for lunch and some little repairs. Just as our billy was boiling our guide put in an appearance, a little hurt at our having deserted him. We were soon on the track from Renner's Springs to Moon-Moona after lunch and were glad to see here and there a wheel track, so we had every hope of getting to the Walin by dark. Our guide now knew where he was, he had been over the Renners-Moon-Moona road some years before. Things were going quite nicely till about five o'clock in the afternoon when we were going slowly through some dry bog and suddenly the front wheels dropped into a big hole that could not be seen, it was full of loose dust.

Our guide and I found ourselves on the ground. The wheels and axle looked to be in a frightful tangle and a hopeless mess. We thought for a minute we were done. We managed to back the car out, unshipped the front wheels and axle, and found nothing broken, but the axle and reinforcement bars were badly bent, and we had to straighten them with an axe. We had come 33 miles, and were about 4 miles from Moon-Moona, but we had plenty of water so could camp in comfort for repairs. It was eleven o'clock the next morning before we got started again, got to Moon-Moona for lunch, and filled up with water before going on again. But our guide knew nothing about the track to Anthony's Lagoon; he had travelled another route to the north-east to Boorooloola, and when he found that was not the road we were to travel, he wanted to go back, he did not care to go into unknown country. However, we persuaded him to come on with us, and he certainly took a lot of trouble looking for dry tracks not easily seen. Ten miles from Moon-Moona brought us to Bundarra Creek, and as we wanted to do some tube repairing, we decided to camp there early by the water. The next morning we found our guide had gone. There was no doubt about it this time, for his waterbag was gone too! We got away from Bundarra Creek about nine o'clock in the morning of Saturday, June 28th, and we had very rough travelling all that day. It was impossible to find the waggon track in many places, we had just to keep as nearly east as possible, and for miles we were bumping, bumping, bumping on low gear over black soil plains, travelling sometimes not more than four miles an hour. It was hard on the car and on the occupants, and it was extravagant with petrol and oil, but we kept our direction pretty well, and now and again saw the waggon tracks to assure us we were not far out of the way. About half-past four o'clock in the afternoon when we reckoned we were about six miles from Eva Downs, we were astonished to see a car coming towards us. It turned out to be Mr Peacock with a big Studebaker and five men going to Darwin. Needless to say it was a pleasant meeting, and none the less as Mr Peacock's party had a good supply of Vice-Regal tobacco and for two days we had been on trade! We gave them a drum of water, as we had not far to go and they had nearly 40 miles to the next water with a very bumpy road, and there was danger of a breakdown for them. They had the roughest before them.

That night we camped at Eva Downs, 45 miles from Bundarra Creek. The homestead is deserted, but we had shelter and plenty of water, and on Sunday we got to Anthony's Lagoon, 47 miles, early in the afternoon. I held service at the Police Station in the evening and next day we were on good roads and did the 65 miles to Brunette Downs in a few hours. We were now in a haven of rest where we could do repairs, for they have a fine engineering shop on the station with all sorts of supplies and spares, and of course, as you are in the Never Never, there everybody is ready to do anything and everything to help a traveller. And we did need repairs. The jolting over the black soil plains had shaken the car badly, and when we arrived at Brunette we had only one sound leaf of the main ones of the front spring, and that was bent! But we had a spare spring with us. We spent three days at Brunette overhauling, and on one night I had service in the men's quarters. On Friday, July 4th, we were on the road again and everything going well. On the good roads I began to take lessons in driving, and intended to drive most of the way to Normanton, getting experience in sand and creeks, but it was not to be. We got to Alexandria for lunch on July 4th and then on to Rankine, where I hoped to meet the Barclay Tablelands folk, as it was the last day of the races. We got there by dark but with a very bad knock in the engine. It turned out later that a little dirt had got into and choked the feed pipe to the bearings. We had travelled 109 miles that day.

We found a great crowd of people, for that part of the world, and all of course very hospitable. The races were over, but everyone intended to remain till mid-day Saturday, as there was to be a very rare event—a wedding—on Saturday morning at the Rankine Store, and no one would miss that.

We had service at the Police Station—the only other building—at 9.30 a.m., the congregation sitting on boxes and in motor cars drawn up by the verandah: perhaps one of the most unique services ever held by a Bishop. At eleven o'clock I married the couple, an old widow to nearly as old a widower. We got through the service quietly, but as soon as it was over the bride received a shower of rice in her face. There was not much of that to spare, but others invested in a pound of dried peas, but spared the humans a bombardment of them, sending them instead well up into the air and down on the iron roof. The bridegroom was carried immediately afterwards shoulder-high round the store.

As the car needed repairs, and there was another wedding waiting for me further on—I was twelve days later than I expected to be for that—I decided to go on in another car to Avon Downs, and Mr Edmondson was to follow on when he was ready. At Avon Downs I found my mail waiting for me but no telegrams. However, Mr Lloyd rang up Camooweal and had wires sent out by telephone, and then I found I must get to Brisbane as quickly as possible. We went on to Camooweal that night. I arranged for a celebration of Holy Communion the next morning, Sunday, and at mid-day went out to Rocklands Station for the wedding: a very nice, reverent service. We were back in Camooweal early in the afternoon, and I started for Brisbane, as was noticed in the last number of the Carpentarian.

Mr Edmondson went on to Normanton with the car, and arrived there the following Saturday.

We had certainly done a wonderful trip from the Katherine to Camooweal. We had travelled more than 1,700 miles, part of it over very rough country, and we were, I believe, the first to get through from the overland telegraph line to Eva Downs without help in a car. Twice the Administrator of the Northern Territory attempted it: once from the east and once from the west, and on one occasion the car was brought by horses to Eva Downs; the second time by camels to Renner's Springs, and on that occasion the party nearly perished, as everyone reminded us whom we told we were going that track. Lloyd's aerial survey party got across just before us, going west with motor cycles, but they had packhorses with them on the track. Mr Peacock got through just after us, and another car from Duchess has been across since, but I believe Mr Edmondson has the honour of being the first to get through, and he blazed the track for the others to follow. And of course the whole success of the trip was due to his skill as a mechanic and driver, as I fully appreciated when I came to take the car on my own later on! We were in some bad holes and tight places, but he never failed to get us out of them. We never ran short of water, though once it was low, and we had a good supply of spare parts.

In the 1700 miles we did not see more than 300 people. I had many services under varied conditions and in strange places. I baptized two children, took two weddings, and best of all was able to give several people their communion, the first opportunity they had had for nearly four years.

The country is certainly monotonous—long dreary plains without trees, and long stretches of level country lightly timbered. Towards the centre of Australia we came to hills and valleys and mountains, and some of the scenery was really impressive, especially after the dreary level country. Only once in that 1700 miles did we cross running water, the King River, about 20 miles or so from the Katherine, it was the only time our tyres were wet! There was a fair supply of surface water, as we were early in the season. We passed through some magnificent pastoral country on the plains to the west of Eva Downs, miles and miles of Mitchell grass green at the end of June, and covering the ground in close tussocks, but very dry country; sub-artesian water can be got at a moderate depth, but that means expense in boring and pumping. When Mr Peacock has completed his contract of putting down eight bores for the Federal Government between Eva Downs and Newcastle Waters, it will be seen what can be done to develop that fine belt of country, and travelling there then will be luxury compared to present conditions.

The trip was of course an expensive one—it cost well over £200—but petrol was expensive in the centre of Australia, and much in the way of spare parts had to be carried, but it was worth the labour and the expense to visit the lonely people and to realise how grateful they were for a visit.

The Bishop of New Guinea paid a visit to Australia in June, and was held up some weeks as there was no boat by which he could get back to his diocese.

SUBSCRIPTIONS TO "THE CARPENTARIAN":—Mrs Kirk, 3/-; Mrs Burnett, 2/6.

John Bull.

In a recent article in the Philadelphia Ledger on "Our Debt to Dauntless John Bull," it was pointed out that "England was no more a military nation than America when the war began. She learned to fight by fighting—and dying. We are profiting to-day by her tragic experience. . . . They first fought defensive actions with all the dogged courage for which the British are famous. Then they created that early turn in the tide which released the series of Allied offensives that finally sent the Germans back to the Hindenburg line—and beyond. They rose to the rank of a full military partner of France—and there is no higher rank. For all this they paid. There is hardly a home in Britain which does not have its unvisited grave in France or Belgium, not a street on which the permanently maimed do not limp to unaccustomed tasks. And the figures show that the percentage of casualties from the Mother Country exceeds the percentage from the overseas dominions, thus disposing of one of the vilest, meanest, and most dastardly lies of the whole satanic German propaganda. England's contributions outside the Western Front," continues this American article, "have been worthy of a great nation, even if they stood alone. Her navy has kept the seas free for the commerce and the troop transports of the Allied world. It has bottled up the German navy from the first. Her ships have coaled, fed, and munitioned the Italians—for a time fed and munitioned the French—brought legions and food supplies from the seven seas. We are proud of our own swift shipment of troops to the firing line during the days of the soul-shaking danger this last summer; but well over half of them went in British bottoms conveyed by British warships. Then, where have not the British fought? The Suez was in danger. It was the British that protected it. There were German naval stations in the Pacific. The British mopped them up; Russia asked help by way of the Dardanelles. The British tried to do it. Intervention was needed on the Tigris. The British supplied it. The British were at Salonica. British ships were in the Adriatic. The British colonial troops freed Africa from the Germans. British diplomacy steadied the Moslem world when the Turkish Sultan and Sheikh-el-Islam proclaimed a holy war. The British to-day are moving south from Archangel, and are at Vladivostock. But no one save the German Intelligence Department has known, or ever will know, half what Britain has done."

Church of England High School for Girls

HERBERTON.

Under the management of the Sisters of the Sacred Advent.

QUARTERLY FEES:

BOARDERS:		EXTRA SUBJECTS:
Tuition and Board	£15 15 0	Drawing { If both subjects are taken, the fee is 30/-	1 1 0
Laundry	1 1 0	Painting {	1 1 0
DAY SCHOLARS	2 12 6	Woodcarving	1 1 0
		Shorthand	12 6
EXTRA SUBJECTS:		Bookkeeping	12 6
Pianoforte	1 11 6	Typewriting	12 6

There are a few bursaries available.

For further particulars apply to the Sister-in-charge, St. Anne's School, Townsville.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND

Day & Boarding School for Girls

"DALTON," WILLS STREET, TOWNSVILLE.

Conducted by the Sisters of the Sacred Advent, Brisbane.
Splendid Situation. Healthy Locality.

QUARTERLY FEES.

BOARDERS—		Tuition, Board and Laundry ...		£10 10 0
DAY SCHOLARS		2 2 0
EXTRA SUBJECTS—Pianoforte		1 11 6
Drawing { If both are taken, the fee is 30/-		...		1 1 0
Painting {		...		1 1 0
Elocution		10 6
Fancy Work		5 0

For further particulars, apply The Sisters, c/o Diocesan Registry, Townsville.

Correspondence invited

PAROCHIAL STATISTICS.

PARISH. or MISSION.	CHURCHES LICENSED.	Total White Population of District.	*Estimated No. of Church People reached by the Church's Ministrations.	No. of Clergymen.	No. of Lay Readers.	No. of Honorary Lay Readers.	No. of Centres at which Services are regularly held.	No. of Sunday and Weekday Services.	Celebrations of Holy Communion.	Sunday School Buildings.	SUNDAY SCHOOL TEACHERS.		SUNDAY SCHOOL SCHOLARS.		Average Attendance of Sunday Scholars.	No. of Communicants.	Persons Baptised.	MARRIAGES.		Burials.	PERSONS CONFIRMED.		Schools in which Religious Instruction is Given.	No. of Weekday Religious Instructions
											Men	Women	Boys	Girls				After Banns	By License		Males	Females
†THURSDAY ISLAND ...	ALL SOULS' CATHEDRAL (Quetta Memorial)	580	365	1	1	805	127	1	1	4	25	32	33	61	22	1	7	7	1	2	2	160
†COOKTOWN ...	CHRIST CHURCH	700	350	1	...	1	1	800	76	...	3	8	68	35	79	111	28	...	3	9	5	24	2	157
†CROYDON ...	S. MARGARET'S S. JOHN'S ...	1100	750	1	6	350	65	...	1	1	25	31	24	73	47	...	6	2	4	25	6	85
DARWIN ...	CHRIST CHURCH...	2000	500	1	...	1	3	410	83	...	2	1	30	32	31	125	16	2	9	11	...	1
†MOSSMAN ...	S. DAVID'S S. ANDREW'S ...	600	200	1	2	190	64	1	...	2	22	14	17	51	15	...	4	7	4	4	3	30
†NOEMANTON ...	S. PETER'S	750	200	1	...	1	2	250	59	...	1	...	10	14	15	63	12	...	2	4	8	15	2	44
†THE BUSH MISSION...	500
†MOA MISSION	S. PAUL'S ... BETELEMA ADAM	600	1	3	6	3	800	52	1	194	25	...	4	8	7	6	...	210
†ROPER RIVER MISSION	S. CATHERINE'S	2	2	4	3	800	30	1	2	1	210
†MITCHELL RIVER MISSION...	ALL SAINTS' THE ASCENSION	150	2	...	2	2	1564	83	19	12	29	15	12	...	2	2	312
†TORRES STRAITS MISSION ...	S. SAVIOUR'S S. MARY'S S. ANDREW'S CHRIST CHURCH...	...	1050	2	3	23	10	1030	95	1	9	...	90	85	124	582	102	21	26	17
Totals ...	SIX OTHERS 25	4910	4685	13	8	38	33	5999	734	5	13	25	289	255	352	1275	279	26	37	50	55	94	15	1228

* Including aboriginals and aliens. † Vacant; the Bishop of Carpentaria has ministered as far as possible to the stations and camps.

PAROCHIAL FINANCES (To the nearest pound sterling)

PARISH.	RECEIPTS.										EXPENDITURE.										CREDIT BALANCES OTHER THAN CURRENT A/C.					DEBIT BALANCE OTHER THAN CURRENT A/C.
	Direct Offerings.				Indirect Offerings.			From Diocesan Funds.	Miscellaneous Income	Debit balance at end of year.	Total	Debit balance from previous year	Clergyman's Stipend	Expenses of Divine Service	Diocesan Objects	Missions	Charitable Objects	Church Buildings	Interest on Loans	Miscellaneous	Credit Balance at end of year.	Total	Church Building Fund	Rectory Building Fund	Sunday Schools	Other Items	Total
	Offerory	Contribu- tions	Special Efforts	Sales of Gifts	Entertain- ments
THURSDAY ISLAND	...	157	83	67	...	22	35	9	...	373	4	220	57	...	10	13	55	...	12	2	373	24	42
COOKTOWN	...	1	118	72	54	...	50	...	10	305	...	200	21	...	7	8	28	...	24	17	305	7	12
CROYDON	...	3	81	95	44	...	50	273	...	170	13	...	2	9	18	...	19	...	273	3
DARWIN	111	186	24	146	50	517	46	229	66	...	40	8	90	...	33	4	517	2
MOSSMAN	107	86	...	6	50	...	48	321	45	233	16	...	7	11	4	...	5	...	321	85	85
NORMANTON	...	65	61	35	...	79	71	311	...	125	26	...	50	7	6	...	12	85	311
Totals	69	635	557	165	85	46	280	155	108	2100	95	1177	199	99	52	163	101	1	105	108	2100	116	...	250	...	12	262

The above sums should be compared with those of the next preceding year or two.

F. W. SLADE, Hon. Diocesan Secretary.

1919.

Diocese of Carpentaria.

Bishop :

RT. REV. HENRY NEWTON, B.A.
Thursday Island, Queensland.

Sub-Dean :

REV. F. W. SLADE, B.A.

Diocesan Secretary :

REV. F. W. SLADE, B.A., Thursday Island.

Commissaries :

REV. FRER. PONSONBY, M.A., The Rectory, Devonport, England.
REV. J. JONES, M.A., 242 Pitt Street, Sydney.
REV. W. P. GLOVER, Th.L., Warwick, Q.
REV. J. W. ASHTON, St. Kilda, Melbourne, V.

Clergy :

REV. C. HALL, Th.L., Normanton (on leave).
REV. F. H. T. LANE, Darwin.

REV. C. W. LIGHT, Normanton.
REV. F. W. SLADE, B.A., Thursday Island.
REV. E. TAFFS, Mossman.
REV. J. TWEEDIE, B.A., Cooktown.

Honorary Lay Readers :

MR. H. F. L. FINNISS, Darwin.
MR. G. R. A. PATCHING, Cooktown.
MR. D. A. ROBERTS, Darwin.

Diocesan Council :

REV. F. W. SLADE, B.A. | MR. GEO. CLARK.
REV. J. J. E. DONE. | MR. GILSON FOXTON.
REV. G. A. LUSCOMBE. | MR. A. SULLIVAN.

Honorary Legal Adviser :

HIS HONOUR JUDGE MACNAUGHTON.

Aboriginal Mission, Mitchell River :

REV. B. S. COLE (Chaplain). | MRS. COLE.
MR. J. W. CHAPMAN. | MRS. MATTHEWS.
REV. H. MATTHEWS, J.P. (Supt.)
J. Geibo, T. Solomon, J. Savo.

Roper River Mission :

MR. DYER.
REV. E. D. JOYNT. | MRS. DYER.
REV. H. E. D. WARREN (Supt.)

Torres Straits Mission :

REV. J. J. E. DONE. | REV. W. H. MACFARLANE.
REV. G. A. LUSCOMBE. | MRS. LUSCOMBE. [Th.L.
Miss LUSCOMBE.

The Diocese.

The See was founded in 1900, and consists of such part of Queensland as is bounded by the sea on the north and east, by the Northern Territory on the west, and by a line drawn from lat. S. 19deg. 30min. on the western boundary of Queensland due east to par. 144deg. E. and thence N. to lat. S. 16deg. 40min. and thence east to the sea, together with the whole of the Northern Territory, comprising an area of not less than 620,000 square miles. The population, which is very widely scattered over this immense area, consists of about 10,000 whites, 5,000 Japanese, Chinese, and other aliens, and 35,000 aboriginals. The white population is mainly mining and pastoral. The See town is Thursday Island, a pearling centre north of Cape York.

Finance.

The Diocese has no endowments beyond the Bishop's income of £395 per annum. Every parish needs a grant from central funds which come from subscriptions to the Diocese, and grants from English Societies.

Missions.

Missions are carried on amongst the Japanese at Thursday Island; the South Sea Islanders; the aboriginals on the Mitchell and Roper Rivers; and among the Islanders of the Torres Straits.

Special Offertories.

On Easter Day the offertories are given to the Clergyman of the Parish, and on Good Friday to the Australian Board of Missions.

The "Church Standard."

Posted to any Address for 6s. 6d. per Annum.

The CHURCH STANDARD holds the unique position of being the only independent weekly paper published in the interests of the Church of England in Australasia.

Published every Friday Morning.

Appeals to all Members of the Church of England, Members of the C.E.M.S., Churchwardens, Sideemen and Parochial Councillors, Sunday School Teachers, Lay Readers, Catechists, and Clergy.

Specimen Copies on application to

THE CHURCH PUBLISHING CO. LTD.,
ROYAL INSURANCE BUILDINGS, 16 SPRING STREET, SYDNEY.

Glennie Memorial School, Church of England School for Girls

TOOWOOMBA.

PRINCIPAL - - - MISS LAWRENCE

(Assisted by a highly qualified Resident Staff).

The School is under the direction of
His Grace the Archbishop of Brisbane, and Council.

Thorough Education. Pupils prepared for University Examinations.

MUSIC AND LANGUAGE SPECIALITIES.

Pupils prepared for the Examinations of the Associated Board R.A.M., R.C.M.

The New Building, situated over 2000 feet above sea level in twelve acres of ground, has been constructed according to the most approved modern ideas. There is accommodation for fifty (50) boarders, and all the rooms are light and excellently ventilated. The health and comfort of pupils is specially studied.

THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND HIGH SCHOOL FOR GIRLS.

ST. MARGARET'S HOUSE, THE ALBION, BRISBANE
(ETON HIGH SCHOOL).

Under the Management of the Sisters of the Sacred Advent.

PRINCIPAL - - - THE SUPERIOR OF THE SACRED ADVENT.

Head Mistress: Miss J. M. LYON, L.L.A.,
On London Register of Head Mistresses for Secondary Schools.

Pupils prepared for the Sydney University Examinations and for the Trinity College and Associated Board R.A. Exams.

TERMS FOR BOARDERS - - - UPPER SCHOOL, 10 GUINEAS
LOWER " 8 " "
TERMS FOR DAY PUPILS - - - UPPER SCHOOL, 2 GUINEAS
LOWER " 1½ " "

MUSIC, GERMAN, DANCING, PAINTING—1 GUINEA EXTRA.

For Prospectus, apply to Sister-in-Charge, St. Margaret's House; or to Church House, Ann Street, Brisbane.

ST. CATHARINE'S (Stanthorpe) HIGH SCHOOL FOR GIRLS

Under the Management of the Sisters of the Society of the Sacred Advent.

PRINCIPAL - - - THE SUPERIOR OF THE SACRED ADVENT.

Head Mistress: SISTER EVELYN, S.S.A.,
assisted by a Staff of Competent Teachers.

Pupils prepared for the Sydney University Examinations and for the Trinity College and Associated Board R.A. Exams.

The House is situated 2,500 feet above sea level, and is fitted with all modern improvements as a Boarding School for Girls.

Prospectus on application to the Sister-in-Charge, High School for Girls, Stanthorpe;
or to the Eton High School, Hamilton, Brisbane.

Diocese of Carpentaria.

INTERCESSION PAPER

October, November, December, 1919.

THANKSGIVINGS.

LET US GIVE THANKS :—

1. For the signing of the Peace.
2. For the safety of the Bishop on his journeys.
3. For the life and work of Sara Newton.
4. For the appointment of the Rector of Darwin.

We thank Thee and bless Thee, O Lord.

INTERCESSIONS.

LET US PRAY :—

1. For industrial rest.
2. For the work of the Torres Straits Mission.
3. For Priests for the vacant Parishes in the Diocese.
4. For guidance to those responsible for the arrangements of the Lambeth Conference.
5. For a worthy Thank-Offering for Peace.
6. For the work of the newly consecrated Bishops.

We beseech Thee to hear us, good Lord.

The Carpenterian

FOR THE DIOCESE OF CARPENTARIA, NORTH AUSTRALIA.

Vol. XX.—No. 77.]

THURSDAY ISLAND, JANUARY 1, 1920.

[PRICE 2/6 A YEAR.
POST FREE.]

PUBLISHED ON THE FIRST DAY OF EACH QUARTER.

NOTICE.

All communications to be addressed to the Editor of The Carpenterian, Bishop's House, Thursday Island, to whom subscriptions may be sent. Subscription, 2/6 per annum, post free.

NOTICE TO CONTRIBUTORS.

All contributions of Parish News, etc., must reach the Editor before the last day of February, May, August, and November in each year.

The Bishop's Movements.

The Bishop expects to be in Thursday Island till about the middle of February, 1920, when he hopes to leave for the South en route for England, to attend the Lambeth Conference.

The Bishop's Visit to the Gulf.

(Continued.)

I intended to leave Normanton on Thursday, September 18th, for Croydon; but I was warned it would be unwise to start on that day, as nearly two inches of rain had fallen on Wednesday, so I waited till the Friday. I thought the ground had been so dry after the long spell of months without rain that a day would be enough for the road to become passable. About four miles out from Normanton there is a clay pan—a flat about a-half to three-quarters of a mile across—and this was the part likely to give trouble, and it did. Just on the Normanton side of this flat is the magazine where explosives are or used to be stored, and when I pulled up there an old lady who lives at the house said she thought I was travelling too soon after the rain, as the flat had been under water the day before, but I decided to go on. No water was to be seen, but I soon found the wheels were dragging heavily, sinking an inch into the mud. I was making my mark and leaving it. All went well till I was about half-way across and there I found water: the slight depression where there is a flow in the wet season. I rushed it, afraid to go off the road where there was no water, got half-way through and stopped. The wheels were down half-way to the axle in sticky mud of a most glutinous kind, and I was alone. There was nothing else to be done except to cut sticks from a clump of trees about fifty yards away, drag them to the car, jack up the wheels and corduroy the place about six yards across. It was a picnic. As I moved round the car I sank in the mud nearly up to my ankles, and almost at once had heavy weights of mud attached to my boots. They had to be cleaned off from time to time. Then I hoped there would be sound ground for the jack when I had cleared out a hole in the mud to get the jack under the axle, but there was not, and I found the jack going down instead of the wheels going up when pressure was brought to bear on it. So a bed had to be made of sticks for the base of the jack. After some hours of work all the wheels were jacked up with a bed of sticks under each, corduroy between the wheels and in front. Managed to move the car a couple of feet, and then she was sinking again. More of the same process; and using up the sticks again and again I got the car out and on to fairly sound ground, but it had taken about five hours to do the few feet, counting of course time used in boiling the billy and considering the situation. All went well for about half-a-mile, and just when I had got to a little ridge and thought all was right I ran into a pool of water on one side of the road. I had not worried about it as I was on a rise; I did afterwards, as it meant an hour's work jacking and packing before I got on again. Everything was all right till I got to the Norman River, which I crossed without trouble, but in running up the bed of the river to get to the road again on the railway line I suddenly went into a hole in the rocks, which was all mud and slush filled up by the floods, and nicely moistened by the rain on Wednesday. Here, fortunately, I had the help of an aborigine who had been taking horses to a paddock and who had come to see how I would get on.

The same old game had to be played, and the striking thing was the language of my helper, who interlarded his remarks and suggestions with most lurid specimens of blasphemy. He probably thought he was talking very good English, such as he had picked up from the white men with whom he had worked. It was getting dark before we got out, so I walked up to Glenore Station, leaving the job to be completed in the morning, and never was I so thankful to get to a haven of rest and to get to bed early. I had travelled 14 miles in about 10 hours! bogged three times. I would have given a good deal to have had someone with me. Mrs Taafe, at Glenore, was kindness itself. I bathed, and ate and slept, and next morning early Mr O. Taafe walked down to the car with me—about three-quarters of a mile. She had sunk a little during the night, so we stiffened the bedding a little. Mr Taafe gave a push behind, and, hey, presto! we were off without trouble. Mr Taafe thought there were parts of the road ahead as bad as I had come over the previous day. The one consolation I had had when getting out of the bogs was: the longer I am over this job the better the road is getting ahead—and I was right, for I had no more trouble. I was at May Vale Station early in the afternoon for lunch, and there I picked up a mate to go with me to Croydon, where I arrived before six o'clock in the evening. Eighty miles in about nine hours.

I had left Normanton just after the first boat arrived from South after the strike, and before the goods had been shipped to Croydon by the train. One man I saw in the Normanton Hospital asked me if I would take some butter to his wife. I said yes, but it would probably be oil by the time I arrived. He said that would not matter as they were starving for butter, and in any condition it would be acceptable. Someone else also wanted butter, and a third party potatoes, so the car came in handy again for taking supplies!

I spent Sunday, September 21st, S. Matthew's Day, and the fourth anniversary of my consecration, in Croydon, where I celebrated the Holy Communion at 8 a.m., baptised an infant, spoke to the Sunday School children, attended an informal meeting of the Parochial Council, and preached at Evensong. On Monday, September 22nd, I left with Mr Lane to visit the Georgetown district, and we had a passenger with us glad of the opportunity to visit some friends on the road. We spent that night at the Little River, where we had service in the evening. The next day we got to the Gilbert, having had a little trouble in one creek. Mr McIvor met us at the Gilbert and pulled us across the long bed of sand with horses. The bed of the Gilbert is more than half a mile wide, and sand all the way. As we arrived before the time I had arranged we boiled our billy and just waited; Mr McIvor was there punctually to time.

We were not able to arrange about a service for that night at the Gilbert, but we fixed up everything for one to be held on our return. The schools in the Etheridge Shire were all closed owing to the influenza epidemic which had been serious at Georgetown, so we were not able to visit any of the schools. On Wednesday evening we were at Forest Home Station where we had a fine service; and a celebration of Holy Communion with four communicants on Thursday morning before we left for Georgetown. There were a good many calls to be made on the road, and some children at a couple of the places to receive a lesson in the catechism, and we were glad to do this as the schools were closed. Our passenger had left us at Forest Home, getting to her destination by buggy ahead of us. Mr Moran who was to be our host at Georgetown was away—we were a day ahead of our time—but we got the keys of the house and made ourselves at home. On Friday morning we were busy visiting the people and the hospital, where there were patients very weak from after effects of influenza; two people had died from it the month before. On Friday afternoon we left in the car for The Islands Station, about nineteen miles out from Georgetown. All went well and the road was fairly good till we were about six miles from the Homestead, then we struck a big sandy creek as we were warned we should, and there is another about five miles further on. Mr Lane and I searched for a better crossing but could find none, so we decided to leave the car and walk the six miles. It really did not seem worth while slaving to get across two big creeks and to have to cross them again on the way back the next day. We arrived at The Islands after dark, and the next morning Mr Lane baptised an infant child of the Manager. It was really for this we went out as Mr Lane had been asked about the baptism when he was on a visit previously to the district, and we could not get word out to the station to let the people know when we would be in Georgetown. After the baptism Mr Neal drove us to the creek where we had left the car, and we were in Georgetown before lunch.

On Sunday, September 28th, I celebrated the Holy Communion at Georgetown at 8 a.m., when there were sixteen communicants, and drove out to the Durham for a second celebration at 11 a.m.; addressed the children in the afternoon, and preached at Evensong in Georgetown.

On Monday we went on to Forsayth where, after visiting the people, we had Evensong and baptism in the Court House during the evening. On Tuesday morning there was a celebration of Holy Communion in the Court House at Forsayth, and after breakfast we left for Crooked Creek, calling on various people and visiting the Hospital at Georgetown as we passed through. That day we had our first blow out, the only one I had during the whole time I was in the Gulf, and that was due to a weak tyre. At Crooked Creek we had service on Tuesday night, and, picking up our passenger to take her home, left for the Gilbert River on Wednesday morning. We had lunch at Forest Home and time to visit the people at the Gilbert River Settlement before dark. Nearly all the people at Chadhurst, the residence of Mr and Mrs McIvor, were laid up with colds so we went to the hotel for the night. On Thursday morning very early we went down the river to Mrs Pearce's farm, about six miles, for a celebration of the Holy Communion, taking with us another communicant for the service, back to the crossing where we had a horse from Chadhurst brought by the policeman stationed at the Gilbert to pull us over the river, and we went sailing on till suddenly, without any rhyme or reason, on a good piece of road the car stopped dead and refused to move. We tried everything we could think of, tested the benzine, cleaned plugs, washed out commutator, and all the time I confess I was convinced the trouble was in the magneto connection, but we had no screwdriver and my pocket knife would not act as one. It was made in Japan, and it was very interesting to see how far one could bend the blade without breaking it. I showed several people it would go through 90° and stand straightening afterwards! but once I must have gone further for it really did snap off! The one thing I would not touch was the adjustment of the coils in the box. I did not mind patting them affectionately and pushing them down and packing them forward, but no more. We spent about three hours over lunch and discussion and other things, and then Mr Lane produced quite a good knife, so good he did not seem to care for it to be abused! We took out the three screws, cleaned the connection, in which we found a little bit of waste, turned the crank, and the engine started. There is a wonderful difference between an engine that won't go and an engine that will, and great is the effect of the change on one's feelings and way of looking on life! We called at the Little River, went on to Rosebush Station for the night, and got to Croydon by midday on Friday, October 3rd.

On Sunday Mr Lane celebrated at Croydon at 8 a.m., and came with me to Golden Gate, where I celebrated Holy Communion and preached. I also addressed the children at a service in the afternoon at Croydon, and preached at Evensong. A meeting of the Parochial Council was held during the afternoon. On Monday, October 6th, Mr Lane and I left for Esmeralda Station, intending to return to Croydon on Tuesday. We had been told that the road was so bad and two creeks so heavy that we should be lucky if we got back by Thursday, and do extremely well if we were back on Wednesday. I think from what we were told we really should not have ventured had we not arranged to meet horses at the Nundah creek. Teams had gone out ahead of us, and the manager of Esmeralda promised not to leave Nundah till mid-day on Monday, so as to pull us through. We made an early start on Monday morning; got through the first creek without trouble. The crossing is soon after leaving the Georgetown Road, and as we were getting up the bank Mr Lane, who had got out to push, called out that someone wanted to speak to me. I pulled up as soon as I could, and a man came up panting so hard he could hardly speak. He wanted to know where we were going. I said, "Esmeralda." "Oh, that's all right," he said; "I thought you were going to Georgetown and had taken the wrong road. Many people do that." He had run over half-a-mile to put us right. So do some country people consider travellers. By 11 o'clock we were at another creek and thought it must be Nundah, but there were no signs of our friends, and the creek did not look so very uncrossable, indeed we ran through it without trouble, and thinking there might be another a little further on we kept going—but no sign of another creek appeared. We knew Mr Jauncey would not fail to wait for us. So we were very doubtful as to what to do. There were plain wheel tracks we had been following. We were told that Nundah hole was the only water on the road. Mr Lane got out to practise a little bush craft. He looked for horse tracks, and the only ones he could find were of those going to Croydon. The teams were not ahead. We had not passed them. We decided our track was plain enough to shew we had passed, and went on, getting to Esmeralda about two o'clock in the afternoon. I offered to go back and meet the teams, but Mrs Jauncey did not think that necessary. The man who was travelling with her husband knew every square foot of the country, and had probably gone off the road somewhere to where he knew there was water, but a woman with a young baby was with the party, so we did go back during the afternoon some eight miles till we met the teams, and took over the woman and the child. We had seen the dust and drawn off the road so as not to frighten the horses, and turned in the direction of Esmeralda. Mr Jauncey, who had had a very hard doing on a very hot day, on a dry, dusty road, thought we were broken down. He would not believe us at first when we said we had been there and back. His experiences in a car on that road were of the worst. We went on, and there is one woman in the North who was glad to see the Bishop's car. Southern people have no idea what hardships wives of pioneers put up with, and what risks they run. That woman, with an infant not a month old was travelling some 90 miles on a waggonette, heavily laden with stores, the horses weak after the long dry season, the sun burning hot, the road dusty, and when they were on the road something went wrong with the load. Her husband got down to put things right, leaving her with the reins. Something startled a young horse in the team, and the lot started. Fortunately a black boy standing by had the presence of mind to jamb on the break with his hand, and the husband got to the head of the team or there must have been a bad smash. We had service that night at Esmeralda, a celebration of the Holy Communion, and a baptism next morning before we started back for Croydon. The creeks did give us a little trouble going back, but although we called at a house—the friendly person's who the day before thought we had taken the wrong road—we were back in Croydon before dark. On Wednesday we went on to Wallabadah Station, returning early on Thursday morning, and at mid-day I left alone for Normanton.

I travelled as far as May Vale Station in the afternoon. There we had Evensong and a celebration the next morning. So far all had gone well, and I hoped to be in Normanton early in the afternoon, but the road in places dodges amongst ant-beds and stumps. Once I missed an ant-bed and hit a tree, but did not do much damage—but when I was about five or six miles from Normanton, travelling along a good piece of road, I suddenly found myself sitting with the steering wheel detached from the spindle and loose in my hands. The nut had worked off. I suppose I ought at once to have stopped the engine, but I got the idea into my head that I must get control over the steering and tried to put the wheel on. Had I done so it would have been useless, as of course the key was gone. The car swerved off the road and hit a tree—fair and square—and stopped. There I was with a bent axle, the key nut for the steering wheel gone. I backed out clear of the tree, found the engine would work, and then walked back to look for the nut. No sign of it, and of course no hope of finding the key in the dust. Out came the tool-box—there were all sorts of odds and ends in it. A split pin acted as key, a nut was found which took a couple of threads. I started again and travelled slowly, and if the car did wobble from one side of the road to the other, I got to Normanton safely before dark, and was thankful to arrive with no broken bones.

Of course repairs had to be made, and it was Wednesday morning in the following week before they were finished; not much damage had been done. There was plenty to occupy me in Normanton: Sunday services, visiting the school and the people, Parochial Council meeting, and other things filled up the time. On Wednesday, October 15th, I started again to visit the Mitchell River Mission and the stations on the way.

In the three weeks I had been away from Normanton I had travelled nearly 700 miles.

We had held 24 services, nine of which were celebrations of Holy Communion, baptized four infants, and we had visited many people on and off the road. There is plenty of hard work with a car; there is no fun travelling alone, especially when things go wrong; there are anxious times, but it would be absolutely impossible to do the work without a car. As it was we had to leave out some stations, but that was because I was so late getting to the Gulf, and the possibility of early storms had to be considered. I wanted about another fortnight to do the district thoroughly.

All Souls' (Quetta Memorial Church), Thursday Island.

A very successful moonlight fête was held in the Cathedral grounds in aid of parochial funds on the night of Thursday, November 6th. The arrangements were made in a few weeks, and those responsible for them are to be congratulated on the success of their efforts.

The Sub-Dean was away for a fortnight at the end of October, visiting the Mitchell River Mission. He was glad of the opportunity of doing so, made by the trip taken to the Mitchell by the "Herald" to bring up the Bishop. The Rev. G. A. Luscombe, of S. Paul's, Moa, was in charge of the Cathedral parish during the absence of the Vicar.

On Sunday, November 2nd, there was an ordination in the Cathedral, when the Rev. H. Matthews, Superintendent of the Mitchell River Mission, was admitted to the Holy Order of Priests.

On Sunday, November 30th, Joseph Lui and Poey Passi, two Torres Straits Islanders, students of S. Paul's College, Moa, were made Deacons by the Bishop of the Diocese, in his Cathedral Church.

So November, 1919, was an important month in the history of the Cathedral.

The Rev. F. W. Slade, Sub-Dean of the Cathedral and Vicar of the parish, left Thursday Island by the "Musgrave" on Saturday, December 6th, on three months' furlough. During the absence of the Vicar the Bishop will be in charge of the parish.

On Sunday, November 30th, the Vicar presented ten candidates—five male and five female—for Confirmation.

Christ Church, Cooktown.

The Parochial Council has undertaken to make an effort to raise an additional £30 a year for the Church funds of the parish, and the Diocesan Council has agreed to increase the grant by an equal amount for two years in the hope that there may be an improvement in the town and district during that time. This will make it possible for the Wardens to guarantee the Rector a stipend of £200 a year—little enough in these days of high prices.

The Rev. James Tweedie, having resigned the parish of Cooktown, left the parish at the end of October. The Rev. F. H. T. Lane arrived early in November to act as locum tenens for three months. The Rev. B. S. Cole, Chaplain of the Mitchell River Mission, has been appointed Rector, and hopes to take up his work in the month of February, 1920.

Personal.

The Rev. O. W. Light left Brisbane by the "Montoro" for Darwin. The "Montoro" was due to leave Sydney on December 1st, so Mr Light should have arrived in Darwin about December 12th. The parish will have been vacant a little more than seven months.

All Christians are asked to pray for the Reunion of the Church during the Octave, January 18—January 25, 1920; that we may all sincerely desire that Unity to be a fact, that hindrances of all kinds may be removed, and especially for the work of the Conference on Faith and Order, organized by the Church in America. That Conference may be held during the year 1920. The Bishop hopes that not only in the public services during the Octave, but also at their private devotions, all Church-people in the Diocese of Carpentaria will pray for Unity.

The Primate of Australia has received a cablegram from the Archbishop of Canterbury telling him that an appeal was to be issued in England by the Archbishop, together with the Free Church leaders, and a contemporaneous appeal by the Pope for collections on Holy Innocents' Day (December 28th), for relief of famine-stricken areas, especially children. The appeal was to be published in England on November 24th, and the Archbishop asked the Primate if he would do the same thing. The letter was too late for anything to be done in the Diocese of Carpentaria on the day suggested, and besides the Bishop had arranged for a service in the Cathedral on that day, when the offerings made by the Heralds of the King throughout the Diocese for the Thank-offering of the Australian Board of Missions for Peace and Victory will be presented.

The Bishop hopes that the Wardens of the various parishes in the Diocese of Carpentaria will give the alms at one or all the services on Sunday, January 25th, to the relief of the famine-stricken areas in Europe. That Sunday comes in the Octave of the Intercessions for Unity, and it is appropriate that in connection with the Octave we do something to shew we realize that we must bear one another's burdens. Those who cannot be at service on Sunday, January 25th, might send a donation to the Bishop at Thursday Island.

Ordinations.

PRIEST.

On Sunday, November 2nd, 1919, the Bishop of the Diocese ordained the Rev. H. Matthews, Superintendent of the Mitchell River Mission, Priest, in the Cathedral, Thursday Island. Mattins was said at 9 a.m. by the Rev. J. J. E. Done, and the preacher at the ordination at 10 a.m. was the Rev. F. W. Slade, sub-dean of the Cathedral, who also presented the candidate. The litany was said by the Rev. J. J. E. Done, the special suffrage by the Bishop. The Rev. F. W. Slade and the Rev. J. J. E. Done joined in the act of ordination. The Bishop after the ordination licensed the Rev. H. Matthews as chaplain of the Mitchell River Mission.

DEACONS.

On Sunday, November 30th, 1919, Advent Sunday, the Bishop of the Diocese admitted to the Holy Order of Deacons Joseph Lui and Poey Passi, two Torres Straits Islanders, the first to receive Holy Orders. It was a wonderful service, over twenty of the Church officials in the Islands had come to be present at the ordination; these had seats allotted them in the nave of the Cathedral. There were many other Islanders present, all were wonderfully quiet and reverent during the service. Most of them had made their Communion at the early service, two only of them, the father of Joseph and the uncle of Poey communicated at the ordination, so the service was not so long as to be wearisome. The candidates answered the questions distinctly, and though they were naturally nervous, they were not self-conscious, and the Rev. Joseph Lui read the Gospel distinctly and reverently. Mattins was said by the Rev. G. A. Luscombe, Principal of S. Paul's College, Moa, where the two candidates had been prepared for ordination, at 9 a.m., and the Churchwardens from the Islands were present at the service. The ordination was fixed for 10 a.m., and at that hour a procession left the vestry of the Cathedral. The Rev. G. A. Luscombe carried the cross, one made by an Islander of wongai timber which grows in the Islands. The sermon, which is published in this issue of The Carpentarian, was preached by the Rev. J. J. E. Done, the senior member of the staff of the Torres Straits Mission, who also presented the candidates to the Bishop. The litany was said by the Rev. G. A. Luscombe, the Bishop using the special suffrage. After the epistle the candidates were examined by the Bishop, and there was absolute stillness in the Church as the answers were given distinctly.

The testaments given to the newly-ordained Deacons were, to Joseph Lui the one given to the Bishop of Carpentaria when he was ordained Deacon in S. Paul's Cathedral, London, by the Bishop of London—afterwards Archbishop of Canterbury; to Poey Passi the one given to the Principal of S. Paul's College, Moa, when he was ordained by the Bishop of Newcastle, New South Wales.

The service means much, more than can be expressed. It was an occasion for great thankfulness to Almighty God; it was an earnest of the great development of Church life and of spiritual growth amongst the Christians of the Torres Straits Islands; it meant that the Church is not to be something extraneous, something foreign, but of the people; it was a symbol of the Catholicity of the Church which can take into her bosom and make her own people of all races.

The Rev. Joseph Lui and the Rev. Poey Passi were licensed as Assistant Curates to the Rev. J. J. E. Done, the one to live at Dauan and to work amongst the people of Dauan and Saibai, the other to live at Boigu and work amongst the people of that Island. These three Islands are the ones that have been less in touch with the outside world than the other Islands of the Torres Straits. The people do not know so much English, and work amongst them is more difficult for the white Priests of the staff.

The Carpentarian

FOR THE DIOCESE OF CARPENTARIA,
NORTH AUSTRALIA.

Vol. XX., No. 77. Thursday Island, January 1, 1920

A Sermon

preached in

All Souls' Cathedral, Thursday Island,

by

THE REV. J. J. E. DONE,

at the Ordination of

JOSEPH LUI and POEY PASSI,

the first two Torres Straits Islanders to be admitted to Holy Orders, on

Advent Sunday, November 30th, 1919.

We belong to the Holy Catholic Church, the Church which our Lord Himself founded, and which has come down to us through the ages, through those whom He Himself choose to be the first witnesses, and to whom He gave the authority to pass on what they themselves had received. From the first there have been the same three orders of ministers—Bishops, Priests and Deacons—each with its special work which, when combined, suffice to build us up in our most holy Faith. It is not in my province this morning to discuss the proofs of this, but it will be sufficient to point out that the preface to our ordinal commences with these words: "It is evident unto all men diligently reading Holy Scripture and ancient authors, that from the Apostles' time there have been these orders of ministers in Christ's Church: Bishops, Priests and Deacons." The commission then that all Deacons have received since the time of our Lord is about to be given this morning to these two men, who will in the Divinely appointed way receive from God Himself the authority for their work.

The occasion is unique in the history of the Australian Church, for although more than a century and a-quarter have passed since the first Christian service was held in Sydney, these, our Torres Straits brethren, are the first of the native races of our land to be prepared and commissioned in this way.

Three weeks ago in this Cathedral the Rev. Henry Matthews was ordained to the Priesthood, but the authority which he received when ordained Deacon is exactly the same as will be given to these men. Surely we can look for a big advance in the Church in these parts, for it will at least teach our people in the Straits that they form an essential part of the Church Catholic, and that without them and the many races who are yet to be gathered in, the Church cannot make its full witness for our Lord.

Every race has its own contribution to make to Christian thought, and time will show what peculiar part the Torres Straits Islanders have to play in that greatest of all work: the extension of Christ's kingdom upon earth.

This is the first great step, and it will probably take much preparation and testing before that greater step can be taken, and the holy order of Priesthood, with its wider opportunities and responsibilities, conferred upon them.

Like S. Stephen (one of the first Deacons), Deacons must be full of faith and of the Holy Ghost. By careful and painstaking study of God's Word, constant tuition by those whose duty it is, and by prayer and the use of the Sacraments, faith is strengthened and built up, and God's Holy Spirit, given in Baptism and Confirmation—whose abiding presence is with God's children—prepares them for the further gifts and the responsibilities to be undertaken.

The work of a Deacon is plainly set forth in Holy Scripture and in our Prayer Book, and vows are required before the actual laying on of hands, so that none may assume the office without having first of all given due consideration to all that will be demanded of them.

You must assist the Priest in divine service, and specially when he ministers the Holy Communion, and you will read the Holy Scriptures in the Church.

You must instruct the youth in the Catechism so that children may be established in the Faith, and be ready to give a reason for the belief that is in them. The importance of this cannot be over-emphasised—for it is while we are young, while our opinions are as yet unformed, and before our impressions are distorted and confused by sin and the materialistic things of life—that the pure faith of the Gospel can best take root and grow, for after all, good characters, noble lives can only be satisfactorily built up on a foundation that is spiritual.

The sick and poor must be your especial care, and you will be required to search them out so that the Priest may be able to minister to their bodily and spiritual needs.

You must be extremely careful to regulate your own lives and the lives of your families according to the teaching of Christ, so as to be examples to those to whom you will be sent. This applies in all things. As you have taken an oath of allegiance to our King, so you must fulfil that by a ready obedience to the laws of the land and all lawful authority; and as you profess belief in the Holy Scriptures, so must you try with all your might to live as becometh the Gospel of Christ, lest others who look to you for guidance be led away by your disobedience, or your failure to live up to your profession. Of course you will not be perfect—perfection is not given to any in this world—but people will easily know whether you are endeavouring to live as nearly as possible as you preach.

But above all remember you are called to this Holy Office not for any personal glorification, but to serve God for the promoting of His glory and the edification of His people; in other words you must, in the words of our Blessed Lord Himself, "Let your light so shine before men that they may see your good works and glorify your Father, which is in heaven."

It is every Christian's duty to try so to follow in the steps of our Master that others may be attracted and brought to know and love Him too; but more especially is it yours, who are called and authorised to publicly serve Him. We have to build on the Foundation that is already laid, the Chief Corner Stone, our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and our chief must be so to live for Christ that our people may forget us in seeing Him.

When S. John the Baptist was preaching in the wilderness, and crowds flocked to hear him, the Jews sent to know who he was, and his reply was, "I am the voice of one crying in the wilderness: make straight the way of the Lord." A voice only. It was his message he asked them to heed, forgetting him, the messenger, and afterwards when he saw his own followers leaving him for Jesus, he said, "He must increase but I must decrease." In the same way must we strive that in all things He, and He alone, may be glorified.

May God the Holy Ghost, who comes to you this day, so strengthen you that you may prove faithful: faithful to yourselves, faithful to your people, faithful to Him.

Torres Straits Mission.

THE BISHOP'S VISIT TO THE WESTERN ISLANDS.

The Bishop left Thursday Island in the "Herald" on Monday, November 10th, for Badu. As the "Herald" was going on to Mabuiag and Mr Done wanted to avoid a beat against the tide he sailed straight to Adam, and the Bishop went across to Badu in a dinghy where he met Mr Luscombe who had spent the Sunday at Badu. Evensong was said and the Bishop preached; he also interviewed some people after Mattins the next morning. On Tuesday Mr Luscombe and the Bishop crossed to Adam in the "Banzai," and the Bishop preached at Evensong there and celebrated the Holy Communion next morning. He then got aboard the "Banzai" to go to Mabuiag, and Mr Luscombe walked across Moa Island from Adam to S. Paul's. It was a quick and quiet run to Mabuiag, where Mr Done had twenty-seven candidates—fifteen male and twelve female—ready for the Confirmation in the evening. On Thursday morning, after the celebration of Holy Communion—when there were sixty-one communicants—the Bishop, with Mr Done, left in the "Herald" for Saibai. Again the wind was favourable, and we were at anchor before dark.

There were not sufficient lamps for service to be held in the Church, so Evensong was said in the village outside by the light of two or three hurricane lamps. On most of the islands Evensong is said before dark. On Friday morning the Bishop remained on board the "Herald" writing letters, while Mr Done went ashore for Confirmation classes and a marriage. At Evensong in the afternoon there was a baby to be baptized and fourteen candidates—seven male, seven female—to be confirmed. Arrangements were made here and at all the other islands visited for two Churchwardens to go to Thursday Island for the ordination on November 30th, and as it was not advisable to interfere more than could be avoided with the work of the island boats getting pearl-shell, the "Herald" was to pick up the Churchwardens at Mabuiag. After a celebration at Saibai very early on Saturday morning—when there were ninety-two communicants—the "Herald" left for Boigu. Tide and wind were favourable, and the anchor was dropped before three o'clock in the afternoon—which made it possible to get ashore and have Evensong before dark; and still more important, before the tide ran out. To get ashore for the celebration on Sunday morning more than a quarter of a mile of mud had to be crossed, as the tide was dead low. Down to the knees one sank through soft mud, in which are mixed fine lumps of coral, turtle and fish bones, one foot going down as the other was dragged out—a very dreary business—and as the foot descended into the mud water was squeezed out through the crab-holes, of which there are many—a weary, dreary business; and at high tide one lands on nice clean sand at the edge of the village! There were thirty-eight communicants at the celebration of Holy Communion. Arrangements were made for light refreshments on shore after the service. No one was anxious to travel across the mud again. Ten candidates—six male, four female—were confirmed after Mattins had been said. Some of the candidates were out pearl-diving when the "Herald" arrived on the Saturday, but as soon as she was sighted people had been sent across the island to light a fire to signal the boat to come in, and she arrived on Saturday night. The tide was in when the morning services were over, so lunch could be eaten on board; but it was necessary to send the "Herald" some four miles down the Strait that afternoon before the tide turned, or we should be delayed on Monday morning waiting for the tide—it would be impossible to beat against tide and wind in the narrow channel. The dinghy was left behind to take the Bishop and Mr Done down to the "Herald" after Evensong on Sunday afternoon.

A very early start was made on Monday morning, November 17th, for Dauan, but the wind was light and the tide turned, so it was half-past three in the afternoon before the anchor was dropped. Very soon after the party had got ashore a canoe was seen coming from Saibai, and on board was the Government teacher bringing letters he wanted taken in to Thursday Island for the post. The canoe came along at a great pace, sailing with a fair wind, and was a beautiful sight—but when it got near the "Herald" something went wrong with the steering-oar, and smash went the canoe into the bow of the boat; down came one mast, and the other was leaning over badly. It was calm water and there was no danger. The crew got the canoe alongside the "Herald" and hung on, got the sails in out of the water, and crawled in with the tide to the shore.

Evensong was said before dark in the beautiful little Church at Dauan, and Mr Done had his Confirmation candidates for final instruction. On Tuesday morning the Bishop celebrated Holy Communion and confirmed seven candidates—three male, four female—after Mattins at 11 a.m. There was a wedding before Evensong in the afternoon, and these services were taken early as there was cooking to be done for the wedding feast. During the cooking—when the village was full of life, and fun, and business—the bride sat silent, lone, and solitary and sad, on a mat in the village in the midst of cooking parties, a perfect picture of misery. While these operations were in progress the Bishop and Mr Done, with a party of natives, went for a walk to the gardens and listened to a story of old days, which told of a party of women possessed of evil powers who lived on the big hill on Dauan, and lured a young man of beautiful figure and fine physique to their cave on the mountain and kept him there for months, until his longing for his own people became too strong, and he managed to get away in safety. He, with his friends, made it too uncomfortable for the women to remain on Dauan, so they swam away under the sea to another island far away. The cooks for the wedding feast had cooked a fowl for the Missionaries, and the Bishop begged a couple of little doughboys he had seen them making of scraped cassava and banana—Mr Done was not anxious to test the cooking. Two were put in the basin with the fowl and sent aboard; but, alas! the cook on the "Herald" did not notice them when he took the fowl out of the basin after dusk, and they must have been returned with the dish. No doubt they were glutinous and adhered to the dish. At all events the Bishop had to do without the delicacy.

An early start on Wednesday morning, November 19th, made it possible to get to Yam Island by three in the afternoon, and to have Evensong ashore. The next morning after a celebration of the Holy Communion early, forty-two communicants, the Bishop confirmed thirteen candidates, seven male and six female, after mattins had been said, and the "Herald" left for Wareber, one of the "Three Sisters," soon after midday. The tide and wind were so favourable that we were able to anchor at Wareber before dark though we had not expected to get more than half way. There are very few people living on this Island, and they are an offshoot of Coconut Island. Some years ago the Government tried to get the Coconut people to migrate to Wareber as there is no water on Coconut; it is a small Island and there is no ground for gardens while on Wareber there is good soil and good

Bishop of Carpentaria.

Rev. G. A. Luscombe (Principal, S. Paul's College, Moa).

Rev. Joseph Lui (left), and Rev. Poey Passi (right), the first Torres Straits Native Deacons, ordained on Advent Sunday in All Souls' Cathedral, Thursday Island, Q.

water can be got by sinking. The Coconut people have to send a boat to Wareber to bring them water, a distance of about twenty miles. Some of the people moved, most did not, and no one knows why they object to such a natural move. They have built a small Church at Wareber and in it we had Evensong by the uncertain light of a couple of hurricane lamps; a larger Church is being built. We had called at Wareber as there were a few candidates for confirmation to be taken on to Coconut, and also one of the Churchwardens to be taken to Thursday Island. We left very early on Friday morning for Coconut, and passed the boat that takes water to the people there. On it were some candidates and they had to be signalled to follow us. We were anchored before midday, and at Evensong in the afternoon Mr Done baptised eight adults who were to be confirmed. The confirmation (twenty-two candidates, six male sixteen female) was at night, hurricane lamps being numerous enough to give quite a decent light. We had gained time on our schedule, and it was possible for us to be back at Mabuiag for Sunday, so after a celebration early on Saturday morning—twenty-four communicants—we started for Mabuiag and arrived there at 4.30 p.m., catching a turtle on the way. Sunday and Monday was spent at Mabuiag, the services on the Sunday being very fine. A boat had come in from Thursday Island overnight with visitors, and at tea on Sunday Mrs Done had a party of eight in the Mission House! Mr Done was very busy on Monday deepening his well, as water was getting short. There were about 1,000 gallons of beautiful clear water in the underground tank, but a couple of weeks before a big gohanna in an advanced stage of decomposition was found in the tank, and beautifully clear though the water is Mrs Done had prejudices against using it for human consumption! The Bishop arranged with one of the Mabuiag Churchwardens to go to Murray as a Lay Missionary for a year or two. Bani was willing to go, but Mrs Bani thought it was too far for her and the children to go. The Bishop explained that she must go willingly; that if she were miserable and unhappy it would spoil her husband's work; that she must decide for herself. She thought the Bishop would be angry with her if she did not go, and when she was told he would not be angry, though he would be sorry, she decided to go!

After a rather heavy beat on Tuesday we anchored at S. Paul's, Moa, where we spent the night. We had picked up most of the Churchwardens of the Western Islands at Mabuiag, so we were a full ship. Fortunately an island boat from Yam, which had brought the Churchwardens from there to S. Paul's, was going on to Thursday Island, so we were able to tranship some of our passengers, and the "Banzai" brought the rest in on Thursday, when Mr Luscombe came in with the ordinands. We were anchored soon after mid-day in Thursday Island on Wednesday, November 26th.

It had been a good trip. On the whole the weather was good. Mr Done worked the tides well, and the wind was favourable—more so than we should expect at this time of the year. The Bishop was away sixteen days. Ten places were visited, and ninety-two candidates were confirmed. A few candidates at Coconut were missed: they were away on the island boat at the time of the Bishop's visit.

The Bishop's Visit to the Mitchell.

I left Normanton by car on Wednesday, October 15th, to visit the Mitchell River Mission, and I had as a companion for the trip Mr Murphy, who was going to the Mission to take charge of the cattle. The herd has increased so much that it is necessary to have someone in charge of them. I intended to travel via Vanrook and Dunbar, but had to change plans on the way. There was once a punt by which one could cross the river at Normanton; there is not one now; so it was necessary to go up the river about 14 miles and about 17 down the other side to do one mile, and the road is not good on the other side. We made a late start, and could not get to Maggieville Station the first night, especially as we had trouble in some sandy patches, so we camped out. The next morning we were at Maggieville early, and I read the burial service over the grave of a man who had died there a month before. We got on the same day to Delta Station, but walked the last four miles, leaving the car, as the Smithburne is a heavy crossing, and we were coming back the same road the next day. We had service at Delta, and Mr Clarke, the manager, drove us to the car next morning, and by mid-day we were at Stirling Station, where we stopped the night. I suggested holding a service, but none of the men wished to come. The next day we left for Vanrook, a short run of 22 miles, but we had the Gilbert to cross not far from Stirling. The manager of Stirling had sent a horse to pull us through, but the animal was not up to it, so the man went back and another was brought. The two took us through the long stretch of sand without trouble. Sunday was spent at Vanrook. We had a celebration of Holy Communion in the early morning, and after breakfast I read the burial service at the graves of two men who had died on the station about a year ago. We found that the horses at Vanrook were in such low condition that no help could be given us to get across the three or four rivers between Vanrook and Dunbar, so we decided to go the coast road, via Macaroni and Waterloo. We were at Macaroni Station by lunch time, and early in the afternoon got to the camp of a man who is building yards not far from the Statten. He had two fine horses, and pulled us over the sandy bed of the river next morning. We got on past "Gum Holes" and Waterloo Station without trouble, and made for the lower crossing of the Nassau, but found that impossible as the tide was in, and whether or no we could hardly get up the bank on the other side. We turned back and ran across country up the Nassau to Killarney, and there we found help. Mr McDonald brought horses to the upper crossing and we were over before dark. We camped there for the night, made an early start but got caught in a small sandy gully about a mile on. We worked and slaved for hours, and then Mr Murphy walked back to Killarney for help. A horse was brought and in a few minutes we were out of our trouble—but not for long. A good run got us to the Scrutton. We managed to get three-parts over and stopped. It was no use trying to do anything, so we walked on four miles to Lochnagar. Camped there the night and early in the morning Mr Simpson took us back in his car and sent on a horse to pull us out, which took very little time.

By midday we were at Trubanaman where we found Mr Cole in charge of the children. We had lunch with him, and went on to the new station, Kowanyama, in the afternoon. Very soon after our arrival word came from the landing that the "Francis Pritt" had arrived with Miss Smith on board. A horse was sent for her to ride up but it was too late, and next morning I took the car down to meet her, which I did half way to the landing. The next day, Saturday, the "Herald" arrived with Mr Matthews, Mr Slade, Mr Done, and a visitor from New South Wales, so on Sunday we had to take the car to the landing to get luggage. The horses had already done one trip and they were weak. The services were held on Sunday at Kowanyama, and Mr Oole had come from Trubanaman for the day. On Monday I drove Mr Slade and Mr Oole to Trubanaman, as Mr Slade was anxious to see the first settlement.

Tuesday was a Quiet Day for the staff, the services and addresses being taken by Mr Slade. On Wednesday we left for Thursday Island by the "Herald," and the car was left at the Mission Station. Mr Matthews is using it and finds it very useful indeed. He can do in a day what horses and dray take nearly a week to do.

There are signs of very marked progress at the Mission Station. There is every prospect of good supplies of food being grown. Everything is in a very primitive state, the buildings of grass and palm leaf, but a great deal of work has been done. Mr Matthews has the sawmill going. Mr Chapman has grown tobacco, cotton, yams, taro, sweet potatoes, cassava bananas, varieties of sorghum, pumpkins, and garden vegetables. He hopes to reduce expenses with home grown tobacco, and he has made brooms from millet. School work has been carried on at the old station but it is rather too far away for effective supervision, and Mr Matthews hopes to have a new settlement next year about two miles from Kowanyama.

Motor Car Fund.

This fund is now closed, and those who sent donations are heartily thanked for their generosity, and in making it possible for the car to be paid for so quickly. The car has been a great convenience to the Bishop, and enabled him to do work he could not have attempted without it.

SUBSCRIPTIONS TO "THE CARPENTARIAN":—Mrs Clarke 2/6, Rev. F. Ballance 2/6, Mrs Huband Smith 3/-, Mrs Fred Morris 2/6, Mr H. J. Lloyd 10/-; per Rev. E. Taffs—Mr Ohantrey 5/-, Mr Rankin 2/6, Mrs Ashley (1919 and 1920) 5/-, Mrs McIvor 3/-, Mr Rigby 2/6, Mr Allom 2/6, Mr Kershaw 2/6; per Rev. F. Lane—Mrs Aplin 2/6, Mrs Greig 2/6, Mr Sabine 2/6, Miss Thomas 2/6; per Miss Byrnes, Cocktown, 9/-; Miss Quinan, 2/6.

The Rev. F. H. T. Lane has accepted the position of Chaplain to Yarrabah, and will take up his duties there at the end of January, 1920. Mr. Lane was one of the students at Bishop's College, Thursday Island, in 1906, and when it was decided to send the postulants for Orders for the Diocese of Carpentaria to St. Francis' College, Nundah, Brisbane, Mr Lane went there to complete his course. He was ordained Deacon in December, 1909, by the Archbishop of Brisbane for the Bishop of Carpentaria, and Priest in February, 1911, by the Bishop of Carpentaria in Thursday Island.

There is not a Priest in charge of the Normanton parish yet, but the Bishop hopes that soon one will be available. At present there is not a Priest in the whole of the Gulf, a district of at least 30,000 square miles.

Church of England High School for Girls

HERBERTON.

Under the management of the Sisters of the Sacred Advent.

QUARTERLY FEES:

BOARDERS:			EXTRA SUBJECTS:
Tuition and Board	£15	15 0	Drawing { If both subjects are taken, the fee is 30/-	1	1 0
Laundry	1	1 0	Painting {	1	1 0
DAY SCHOLARS	2	12 6	Woodcarving	1	1 0
			Shorthand	12	6
EXTRA SUBJECTS:			Bookkeeping	12	6
Pianoforte	1	11 6	Typewriting	12	6

There are a few bursaries available.

For further particulars apply to the Sister-in-charge, St. Anne's School, Townsville.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND

Day & Boarding School for Girls

"DALTON," WILLS STREET, TOWNSVILLE.

Conducted by the Sisters of the Sacred Advent, Brisbane.
Splendid Situation. Healthy Locality.

QUARTERLY FEES.

BOARDERS—			EXTRA SUBJECTS—
Tuition, Board and Laundry	...	£10 10 0	Pianoforte	...	1 11 6
Day Scholars	...	2 2 0	Drawing { If both are taken, the fee is 30/-	1	1 0
			Painting {	1	1 0
			Elocution	...	10 6
			Fancy Work	...	5 0

For further particulars, apply The Sisters, c/o Diocesan Registry, Townsville.
Correspondence invited

DIOCESE OF CARPENTARIA—MITCHELL RIVER CATTLE FUND.

(Administered by a Committee appointed by the Diocesan Council.)

STATEMENT OF ACCOUNTS FOR THE YEAR ENDING DECEMBER 31st, 1919.

RECEIPTS.				EXPENDITURE.
	£	s.	d.		£	s.	d.
Balance, January 1st, 1919—				Stock Tax			1 9 11
Held by Diocesan Church Management Fund	150	0	0	Overseer's Salary, 2½ months	41	13	4
Bank of Queensland Limited	127	11	3	Exchange		4	6
							41 17 10
			277 11 3	Stores		50	3 1
Sales of Cattle during the year			500 0 0	Mustering		17	5 6
				Yard Building		102	6 2
				Exchanges and Bank Charges		4	6 6
				Balance in hand, December 31st, 1919—
				Held by Diocesan Church Management Fund	150	0	0
				Bank of Queensland Limited	410	2	3
							560 2 3
			£777 11 3				£777 11 3

MITCHELL RIVER MISSION.

YEAR ENDING DECEMBER 31st, 1919.

RECEIPTS AND EXPENDITURE.

RECEIPTS.				EXPENDITURE.
	£	s.	d.		£	s.	d.
GRANTS—				Station Supplies		1077	13 3
Australian Board of Missions			848 15 0	Boat Working Account		107	14 3
Queensland Government			350 0 0	Boat Repairs Account	59	6	9
DONATIONS—				Less Donation Mrs. Pritt	10	10	0
Per Diocese of Carpentaria	112	17	10			48	16 9
T. E. Simpson Lochnagar	2	2	0	Staff Rations		206	3 4
			114 19 10	Freight and Charges		2	12 8
For Iron			1 6 0	Insurance Account		17	2 7
Balance, excess Expenditure over Receipts...			515 15 3	General Expenditure		53	2 11
				Salaries and Wages		302	18 4
				Cart Account		14	12 0
			£1830 16 1				£1830 16 1

LIABILITIES AND ASSETS.

LIABILITIES.				ASSETS.
	£	s.	d.		£	s.	d.
Hodels Limited			782 6 8	Cash on hand at Mission Station for sundry
Hospital Account			7 7 0	payments		30	0 0
Bank of Queensland Limited			60 11 3	Cattle Committee		5	11 6
Diocese of Carpentaria			100 0 0	Matthews, H.... ..		4	18 4
NATIVES' AMOUNTS—				NATIVE AMOUNTS—
Bernard, 4/17/3; Bob, 9/9; Piper, 2/6 ...	5	9	6	Samuel	9	19	5
Don, 7/11/3; Major, 15/5/9; Tommy, 10/11/-	33	8	0	Charlie, 2/10/-; Ben, 4/14/10; Little
Captain, 25/15/5; Willie No. 1, 3/5/6 ...	29	0	11	Tommy, 2/5/6... ..	9	10	4
Paddy, 3/15/9; Reuben, 2/-; Wallaby, £4	7	17	9			19	9 9
Morgan, 2/13/3; Leonard, 3/7/6	6	0	9	Excess Expenditure over Receipts, 1918 ...	459	7	9
Jack Daphne, 1/0/9; Silas, £2	3	0	9	" " " " 1919
			84 17 8	shewn above	515	15	3
						975	3 0
			£1035 2 7				£1035 2 7

Examined and found correct.—(Signed) E. J. HENNESSEY, Auditor.

11th December, 1919.

(Signed) HODELS LIMITED,
Per GEO. CLARKE,
Managing Agents.

Thursday Island, 9th December, 1919.

1920.

Diocese of Carpentaria.

Bishop :

RT. REV. HENRY NEWTON, B.A.
Thursday Island, Queensland.

Administrator :

REV. F. W. SLADE, B.A.

Sub-Dean :

REV. F. W. SLADE, B.A.

Diocesan Secretary :

REV. F. W. SLADE, B.A., Thursday Island.

Commissaries :

REV. FRER. PONSONBY, M.A., The Rectory, Devonport, England.
REV. J. JONES, M.A., 242 Pitt Street, Sydney.
REV. W. P. GLOVER, Th.L., Warwick, Q.
REV. J. W. ASHTON, St. Kilda, Melbourne, V.

Clergy :

REV. B. S. COLE, Cooktown.
REV. C. HALL, Th.L., Normanton (on leave).
REV. C. W. LIGHT, Darwin.
REV. F. W. SLADE, B.A., Thursday Island.
REV. E. TAFFS, Mossman.

Honorary Lay Readers :

MR. H. F. L. FINNISS, Darwin
MR. G. E. A. PATCHING, Cooktown
MR. D. A. ROBERTS, Darwin.

Diocesan Council :

REV. F. W. SLADE, B.A. | MR. GEO. CLARK.
REV. J. J. E. DONE. | MR. GILSON FOXTON.
REV. G. A. LUSCOMBE. | MR. A. SULLIVAN.

Honorary Legal Adviser :

HIS HONOUR JUDGE MACNAUGHTON.

Aboriginal Mission, Mitchell River :

MR. J. W. CHAPMAN. | MRS. MATTHEWS.
REV. H. MATTHEWS, J.P. | Miss F. SMITH.
(Supt.)
J. Geibo, T. Solomon, J. Savo.

Roper River Mission :

MR. DYER. |
REV. R. D. JOYNT. | MRS. DYER.
REV. H. E. D. WARREN |
(Supt.)

Torres Straits Mission :

REV. J. J. E. DONE. | *REV. JOSEPH LUI.
REV. G. A. LUSCOMBE. | *REV. POEY PASSI.
REV. W. H. MACFARLANE, | MRS. LUSCOMBE.
[Th.L.] | Miss LUSCOMBE.
* Native Deacons.

The Diocese.

The See was founded in 1900, and consists of such part of Queensland as is bounded by the sea on the north and east, by the Northern Territory on the west, and by a line drawn from lat. S. 19deg. 30min. on the western boundary of Queensland due east to par. 144deg. E. and thence N. to lat. S. 16deg. 40min. and thence east to the sea, together with the whole of the Northern Territory, comprising an area of not less than 620,000 square miles. The population, which is very widely scattered over this immense area, consists of about 10,000 whites, 5,000 Japanese, Chinese, and other aliens, and 35,000 aborigines. The white population is mainly mining and pastoral. The See town is Thursday Island, a pearling centre north of Cape York.

Finance.

The Diocese has no endowments beyond the Bishop's income of £395 per annum. Every parish needs a grant from central funds which come from subscriptions to the Diocese, and grants from English Societies.

Missions.

Missions are carried on amongst the Japanese at Thursday Island; the South Sea Islanders; the aborigines on the Mitchell and Roper Rivers; and among the Islanders of the Torres Straits.

Special Offertories.

On Easter Day the offertories are given to the Clergyman of the Parish, and on Good Friday to the Australian Board of Missions.

The "Church Standard."

Posted to any Address for 6s. 6d. per Annum.

The CHURCH STANDARD holds the unique position of being the only independent weekly paper published in the interests of the Church of England in Australasia.

Published every Friday Morning.

Appeals to all Members of the Church of England, Members of the C.E.M.S., Churchwardens, Side-men and Parochial Councillors, Sunday School Teachers, Lay Readers, Catechists, and Clergy.

Specimen Copies on application to

THE CHURCH PUBLISHING CO. LTD.,

ROYAL INSURANCE BUILDINGS, 16 SPRING STREET, SYDNEY.

Glennie Memorial School,

Church of England School for Girls

TOOWOOMBA.

PRINCIPAL - - - MISS LAWRENCE

(Assisted by a highly qualified Resident Staff).

The School is under the direction of
His Grace the Archbishop of Brisbane, and Council.

Thorough Education. Pupils prepared for University Examinations.

MUSIC AND LANGUAGE SPECIALITIES.

Pupils prepared for the Examinations of the Associated Board R.A.M., R.C.M.

The New Building, situated over 2000 feet above sea level in twelve acres of ground, has been constructed according to the most approved modern ideas. There is accommodation for fifty (50) boarders, and all the rooms are light and excellently ventilated. The health and comfort of pupils is specially studied.

THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND HIGH SCHOOL FOR GIRLS.

ST. MARGARET'S HOUSE, THE ALBION, BRISBANE

(ETON HIGH SCHOOL).

Under the Management of the Sisters of the Sacred Advent.

PRINCIPAL - - - THE SUPERIOR OF THE SACRED ADVENT.

Head Mistress: Miss J. M. LYON, L.L.A.,
On London Register of Head Mistresses for Secondary Schools.

Pupils prepared for the Sydney University Examinations and for the Trinity College and Associated Board R.A. Exams.

TERMS FOR BOARDERS	-	-	-	UPPER SCHOOL, 10 GUINEAS
				LOWER " 8 "
TERMS FOR DAY PUPILS	-	-	-	UPPER SCHOOL, 2 GUINEAS
				LOWER " 1½ "

MUSIC, GERMAN, DANCING, PAINTING—1 GUINEA EXTRA.

For Prospectus, apply to Sister-in-Charge, St. Margaret's House; or to Church House, Ann Street, Brisbane.

ST. CATHARINE'S (Stanthorpe) HIGH SCHOOL FOR GIRLS

Under the Management of the Sisters of the Society of the Sacred Advent.

PRINCIPAL - - - THE SUPERIOR OF THE SACRED ADVENT.

Head Mistress: SISTER EVELYN, S.S.A.,
assisted by a Staff of Competent Teachers.

Pupils prepared for the Sydney University Examinations and for the Trinity College and Associated Board R.A. Exams.

The House is situated 2,500 feet above sea level, and is fitted with all modern improvements as a Boarding School for Girls.

Prospectus on application to the Sister-in-Charge, High School for Girls, Stanthorpe;
or to the Eton High School, Hamilton, Brisbane.

INTERCESSION PAPER

January, February, March, 1920.

THANKSGIVINGS.

LET US GIVE THANKS :—

1. For the ordination of Henry Matthews to the Priesthood.
2. For the admission of two Torres Straits Islanders to the Holy Order of Deacons.
3. For the first three years' work at S. Paul's College, Moa.
4. For the acceptance of three new students for S. Paul's College, Moa.
5. For confirmations in the Islands, and at the Cathedral, Thursday Island.

We thank Thee and bless Thee, O Lord.

INTERCESSIONS.

LET US PRAY :—

1. For Henry Matthews, Priest, and for Joseph Lui and Poey Passi, Deacons.
2. For S. Paul's College, Moa, and the three new students.
3. For those who have been confirmed.
4. For the Missionaries on the Mitchell and Roper Rivers during the North-West Season.
5. For the Reunion of Christendom.
6. For guidance to those responsible for the arrangements of the Lambeth Conference.
7. For a worthy Thank-Offering for Peace.

We beseech Thee to hear us, good Lord.

The Carpenterian

FOR THE DIOCESE OF CARPENTARIA, NORTH AUSTRALIA.

Vol. XX.—No. 78.]

THURSDAY ISLAND, APRIL 1, 1920.

[PRICE 2/6 A YEAR.
POST FREE.]

PUBLISHED ON THE FIRST DAY OF EACH QUARTER.

NOTICE.

All communications to be addressed to the Editor of The Carpenterian, Bishop's House, Thursday Island, to whom subscriptions may be sent. Subscription, 2/6 per annum, post free.

NOTICE TO CONTRIBUTORS.

All contributions of Parish News, etc., must reach the Editor before the last day of February, May, August, and November in each year.

The Bishop's Visit to S. Paul's, Moa.

I left Thursday Island in the "Banzai," on Monday, January 26th, for S. Paul's, Moa, to take a Confirmation and to admit the three new students to the College. As the Sub-Dean was away from home at the time, it had not been possible for me to be at S. Paul's on the Sunday, which was the festival of the conversion of S. Paul, so it was arranged that I should go as soon after as possible. Lieutenant Gillam, S.D.N.O., Thursday Island, went with me for the trip. He had received orders for transfer, but was waiting for a boat, and was glad of an opportunity to visit one of the settlements in the Straits. We had a good run out, fine weather and fair wind.

We found Mr. Luscombe in bed with what we supposed was dengue fever, but which may have been a slight attack of influenza. He had gone down suddenly to it on the Sunday, and so had not been able to interview the candidates for Confirmation, which he had intended to do on the Sunday and Monday. Mr. Done had arrived shortly before us, and Mr. Macfarlane an hour or two after us. They did what was necessary, but the Confirmation—instead of being on the Monday night—had to be postponed till Tuesday afternoon. The harbour at S. Paul's was very full of shipping. The three Mission boats were at anchor, and in addition three or four fishing boats, while on Tuesday another boat came in—quite a fleet in the small lagoon. The Mission staff was well represented, as the two Deacons, the Rev. Joseph Lui and the Rev. Poey Passi, were back from their holiday to meet Mr. Done, who was to take them to their new work; and also Bani of Mabuia, who is going to Murray as Lay Missionary-in-charge, had come with Mr. Done to meet Mr. Macfarlane and be taken to his new work. The Confirmation candidates (fifty-five in number—thirty-four male and twenty-one female candidates) came from various parts. Twenty-five were from Adam, eighteen from Badu, ten from S. Paul's, Moa. These had been prepared by Mr. Luscombe during the Christmas vacation; and in addition I had two, whom I prepared in Thursday Island, a man from Murray and a girl from Badu. The man had not been baptised, and so was baptised at Evensong on the Monday by Mr. Done. We had a good deal of rain during the two days we were at S. Paul's, and it meant dodging showers to the services.

On Wednesday morning there was a celebration of Holy Communion at 7 a.m., and the three new students were admitted as members of the College after the Creed. I asked each one if he wished to become a student, if he would promise to observe the rules of the College and endeavour to prepare himself for his future work as a Deacon in the Church; and then, taking each one by the hand, admitted him as a student of the College. All the students were told that should any of them wish to withdraw at any time he is free to do so, and that such withdrawal would not necessarily mean anything of which they should be ashamed.

After the celebration, a procession was formed, headed by the Cross-bearer, all the students, the Clergy, and the Bishop, followed by the congregation, marched to the new College lecture-room, which I blessed. It was a simple and impressive little ceremony. The room was filled with people, arranged round the walls—all in a very orderly manner taking their places. Of course, our College buildings are of a temporary kind, built of bush timber—except the floor, which is of sawn hardwood—coconut-leaf walls, and grass roof, so they do not last long; but Mr. Luscombe is gaining by experience, and the present building is very convenient and well arranged. It was built by the first students and the people of S. Paul's, who gave their labour in getting material and doing the building, so that the expense to the Mission has been very small. All we had to provide was some tucker for the men who did the work, and a few things like nails, hinges, etc. The building has a verandah all round it, and the shutters and the windows are either old ones from the Mission House or shutters made of cases!

And so S. Paul's College has started on its second course, and we hope to see even better work done than during the first three years' course. The three new students (Sailor Gabey, Jimmy Rice, and Captain Oth—we go in for queer names in the islands) all passed an examination before they were accepted as students, so Mr. Luscombe will have more satisfactory students from one point of view. We would commend them and the Principal of the College to the prayers of the Church.

HENRY, Bishop of Carpentaria.

Anzac Day.

FESTIVAL OF S. MARK, MARCH 25TH, 1920.

This day of glorious memory is to be a public holiday—so far as we who live on the edge of the world at Thursday Island and get news in an erratic way have been able to learn. It is most important that the day should not become a mere holiday, given over to pleasure and picnicing. There are sacred associations connected with it—it has holy memories which must not be allowed to fade; there are lessons of self-sacrifice and devotion to duty which must not be forgotten, and which must be put into practice if Australia is ever to be worthy of her sons, who went to fight for liberty and justice and truth. The Cross has been felt to be the most suitable form of memorial for those who died for others, and the very lessons they teach are the lessons of Christianity. We want to remember before God those who died; we want to consider how far, in our industrial, political, and social life we are following their example of duty to others and acknowledging the claims the whole nation have on each of us to do our duty, "no matter what it costs"; we need the help which God gives us to enable us to make whatever sacrifices may be necessary, that the civilisation of the world shall be built on the only sure foundation—the truth revealed through Jesus Christ our Lord. And so we hope that attendance at Church services, and especially at the Holy Communion, will be the most important part of the observance of Anzac Day, every year as it comes round.

S. David's, Mossman.

On Monday, February 2nd, 1920, Mossman was visited by a terrific cyclone, which seems to have been, in intensity and duration, more severe than the one in 1911, which did so much damage. Few houses escaped, many were totally destroyed, others unroofed, and the cane suffered terribly. The temporary Church—a hall—which has been used for holding services since the Church was destroyed in the 1911 cyclone, was not blown over, but bent to an angle of about seventy degrees. The Rectory was badly damaged; all the outbuildings at the Rectory were blown away and overturned; a large wash-house and lumber-room was blown off its blocks and shifted about nine feet away; verandah rooms were blown away, and the Rector had much of his furniture and many of his books damaged by the wet. Of course, everything was disorganised, and the Rector has been busy temporarily fixing up Church and house. It is very hard on the Church people at Mossman; they have been working steadily and quietly to get the finances of the parish into order, and had done so. The building of the new stone Church, which had perforce to remain in abeyance during the War, was to have been begun this year. Cement had been procured, and the Rector quite cheerfully says, "We shall start work on the stone Church as soon as repairs are effected." Also he says: "The Church and Rectory at Port Douglas were practically uninjured, so we are very thankful." It's a fine spirit which meets disaster with the thought, "things might have been worse." The Rector of Mossman has had two experiences of cyclones since he has been in charge of the parish, but he is determined to fight through and build the Church as something worthy of its purpose, and of Him whose House of Prayer it is. Who will not help one who has such faith and courage. The Rector's family is a heavy loser also in private things, as the house which belongs to his daughter has been flattened to the ground.

Christ Church, Darwin.

The Rev. C. W. Light, Rector of Darwin, arrived in that parish towards the end of the year 1919, and has his work well in hand. Things in general are in an unsettled condition in the town from various causes—political and industrial unrest, strikes, and absence of communication do not tend to peace—but so far as the parish is concerned, matters are improving. Financially, things are on a good footing, and those who have the matter in hand hope to pay off the greater part of the debt on the Rectory this year. It is reported that the Meatworks will not be opened this season, which will be a blow to the town, but may give time for consideration of many problems and help to solve some difficulties; there are many such to be faced. An attempt is to be made to beautify the grounds of the Church and Rectory, and Mr. Light hopes they will be, in time, one of the beauty spots of Darwin. He hopes still more that there will be flowers and fruit of a spiritual kind to sweeten and beautify the community. There are some very loyal and sincere Church-folk in Darwin, who will back the Rector up well in all he does.

Christ Church, Cooktown.

The Rev. F. H. T. Lane, after acting as locum tenens of the parish for three months, left by the "John Douglas" for Cairns en route for Yarrabah, where he is to be the Chaplain to the Mission. Unfortunately, the strike held up the new Rector, the Rev. B. S. Cole, in Brisbane; but we hope for his arrival before the Carpentarian is printed.

Mr. Patching, the Hon. Lay Reader, has been taking services during the interregnum.

All Souls, Quetta Memorial Cathedral, Thursday Island.

The Sub-dean hopes to be back from his furlough early in March; he has booked his passage from Brisbane by the "Nikko Maru," leaving there on March 5th. We hope to see him looking fit and well after the change South—a change and rest he needed.

The offerings of the Heralds of the King throughout the diocese were presented in the Cathedral on Sunday, December 28th, 1919, being Holy Innocents' Day. The parishes of All Souls', Thursday Island; Christ Church, Cooktown; and S. David's, Mossman, were represented, and the offerings from the Torres Straits Islands were also presented. These were all for the A.B.M. Thank-offering for Peace and Victory, organised by the Heralds of the King. The offerings were brought to the Bishop at the Altar by Heralds, to represent the various parishes, and the Torres Straits Mission. Unfortunately, Normanton and Croydon parishes are vacant, and it was not possible to do anything at Darwin, as the Rector had only just arrived in the parish, and he probably had word of the service after the date of it! Communication between Thursday Island and the various parts of the Diocese is uncertain at the best of times, and during the last few months it has been very difficult.

On Wednesday, January 14th, an entertainment, organised by the G.F.S. in Thursday Island, was held in the Parish Institute and the proceeds given to the A.B.M. Thank-offering Fund. In spite of various hindrances, the entertainment was a great success.

The G.F.S., with the Mothers' Union, also arranged for a Social Evening (held in the Institute), to bid good-bye to Miss Ruth George, who has been organist at the Cathedral for two years, and who is leaving for Brisbane as soon as it is possible for her to do so, to enter as a student at the University of Queensland. The social was held on Wednesday evening, February 4th, and a number of parishioners came to shew their appreciation of what Miss George had done for the Church on the Island as organist and teacher in the Sunday School. There would have been a large gathering, but influenza had just got its grip on the Island and prevented many, who wished to be present, from attending.

The Mothers' Union.

Mrs. George Clarke has been elected President and Miss Iman Secretary of the Mothers' Union. Meetings have been in abeyance, as is usual, during the wet season, and will not be resumed till April. The influenza epidemic will make it necessary to lengthen the recess by a month. The Mothers' Union intends to have a special meeting in July, when there will be a service in the Church with intercessions for the work of the Union throughout the world. Just at that time there will be a Conference of Oversea Workers in London, at which the Diocese of Carpentaria will be represented by Mrs. Zahel, and we wish to help the members of the Conference by our prayers.

There are many mothers living lonely lives in this Diocese whom we remember at our intercessions from time to time. It would be a help to them in their lonely lives if they took the Australian paper of the Mothers' Union, which is published quarterly. Miss Inman, Bishop's House, Thursday Island, will be glad to send copies to any subscribers who send their addresses to her. The subscription is 2/6 a year post free.

Mission Notes.

No news has come through from the Mitchell since Christmas, and we are anxiously waiting for news from the Mission by the first trip of the "Pritt."

A friend of the Mission has given a cheque for £150, to buy the Bishop's car for the Mission. How useful the car will be no one knows so well as the Mission staff. Mr. Matthews will be heartened by the news; he is a good engineer, and can manage the car well.

Another piece of good news to cheer the staff is that the Queensland Government has increased the grant to the Mission by £150 a-year. The increased grant is not to be all to the good, however; it is given in view of the fact that the authorities may have to ask the Mission to take more aborigines on to the Station—probably in view of the fact that many of those employed on the cattle stations have been dismissed since the rise in wages. We expected to have an increase in numbers from this cause, and would have taken the people as a matter of course—so it is good to know we have something to help in the extra expense.

Letters, written about Christmas time, have been received from the Roper River Mission in the Northern Territory. Mr. Warren tells of the ravages of white ants. The Mission-folk are busy re-building houses these destructive creatures have destroyed.

The Bishop of New Guinea, with the Rev. S. R. M. Gill, hoped to reach Thursday Island about the middle of February from Port Moresby to catch the Jap. boat early in March, as they were to go to England via Japan and America. But when news was sent to New Guinea that there was influenza at Thursday Island, communication with New Guinea stopped at once. There does not seem to have been communication between Australia and New Guinea owing to the strike, so the Bishop may not be able to make the connection with the Jap. boat.

The rise in exchange is hitting the Missionary Societies very hard in England. So many Missionaries are working in India, China, and other Eastern countries, that the additional cost is a very serious item; and as Missionaries are not paid more than a living wage—and that at a low standard, they cannot bear the cost of exchange. The Australian Board of Missions is also hard hit, but not to the same extent as the societies in England. The additional cost to the Church Missionary Society alone is estimated at more than £100,000!

The Australian Board of Missions is arranging for special meetings and services to be held in Sydney in November of this year, to celebrate the formation of the board seventy years ago, when the then Bishops of Australia and New Zealand formed the Australian Board of Missions, to do for the Church in Australia the work that is the most important thing the Church has to do in the world—to fulfil the trust given her by our Lord, "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel." There were giants in the Church seventy years ago—witness the names of Bishop Broughton, Bishop G. A. Selwyn, and Bishop Tyrell. If they realised the duty of the Church, how much more should we do so who have been taught as never before the need of the Gospel of Self-Sacrifice, and of the Christian basis for civilization during the last few years.

The Shipping Strike.

What a barbarous method of settling a dispute is a strike—and what suffering it entails on people not directly concerned with the dispute. We have not much right to complain of that perhaps, in so far as it emphasises that we are all members one of another, and we have to bear and to suffer with others. There is no doubt of the suffering this last strike has caused in the North. In Thursday Island itself the people were comparatively well off—chiefly because there were ten tons of flour waiting for shipment to the cattle stations in the Gulf, which came too late for the boat to take away before the north-west began. The Mayor arranged for this to be used, and also procured some flour from a passing Dutch boat; but it was impossible to give the people on the islands as much as they needed, and things in the Gulf must have been very serious indeed. The last boat they had was in November, and the big stocks for the wet season were expected in the December boat, which did not run. During the wet season the Gulf is very isolated, when no boats are running, as communication by land with outside places is impossible for teams. The ground is so soft that it would—to use an expression common in these parts—bog a duck. And what has happened to places like the Barclay Tableland, where they could hardly have had time to get their supplies after the previous strike before the next came on? What is the good of trying to settle people on the land, and to develop the outside places, if those who venture out cannot be sure of the necessities of life? And what are the big centres of population going to do if people are not settled on the land? After all, it is the primary producer that is responsible for most of the real wealth of the community. He produces what the other people distribute, and if there is not production there will not be distribution; and where will the townsman be then? Seeing that the general public, and the settler on the land in particular, have to suffer from the strikes, surely they ought to have a voice in the settlement of disputes. Perhaps they have theoretically, in the politicians and the officials of the Courts. We unfortunate out-back people do not know much about the rights and wrongs of these disputes, and we really suffer very patiently and get to work very quickly again at our jobs as soon as we can; but the strain is getting severe. On the whole, so far as one can judge, the engineers have had all the sympathy. They seem to have had a good record for steady work, uninterrupted by strikes for many years. During the War they were very loyal to the community, and it does not seem quite fair that men, who have to serve a long apprenticeship and who have to carry a heavy burden of responsibility, should be paid little more than men who have no special responsibility and no training for their work. It certainly looks, to an ignorant outsider—and onlookers see a good deal of the game—as if here was a simple case where owners might have taken the initiative and said to the engineers: "It is not fair you should not receive more than a donkey-man, so as his wages have gone up, we must pay you more."

Of course, we do not know what profits the shipping companies have made, perhaps they could not afford to take that Christian, common-sense attitude; and if they knew that the engineers' claim was just, they may have been compelled to go through a fight so that they could pass on the expense to the general public. If they could bear the additional cost, what a magnificent opportunity has been lost! Just fancy the difference in feeling and atmosphere if the approach had come gratuitously from the owners in that way, instead of all the bitterness and misery and soreness that a strike engenders. Why should it be war? two opposing camps, distrusting one another, each trying to score off the other—or make a third party pay—and neither satisfied when the particular struggle is over, when, as a matter of fact, co-operation on Christian line ought to be able to settle the matter in dispute—or still better, prevent its coming to the point of dispute.

Well, we outsiders don't know all the ins and outs of it. We don't know what the profits are, and socialising everything does not promise well. These matters seem to concern three parties—capitalists, workmen, and the general public; the last one always pays in the end. Why should not every company employing more than a certain number of men be compelled to have on the board of directors one to represent labour, and one to represent the general public, so that all the people concerned should have an opportunity of influencing an industry. We have Acts of Parliament to control limited liability companies. Why not a little more control in the benefit of the long-suffering public? The worst of it is, that the politicians would have to appoint such directors, and who would watch the watchers? What a rotten condition of mistrust it is under which we work!

One thing is certain, things cannot go on for much longer as they are. On the whole, the feeling of the community is for justice and fair dealing all round; but we are very much in the dark as to conditions of profit and labour, and so cannot form a righteous judgment, but it will come; and woe be to those who retard it.

The Rev. H. R. Longmore, at one time Rector of Croydon, in the Diocese of Carpentaria, began work in the Mission district along the Northern Railway, in the Diocese of Willochra, at Christmas time, 1919.

Personal.

The Rev. W. M. Wilkinson, so well known in the diocese of Carpentaria, has been transferred from Murat Bay to Crystal Brook, both in the diocese of Willochra.

The work of the parish of Crystal Brook will not be so heavy, and the distances to be travelled not so great as in the Mission district, of which Murat Bay is the centre. This is as well, for both Mr. and Mrs. Wilkinson have not had good health for some weeks. The constant travelling, even luxurious—comparatively—in a Ford motor car was too much for Mr. Wilkinson.

The English Guardian, in one of the December issues, had a picture of Mr. Wilkinson at a bush post office—at least the legend at the foot of the illustration said it was he; but as it was a "back view," his best friends would need telling who it was. Dr. Mullins, who has been on deputation work in Canada and Australia for the Colonial and Continental Church Society in England, visited Murat Bay and gave a short notice of the work in that district as typical of the work in the bush.

Several of the Bishops of the Church in Australia have already left for England, and word has been received of the arrival of one or two there. The Bishop of Gippsland found travelling through America very delightful and very expensive. He was held up in New York, owing to a strike. Such things and such experiences are not confined to Australia.

It seems, that when the Bishop of Willochra was arranging about his passport, he was asked whether he is a Bolshevik, and the "Willochran" thinks the authorities had reason to ask the question if they had seen the photograph taken—while you wait—intended for their information!

The Right Reverend Donald Baker was consecrated third Bishop of Bendigo in St. Paul's Cathedral, Melbourne, on the Feast of the Purification, February 2nd, 1920. The consecrators were the Archbishop of Melbourne, the Bishops of Ballarat and Wangaratta, with Bishop Green and Bishop Langley. On the following Wednesday the new Bishop was solemnly installed and enthroned by the Archbishop of Melbourne—the Metropolitan of the Province of Victoria.

The Bishop of Bendigo is a Cambridge man, but was ordained in Sydney, deacon 1905, priest 1906, and has worked in the Diocese of Sydney and Tasmania. He was Rector of St. George's, Hobart, when he was chosen to succeed Dr. J. D. Langley as Bishop of Bendigo.

Our congratulations to the Rev. H. and Mrs. Matthews on the birth of a daughter. Mrs. Matthews, who has been in Townsville, staying with Mrs. Cole for some months, hopes to be back in Thursday Island to catch the "Francis Pritt" on her first trip after the north-west season. Mrs. Matthews and the two children have had some trying experiences in Townsville, where there was a shortage of flour; and Mrs. Matthews thinks there are worse places than the Mitchell.

Mr. and Mrs. Dyer, of the Roper River Mission staff, have gone South (to Victoria) on furlough. They hope to return to the Roper about July or August next.

The Carpenterian

FOR THE DIOCESE OF CARPENTARIA,
NORTH AUSTRALIA.

Vol. XX., No. 78. Thursday Island, April 1, 1920

The Thank-offering for Victory and Peace.

Nearly every Diocese of the Church in Australia has agreed that on the first Sunday in July of this year (July 4th, 1920) offerings will be presented at the services for the Thank-offering for Victory and Peace, organised by the Australian Board of Missions. The Board is asking the Church in Australia for £30,000, as a Thank-offering, to be devoted to the work of preaching the Gospel of Peace and of spreading the principles of that gospel amongst those races who so far have not had the opportunity of knowing where alone peace can be found; peace following the sense of forgiveness for sin, in the personal experience of individuals; peace in the social and industrial life, which can only be when that life is really influenced and controlled by the Gospel of Peace.

There can be no doubt whatsoever that we ought to shew our gratitude to our Heavenly Father for all that He has done for us during nearly five years of War. For all the self-sacrifice and devotion to duty; for the response to the call of the weaker nations; for the passion for truth and liberty and justice, which were the means used by God to give us Victory and Peace in the world. All these moral forces—and they were the main factors in the winning of the War—come from God; and in particular we owe them to the teaching and example of our Lord Jesus Christ. Powers inherent in our human nature, as created by God in His own Image, have been awakened, inspired, by the Gospel of Jesus. We may not be able to trace the process, we may think there are other explanations, because we have forgotten and failed to realise the effect of the Gospel on human life and character; because, in so many ways, civilisation is un-Christian, even in so-called Christian lands; because of the complexity in the results of the wisdom of God in granting us free-will, and of His love for man in using man as His agent to do His work. But, in spite of all the difficulties and contradictions, the only explanation of the presence of those moral forces is that man has certain powers from God, and these powers have been developed only through the teaching of the Gospel of Jesus Christ. Ultimately, we owe all that has been preserved for us to God, and if we value it, we should surely shew some gratitude to Him.

In what better or more seemly way can we show our gratitude than in helping to spread the Gospel to which we owe so much, in the world? It is the will of God that all men should be saved, and come to the knowledge of truth. "God so loved the world that He gave His only Son to the end, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but come to everlasting life." "How can they hear without a preacher? How can they preach except they be sent?" The Church under God is the sender. At all times it is a fundamental duty of Christians to spread the Gospel. Surely there can be no better way of showing our gratitude to God and our belief in Jesus than in helping the work which is so near the heart of God, and in fulfilling the duty laid upon us by our Lord, who in His love and wisdom chose us as His agents for carrying on His work. For Christians, it is inconceivable that there should be any doubt about the duty, and the privilege, and the honour of forwarding the Missionary work of the Church.

It may be argued that the so-called Christian peoples need so much teaching, that all our efforts should be devoted to them. Of course, what are sometimes called Foreign Missions, do not compete with what may be called Home Missions. "This ye ought to have done, and not to have left the other undone." It is very doubtful whether those who use such an argument to excuse themselves, for not helping Foreign Missions do their duty in their own parishes. The argument is really based on selfishness, and selfishness is far reaching in its effects. The work of the Church is one, at home and abroad; amongst all peoples and tribes and languages. As a matter of experience, those people who are most alive to their duty to Missions, are most alive to their duty to the Home Church, for unselfishness and devotion to duty cannot be limited to one sphere, but permeates the whole life and character. Once more, because the Church is one, and her work is one; what affects one part affects the whole, and there is a reflex action from the Church in the Mission field upon the Home Church. That is becoming more and more evident as time goes on. In the last few years we have learned that the human race is one as we never understood it before.

One of the great benefits of the War to us in Australia is, that we have learnt, or at least been taught, a wider outlook—given a wider vision—and we needed it. We can no longer think of the races of the world as shut up into water-tight compartments.

I fancy that the Diocese of Carpentaria is one of the very few in Australia that has not had a War Memorial Fund of some kind or another. I did think once we might complete the Cathedral in Thursday Island, as a thank-offering, and have a book in the Cathedral with the names of all who went to the War, who or whose friends wished their names to be inscribed in the book. It was suggested that the division of this huge Diocese might be made the object of a thank-offering. I decided not to make an appeal for anything diocesan, for I knew how many were the demands that had been made upon the people and how noble the response was, and that many would be doing something in other parts of Australia where they have interests and associations. But I do think I may rightly call upon you to realise—and I am surely in duty bound to place before you—the duty of making our offering as a Diocese to the Thank-offering for Victory and Peace one worthy of the good hand of our God that has been upon us.

It may be that many will not be able to get to Church on July 4th. Alas! at present, there are large areas where there is no priest, and the work of the Church is disorganised. Will all those who have the opportunity of getting to Church on July 4th make an offering commensurate with their sense of gratitude; and will all those who are not able to get to Church send a contribution by cheque, notes, money order, or even stamps, to the Diocesan Secretary, Box 57, Thursday Island, Q., or through the Rector of the parish in which they live; only, please do not put it off and then forget about it.

Will people in outside places send in their gifts AT ONCE. It is intended that at one of the services connected with the celebration of the Seventieth Anniversary of the Australian Board of Missions, to be observed in November next, the contributions from the various dioceses be solemnly offered to God, at the Altar in S. Andrew's Cathedral, Sydney. I hope the offering of the Diocese of Carpentaria will be at least £200.

The Bishop's Movements.

The Bishop has been in Thursday Island, in charge of the Cathedral Parish since the beginning of December, 1919, during the absence of the Sub-Dean on furlough. He visited S. Paul's, Moa, at the end of January, 1920, to confirm 55 candidates, to admit new students to the college, and to bless the new college buildings. All his plans for leaving for England in February were upset by the influenza epidemic in Thursday Island. Berths have been secured for the Bishop and the Rev. W. H. Macfarlane, one of the Torres Station Mission Priests, on the "Demosthenes," to leave Sydney early in May. The Bishop hoped to leave Thursday Island about the middle of March, and to have a little time in Brisbane and Sydney before leaving for England—this is the more necessary as the dates of the sailing of steamers is uncertain. The "Demosthenes" may sail a week or two earlier than is expected.

Unfortunately, the Bishop will not have the time in England before the Lambeth Conference to look for Priests for the diocese, and to re-organise the Carpentarian Association on which the diocese depends for interest in, and financial support for, the Diocese of Carpentaria. He hoped to have two months clear for that work. However, had it been possible to get away, the Bishop could not leave the Island while the influenza epidemic was raging. His duty was there.

The Administrator.

The Bishop has appointed the Rev. F. W. Slade, Sub-Dean of the Cathedral, Thursday Island, as Administrator, and he will administer the affairs of the diocese during the absence of the Bishop in England. All letters on diocesan business during the absence of the Bishop should be addressed to the Rev. F. W. Slade, Box 57, Thursday Island, Q.

The Lambeth Conference.

This Conference is a meeting of the Bishops of the Church of England, and of the branches of the Church in communion with her, summoned by the Archbishop of Canterbury about every ten years.

The summoning does not imply that the Archbishop of Canterbury has any rights of jurisdiction over the Bishops whom he invites to the Conference, and the Conference has no legislative or administrative powers. The meeting is purely a Conference to discuss the affairs of the Church, and the problems that arise from time to time. It is a valuable recognition of the fact, that the Church is one in all parts of the world; that the problems and difficulties are one.

It has a very important function in the way of discussion, and the opinions of the Conference—they can hardly be called discussions—which are embodied in the Pastoral issued after the Conference, will of course carry great moral weight with all loyal Churchmen. There is, too, the inspiring influence of so many Bishops from so many lands meeting together—an inspiration which must affect the whole Church. In our isolated lives and our comparatively small interests, we sometimes get depressed, and fail to realise the greatness and the grandeur of the work of the Church in the world. Of course, the Bishops need the help of the prayers of all people for God's blessing on what is to be said and done at the Conference, that they may be guided by the Holy Spirit, and that all that is said and done may tend to the honour and glory of God in the strengthening of His Church.

The subjects that have been chosen for discussion at the Conference this year are given below. It will be noticed how important they are and how far-reaching, also what a prominent place Missions occupy. Coming second after the vital question of the Reunion of Christendom—vital in that our Lord Himself teaches us that it is a Church which is one that will convince the world that He was sent by the Father. Of course, real unity must be founded on truth, and it would be criminal folly to sacrifice any essential truth for what would be only a temporary uniformity. But there is so much pride, passion and prejudice which influence our relations with others that it is difficult to disentangle essentials and non-essentials. We need the help of the Holy Spirit to teach us the truth and to give us the courage to follow where it may lead us. Above all, we need to know the Will of God, and to have the grace given that His Will may be our will, and to do that Will in all humility no matter what it may cost us to do it.

The Conference will take place in July, commencing with a Reception in Canterbury Cathedral on Saturday, July 3rd. The Conference will meet at Lambeth Palace, in South London, for the whole of the following week—Monday, July 5th, to Saturday, July 10th. During the next fortnight, the Conference—in accordance with precedent—will adjourn while Conference committees, which will be set up, will deliberate on the different subjects referred to them. The Conference will re-assemble on Monday, July 26th, and meet daily for a fortnight, concluding its Session on Saturday, August 7th.

It is impossible to say how many Bishops will be able to attend the Conference, but there will in all probability be nearly 300.

The subjects selected for discussion at the Conference are:—

1. Relation to and Reunion with other Churches:
 - (a) Episcopal Churches.
 - (b) Non-Episcopal Churches, with questions as to—
 1. Recognition of Ministers.
 2. "Validity" of Sacraments.
 3. Suggested transitional steps.
2. Missionary Problems:
 - (a) Relation between Missions and growing Churches.
 - (b) Missions and Governments.
 - (c) Liturgical variations permissible to a Province or Diocese.
 - (d) Marriage questions, and other practical problems.
3. The Christian Faith in relation to—
 - (a) Spiritualism.
 - (b) Christian Science.
 - (c) Theosophy.
4. Problems of Marriage and Sexual Morality.
5. The Position of Women in the Councils and Ministrations of the Nations.
6. Christianity and International Relations, especially the League of Nations.
7. The Opportunity and Duty of the Church in regard to Industrial and Social Problems.
8. The Development of Provinces in the Anglican Communion.

The Diocesan Accounts.

As usual in this, the April number of The Carpenterian, we publish the accounts of the Diocesan Church Management Fund for last year. It will be noticed we are still solvent, though we hold a good deal of trust money, which we have not been able to spend on the special trusts for which it is ear-marked. But we are surely if slowly using up the reserves left by the careful management of Bishop White. Our credit balance has been getting smaller every year since Bishop White left us. It was £598 on December 31st, 1917, £402 on December, 31st, 1918, £371 on December 31st, 1919. So we are £31 worse off than last year, and £227 worse off than at the end of 1917; and that in spite of the fact that the Diocesan Council has been very economical. Of course it is partly due to the War, when help from England, raised by the Carpenterian Association, fell off considerably. We do not complain about that; but help from other parts of Australia has also fallen off, and the Bishop was told that is because he does not go South often enough to keep the needs of the diocese well before the Australian public. Well, the Bishop thinks his first work is in the diocese itself, and he thinks it more important to minister to the scattered people in the Never Never—little as he can do for them.

The only addition we have made to our expenditure during the last four years is payments to Clergy in aid of insurance premiums; and as we have no Superannuation Fund or Fund for Clergy Widows and Orphans, it seemed to be a duty laid on the diocese to help the Clergy with their insurance.

There is one item in our expenditure to which we might call the attention of the readers of The Carpenterian, and that is the cost of the paper to the diocese. The Church Management Fund had to find £27/0/4 to pay for the excess of cost over subscriptions, which only came to £19/9/9 last year, and that includes £12 from the Carpenterian Association in England for 220 copies supplied. Certainly we did not collect the amounts due for advertisements during the year.

We issue our paper on trust. Some of our subscribers are regular and generous; to some of course the paper is sent free—but it seems as though many of those who receive the paper forget that the cost of printing, etc., has to be met by someone, and it falls on the Diocesan Council to make up any deficiency.

The Bishop hopes to develop work in the Gulf on Brotherhood lines, and if that is to be done it will be a heavy drain on the reserves of the Diocesan funds. So we don't want to spend more than is necessary on The Carpenterian.

Another sad item is the amount raised in the Diocese for the Australian Board of Missions. At the last conference in Thursday Island it was decided that we should aim at £75 per annum as our quota for the Board of Missions. We sent only £58/13/8; £17 short when the demands on the Board are heavier than ever. Of course some parishes were vacant during part of the year, and efforts for Missions in such were not made. Ought we not to make up the balance this year. Let us send A.B.M. £100 for the General Fund in 1920.

The Motor Car.

The Bishop has sold the car to the Mitchell River Mission for £150, and a kind friend of the Mission has sent a cheque to A.B.M. for that amount. As he could not use the car again till after the end of the wet season in 1921, it seemed to the Bishop better for the Diocese to sell the present car and get a new one in 1921. The Mission was the natural place to leave the car, as the Bishop finished up his tours there just before the end of dry season last year, and it was the natural thing to let Mr Matthews have the use of the car, but it was more satisfactory to everyone concerned that the Mission should buy the car, and on the whole £150 was a fair price for the Diocese to ask for it.

The car cost £286, which includes a large number of extras and spares used on the two trips to the territory, and a considerable part of this sum was raised by the Bishop.

The car will of course be very useful to the Mission, and as Mr Matthews is a bit of an engineer, he can manage very well. He had already found the car very useful.

The Influenza Epidemic at Thursday Island.

The month of February, 1920, will not soon be forgotten by those who were on the Island at that time. For a fortnight or three weeks influenza raged; it swept through the town like a bush fire. It is difficult, and indeed impossible at present, to say how many cases there were, but at least seventy per cent. of the population must have had it. Unfortunately, Dr. Markwell was amongst the early victims, and he had a very bad time of it. However, the quarantine doctor (Dr. Murray) stepped into the breach and did very valuable work. It was especially difficult for him, as he had not been long on the Island, so did not know where people lived, and it was difficult for him to know the unpronounceable names of many of his patients, especially when given him by people whose knowledge of English is limited, and whose pronunciation of the language needs time for one to become accustomed to it. In addition it rained sometimes in torrents—we had about fifteen inches in a fortnight. The hospital was overcrowded, and the nursing staff, who were short-handed, had a hard time of it. There were volunteers who went to help and who needed nursing themselves, as they went down one after the other. A subsidiary hospital was opened in a private house for the men—Papuan, Islanders, and Mainlanders—working on boats; and a few days later the Church Institute was used as a convalescent ward, to get those who were on the mend away from the depressing influences of the other wards. A ward had to be opened for the soldiers on the hill, as they could not all be accommodated at the General Hospital.

There were several cases where the whole family in a home were down at one time. People were very good to their neighbours, and the readiness to help others in trouble was a fine thing. Word was sent South for help, and four doctors, eight nurses, and six orderlies were sent up, but the worst of the trouble was over before they could arrive. The epidemic was so sudden and so fierce that it seemed to burn itself out in about three weeks.

But the serious question was, what was happening on the Mainland and in the Islands of the Straits. Little news came in to Thursday Island, and it was feared that the death-rate in those places would be severe, especially as it was known that there was a shortage of food; owing to the strike, the boats had taken out short supplies at Christmas.

The abatement in Thursday Island made it impossible to get the relief parties out to the mainland and to the islands very soon after the arrival of the party. The members landed from the "Rageveen," a Dutch boat, on Wednesday, February 18th, being transhipped to launches at night. On Thursday, one party left for the mainland; on Friday, another left for the Eastern Islands of the Straits; and on Saturday another for the Western Islands. All have not yet returned. The rate of mortality on the mainland, where there are not many people, was very high—over 40 per cent. We have not heard whether the scourge travelled far down the Gulf. Nearly all the islands in the Straits, except the three on the New Guinea coast, were affected, and nearly the whole population went down on each island. At St. Paul's, Moa, there were 127 cases out of a population of 141. At Mabuiag nearly everyone on the island, except the Government teacher, Mr. Done, and a few children, were down; but so far as we have heard, the rate of mortality was low, only about two per cent. having died. The population of the islands is about 2,500.

There were about fifty deaths from influenza in Thursday Island, of these three were white people; Mainlanders and Papuans appear to have suffered most.

The Atonement.

The work of Him (Jesus) Who died and rose again, and ascended, was not, in the first place, to fill Heaven with pardoned sinners. It was to fill this world with new-born men, who might show in them the power of the life of the Crucified and who might enter on the heavenly state, prepared for it by a daily growth in holiness. Jesus did not die to make sin safe, and a life of loving faith needless. It was not His plan to leave men to form hard habits of sin, through years, and to fit them for Heaven by a swift miracle or by slow discipline in an after state. It was His plan to give man will and power to beat down the evil in him, and put away the evil around him, and grow, day by day, ready to take his place among the just. Jesus died and lives, that earth may become like Heaven; that men even now may learn and know much of the blessedness of freedom from sin and its curse.

It was no part of His plan to make men free to become devils and turn earth into hell, and to have before them, all the while, a hope of Heaven.—Daily Life.

The Girls' Friendly Society.

Miss Mills is the new president, and Miss Dunwoodie the new secretary of the G.F.S. The Thursday Island branch has been in recess during the wet season, and the recess will be lengthened by a month, owing to influenza on the Island. Miss Dunwoodie has received from Brisbane her card in honour of her ten years' membership with the G.F.S. We need in these days all the help the Mothers' Union and the Girls' Friendly Society can give to us, for problems of home and social life become more and more difficult—would that there were branches in other parts of the diocese as "alive" as the ones in Thursday Island.

The Venerable the Archdeacon of Toowoomba (the Rev. A. R. Rivers) is to go to Tasmania as Archdeacon of Hobart. Mr. Rivers has worked for more than twenty-seven years in the Diocese of Brisbane, and has done a great work in the country districts; the Wide Bay the Burnett, and the Downs. The clergy of the Archdeaconry will lose a very real friend when the Archdeacon goes South.

The more Southern Dioceses seem to find Brisbane a good recruiting ground, judging by the number of men who have been taken from the Diocese in the last few years. The Bishop of Tasmania; the Rector of St. James', Sydney; the Headmaster of King's School, Parramatta, and now the Archdeacon of Hobart, all worked in the Diocese of Brisbane for some years, and all except the last-mentioned got their "Colonial" experience in that Diocese.

We are sorry to learn that Mr. C. Allom and his family have left Normanton, and still more so as it is said to be on account of the bad health of Mr. Allom. Mr. and Mrs. Allom were a great help to the Church in Normanton. His mother was proud of the fact that three of her sons were Churchwardens, two in Brisbane and one in the Gulf.

Contributors to the Thank-offering Fund for Missions are at liberty to allocate their donations to any Mission. It is probable that the people in the Northern Territory will wish to earmark their contributions to the Church Missionary Society, which is responsible for the expenses of the Roper River Mission. C.M.S. are also appealing for contributions to a Thank-offering Fund. A.B.M. will pass on any money earmarked for C.M.S. or any other mission.

SUBSCRIPTIONS TO "THE CARPENTARIAN":—Mrs. Woodhead, 2/6; Mrs. McLeod, 2/-; Miss Margaret Neame, 2/-.

Glennie Memorial School, Church of England School for Girls TOOWOOMBA.

PRINCIPAL - - - MISS LAWRENCE

(Assisted by a highly qualified Resident Staff).

The School is under the direction of
His Grace, the Archbishop of Brisbane, and Council.

Thorough Education. Pupils prepared for University Examinations.

MUSIC AND LANGUAGE SPECIALITIES.

Pupils prepared for the Examinations of the Associated Board R.A.M., R.O.M.

The New Building, situated over 2000 feet above sea level in twelve acres of ground, has been constructed according to the most approved modern ideas. There is accommodation for fifty (50) boarders, and all the rooms are light and excellently ventilated. The health and comfort of pupils is specially studied.

Diocese of Carpentaria—DIOCESAN CHURCH MANAGEMENT FUND.

Statement of Accounts for the Year ended 31st December, 1919.

EXPENDITURE.				£	s.	d.	£	s.	d.	RECEIPTS.				£	s.	d.	£	s.	d.
"The Carpenterian," Printing and Postage	46	10	1				Balance, January 1st, 1919				...			402	9	4
Less Subscriptions received	19	9	9				Subscriptions to Diocese				...			213	15	11
											Diocesan Fees				...			6	0	3
Religious Instruction in State Schools				...				27	0	4	Parochial Assessment				...			8	8	0
Bishop's House Maintenance				...				14	17	0	Carpentarian Association				...			60	0	0
Melanesian Work				...	49	17	1				Interest...				...			21	12	0
Less Donation				...		4	8				Special Trusts—
								49	12	5	S.P.G. Grants				...	100	8	10
Carpentarian Association, allotments to—											S.A.W.M. "				...	40	0	0
Darwin				...	12	0	0				Australian Board of Missions				...	58	13	8
Normanton				...	45	6	8				Motor Car				...	99	4	3
Quetta Churchwardens				...	20	0	0				Offeratories and Donations for Special Purposes				...	371	1	6
"The Carpenterian" Subscriptions...				...	12	0	0				Christison Legacy				...	27	15	10
Clergy Travelling Expenses				...	17	0	0				Deaconess Buchanan Memorial Fund				...	151	19	4
								106	6	8	Natives' Accustomable Dues				...	4	10	0
Payments to Clergy (Grants in aid of Insurance)				...				41	18	0	W. and E. Hall—Annual Grant				...	150	0	0
Printing				...				10	2	3	" " Special				...	150	0	0
Postages, Telegrams, etc.				...				18	11	4								1153	13	5
Motor Car				...				14	8	3
General Expenditure				...				55	8	1
Special Trusts Disbursed—
S.P.G. Grants:
Torres Straits Mission				...	12	10	0
Mitchell River Mission				...	87	13	10
S.A.W.M. Grants:
Torres Straits				...	20	0	0
Quetta Churchwardens				...	10	0	0
Mitchell River Mission				...	10	0	0
Australian Board of Missions				...	58	13	8
Offeratories and Donations for Special Purposes				...	233	17	3
Chas. Hall				...	1	9	2
Christison Legacy				...	5	0	0
W. and E. Hall Trust—Annual Grant				...	147	3	4
" " Special				...	133	6	8
Held for Special Trusts, still unspent, included in complete statement of assets and liabilities at December 31st, 1919				...	433	14	6
								1153	13	5
Balance				...				371	6	2
								£1865	18	11								£1865	18	11

Assets and Liabilities at 31st December, 1919.

LIABILITIES.		£	s.	d.	ASSETS.		£	s.	d.
Walter and Eliza Hall Trusts—Unexpended portion of Grants	...	19	10	0	Christ Church, Darwin (Loan)	...	250	0	0
Bursaries	...	150	0	0	Stocks	...	175	0	0
Natives' Accustomable Dues	...	4	10	0	Torres Straits Mission (Loan)	...	50	0	0
Offeratories and Donations for Special Purposes (including Gertrude Robson Legacy, £110)	...	137	4	3	Q.N. Bank Current A/c	...	213	8	9
Charles Hall	...	80	3	2	Q.N. Bank Fixed Deposits	...	675	6	9
Christison Legacy	...	35	10	10
Christison Fund	...	263	11	9
Deaconess Buchanan Memorial Fund	...	151	19	4
Mitchell River Cattle Fund (Loan)	...	150	0	0
Excess Assets over Liabilities	...	371	6	2
		£1363	15	6					£1363 15 6

Diocese of Carpentaria—EMERGENCY FUND.

December 31st, 1919.		£	s.	d.	January 1st, 1919.		£	s.	d.
Balance	...	264	19	0	Balance, Deposit Q'land Government Savings Bank	...	259	13	3
					Interest	...	5	5	9
									264 19 0
		£264	19	0					£264 19 0

Examined and found correct,

E. J. HENNESSEY, Auditor.

January 13th, 1920.

1920.

Diocese of Carpentaria.

Bishop:

RT. REV. HENRY NEWTON, B.A.
Thursday Island, Queensland.

Administrator:

REV. F. W. SLADE, B.A.

Sub-Dean:

REV. F. W. SLADE, B.A.

Diocesan Secretary:

REV. F. W. SLADE, B.A., Thursday Island.

Commissaries:

REV. FRER. PONSONBY, M.A., The Rectory, Devonport, England.
REV. J. JONES, M.A., 242 Pitt Street, Sydney.
REV. W. P. GLOVER, Th.L., Warwick, Q.
REV. J. W. ASHTON, St. Kilda, Melbourne, V.

Clergy:

REV. B. S. COLE, Cooktown.
REV. C. HALL, Th.L., Normanton (on leave).
REV. C. W. LIGHT, Darwin.
REV. F. W. SLADE, B.A., Thursday Island.
REV. E. TAFS, Mossman.

Honorary Lay Readers:

MR. H. F. L. FINNISS, Darwin
MR. G. E. A. PATCHING, Cooktown
MR. D. A. ROBERTS, Darwin.

Diocesan Council:

REV. F. W. SLADE, B.A. | MR. GEO. CLARK.
REV. J. J. E. DONE. | MR. GILSON FOXTON.
REV. G. A. LUSCOMBE. | MR. A. SULLIVAN.

Honorary Legal Adviser:

HIS HONOUR JUDGE MACNAUGHTON.

Aboriginal Mission, Mitchell River:

MR. J. W. CHAPMAN. | MRS. MATTHEWS.
REV. H. MATTHEWS, J.P. | Miss F. SMITH.
(Supt.)
J. Geibo, T. Solomon, J. Savo.

Roper River Mission:

MR. DYER. | MRS. DYER.
REV. E. D. JOYNT. |
REV. H. E. D. WARREN |
(Supt.)

Torres Straits Mission:

REV. J. J. E. DONE. | *REV. JOSEPH LUI.
REV. G. A. LUSCOMBE. | *REV. POEY PASSI.
REV. W. H. MACFARLANE, | MRS. LUSCOMBE.
[Th.L.] | Miss LUSCOMBE.
* Native Deacons.

The Diocese.

The See was founded in 1900, and consists of such part of Queensland as is bounded by the sea on the north and east, by the Northern Territory on the west, and by a line drawn from lat. S. 19deg. 30min. on the western boundary of Queensland due east to par. 144deg. E. and thence N. to lat. S. 16deg. 40min. and thence east to the sea, together with the whole of the Northern Territory, comprising an area of not less than 620,000 square miles. The population, which is very widely scattered over this immense area, consists of about 10,000 whites, 5,000 Japanese, Chinese, and other aliens, and 35,000 aboriginals. The white population is mainly mining and pastoral. The See town is Thursday Island, a pearling centre north of Cape York.

Finance.

The Diocese has no endowments beyond the Bishop's income of £395 per annum. Every parish needs a grant from central funds which come from subscriptions to the Diocese, and grants from English Societies.

Missions.

Missions are carried on amongst the Japanese at Thursday Island; the South Sea Islanders; the aboriginals on the Mitchell and Roper Rivers; and among the Islanders of the Torres Straits.

Special Offertories.

On Easter Day the offertories are given to the Clergyman of the Parish, and on Good Friday to the Australian Board of Missions.

The "Church Standard."

Posted to any Address for 6s. 6d. per Annum.

The CHURCH STANDARD holds the unique position of being the only independent weekly paper published in the interests of the Church of England in Australasia.

Published every Friday Morning.

Appeals to all Members of the Church of England, Members of the C.E.M.S., Churchwardens, Sidesmen and Parochial Councillors, Sunday School Teachers, Lay Readers, Catechists, and Clergy.

Specimen Copies on application to

THE CHURCH PUBLISHING CO. LTD.,

ROYAL INSURANCE BUILDINGS, 16 SPRING STREET, SYDNEY.

St. Margaret's, Brisbane.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND HIGH SCHOOL FOR GIRLS

Under the management of the Sisters of the Society of the Sacred Advent

Pupils prepared for examinations of the University of Queensland, Public Service and Associated Board R.A.

There are two Boarding Houses beautifully situated in extensive grounds overlooking the Brisbane River

BOARDERS RECEIVED FROM THE AGE OF EIGHT

FOR PROSPECTUS APPLY SISTER IN-CHARGE

St. Catharine's, Stanthorpe.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND HIGH SCHOOL FOR GIRLS

Under the management of the Sisters of the Society of the Sacred Advent

Pupils prepared for examinations of the University of Queensland, and Associated Board R.A.

Additional House secured

Increased Accommodation for Boarders

FOR PROSPECTUS APPLY SISTER IN-CHARGE

Church of England Girls' Schools

UNDER THE MANAGEMENT OF THE
SISTERS OF THE SACRED ADVENT.

S. ANNE'S, TOWNSVILLE,	Quarterly Fees for Boarders	£10 10s.
S. MARY'S, HERBERTON	" " "	£15 15s.

Pupils prepared for Queensland University and Associated Board R.A. Examinations.
Commercial Subjects taught. Open-air sleeping accommodation if required.

In connection with S. Mary's, Herberton, there is a separate House for Boys under nine years of age. Quarterly Fees, £12 10s.

Diocese of Carpentaria.

INTERCESSION PAPER

April, May, June, 1920.

THANKSGIVINGS.

LET US GIVE THANKS :—

For a generous gift and increased grants to the Mitchell River Mission.

For opportunities of developing the work of the Torres Straits Mission

For the low death rate during the influenza epidemic in the Torres Straits Islands.

For many mercies.

We thank Thee and bless Thee, O Lord.

INTERCESSIONS.

LET US PRAY :—

For all who have been confirmed, especially those at S. Paul's, Moa.

For the work of the Mothers' Union and of the Girls' Friendly Society.

For the parish of Mossman, Q.

For Priests for the vacant parishes.

For guidance for the Bishops at the Lambeth Conference.

For a worthy Thank-Offering for Victory and Peace.

We beseech Thee to hear us, good Lord.

The Carpenterian

FOR THE DIOCESE OF CARPENTARIA, NORTH AUSTRALIA.

Vol. XX.—No. 79.]

THURSDAY ISLAND, JULY 1, 1920.

PUBLISHED ON THE FIRST DAY OF EACH QUARTER.

[PRICE 2/6 A YEAR,
POST FREE.]

NOTICE.

All communications to be addressed to the Editor of The Carpenterian, Bishop's House, Thursday Island, to whom subscriptions may be sent. Subscription, 2/6 per annum, post free.

NOTICE TO CONTRIBUTORS.

All contributions of Parish News, etc., must reach the Editor before the last day of February, May, August, and November in each year.

S. P. G.

We are sincerely grateful to the venerable Society for the Propagation of the Gospel for remembering our work in its Intercession Paper. As one result a number of enquiries have reached us from England; and will the kind enquirers please note that their letters took three months to get here, which is nothing unusual. We shall always be glad to give any local information to friends who write to ask for it; it will help us if they are definite in their questions. This issue of the Carpenterian is very short of news; as a rule we are able to give reports of up-to-date news of the parishes and Missions, but the absence of the Bishop has made the collection of matter impossible.

The Bishop has appointed the Rev. C. B. Mirrlees as one of his commissaries in England. Mr. Mirrlees was a contemporary with the Bishop at Merton College, Oxford. He was for some time Rector of Croydon in this Diocese, so that he knows a good deal of the Diocese and its needs.

The Missions.

Mission Schools have been opened by the Diocese of Carpentaria at Boigu and Dauan, two islands within the sphere of the Torres Straits Mission, where there are no Government schools; the other islands in this Mission have Government schools, except Moa, which is managed by the Church. The two native catechons of this Mission are in charge of these new schools, and will be assisted by native teachers. This is an interesting forward movement, and its progress will be watched prayerfully by friends of the Mission. The native catechons and teachers are being maintained by the native Christians themselves, who have assessed themselves as follows, their contributions being in proportion to the population of each island:—

Murray Island	£27
Yorke	"	...	6
Coconut	"	...	7
Mabuiag	"	...	18
Dauan	"	...	6
Adam Village	7
Badu Island	18
Darnley	"	...	18
Stephen	"	...	3
Yam	"	...	7
Saibai	"	...	18
Boigu	"	...	6
Moa	"	...	9

These sums they agree to pay annually. The natives pay also the sum of five shillings (or more) at each marriage, and this money is to provide a pension fund for the native ministers.

The language of the schools is English, and the children learn reading, writing, arithmetic, geography, and other ordinary school subjects, but the education is religious. It seems difficult for Australians (since we have but few Church primary schools) to grasp what this means. In most of the States ministers of religion visit the State schools regularly for the purpose of imparting religious instruction, but that system falls short of the method of Church schools, where all the lessons are taught with a religious motive—the edifying of the pupils in Christ, the sanctifying of their mental powers and all their faculties to the service of God.

The Administrator found it necessary to visit S. Paul's, Moa, on April 29th, at the request of its superintendent on account of difficulties in the work there; the voyage in the cutter Banzai out and back occupied about thirty hours, though the whole distance is but sixty miles; but if the start on the return had been made a few hours later the return voyage alone would have taken twenty-four hours. It is impossible to keep a time-table when at sea in these parts, and a voyage of one who must get back to duty at a specified hour is a nervous proceeding.

Mr C. G. Lane, who has been helping unofficially at Mitchell River Mission for some five years past, reached Thursday Island in the ketch Francis Pritt on May 31st en route for Sydney, where he hopes to start some special work for the Board of Missions.

There was some severe sickness among the staff at Mitchell River Mission during the wet season, but at last news all were well.

During the absence on furlough of the Rev. W. H. MacFarlane, his duties are undertaken by the Rev. J. J. E. Done, who, by spending most of his time, and nearly all his nights, at sea, manages to visit periodically all the islands in Torres Straits, except those attached to S. Paul's, Moa.

The work lately begun among the natives in Hammond Island, which is rendered difficult by their proximity to Thursday Island, is showing encouraging signs of coming success.

It is intended soon to plan some method of evangelizing the people at certain favourable spots not yet touched by Christianity.

The crops at Mitchell River, which, as in most parts of Australia, were poor, and looked as if they would fail completely, were saved by the late rains, and now are expected to succeed well. The amount of toil that has been expended in experimenting with the soil of this unknown land is very great, and the toilers have had little enough to encourage them to continue, but their labours, when they have found out how to farm their lands, will be of industrial and social benefit to the whole Commonwealth.

Roper River Mission, which is so remote that we seldom hear from it, being one of the most isolated places in the whole world, reports that the bad season will be hard on the live stock, but the health of the people is good, and the staff in good spirits and eager for the work.

Lambeth Conference.

It may interest people to know what the 300 Bishops who are expected to meet in July this year at Lambeth Palace, London, will talk about.

These are the subjects selected for discussion:

1. Relation to and Reunion with other Churches.
 - (A) Episcopal Churches.
 - (B) Non-Episcopal Churches, with questions as to—
 1. Recognition of Ministers.
 2. "Validity" of Sacraments.
 3. Suggested Transitional Steps.
2. Missionary Problems.
 - (A) Relation between Missions and growing Churches.
 - (B) Missions and Governments.
 - (C) Liturgical variations permissible to a Province or Diocese.
 - (D) Marriage questions and other practical problems.
3. The Christian Faith in relation to—
 - (A) Spiritualism.
 - (B) Christian Science.
 - (C) Theosophy.
4. Problems of Marriage and Sexual Morality.
5. The Position of Women in the Councils and Ministrations of the Nations.
6. Christianity and International Relations, especially the League of Nations.
7. The Opportunity and Duty of the Church in regard to Industrial and Social Problems.
8. The Development of Provinces in the Anglican Communion.

The Parishes.

THURSDAY ISLAND.—The monument erected in the Cathedral to the memory of Annie Slade was dedicated by the Bishop of Carpentaria at Mattins on the 21st March. It consists of a clerestory window and a mural tablet. The window is adapted from Hoffmann's picture of the First Appearance of the Risen Lord (S. John xx. 11.) and is the first of our stained glass windows to be made in Queensland, the seven others in the Church having been imported from England. Though the clerestory windows are small and therefore difficult to fill satisfactorily, the artist, recognizing the limitations of his material, has succeeded in producing a beautiful picture, displaying effectively the lights of early dawn and the radiance emanating from the spiritual body of the Risen Christ. The tablet bears the inscription:—

CHRISTE CAELI DOMINE	IN PIAM MEMORIAM		DONA EI REQUIEM
	ANNAE SLADE
	IN PATRIAM CAELESTEM REVOCATAE A. S. MDCCCXCIX.
	HANC TABVLAM
	VNA CVM FENESTRA IN PARIETI CLERESTORII SVpra INSERTA
	MARITVS EIVS HVIVSCE ECCLESIAE PRESBYTER
	ET AMICI QVIDAM EX INSVLANIS INDIGENIS
	POSVERVNT MAERENTES

Letter from the Bishop:—"My Dear Sub-dean, Will you please in the "Parish Gazette" let people know that I am very grateful for the help they have given me towards the expenses of my trip to England to attend the Lambeth Conference. Whatever people say, there is no doubt that the Thursday Island people can keep a secret! I had not the slightest suspicion of what kind friends were doing, and it was an absolute surprise when I found inside a note from Mrs. Foxton a cheque for £50. I do not mind admitting that the financing of the trip has given me some anxiety, but I believed that all would be well, and now I need not worry about that any more. Yours very sincerely, Henry, Bishop of Carpentaria."

From the "Parish Gazette."

The Easter meeting was duly held on 20th April, and was well attended, and showed that the parish continues to be able to carry on in spite of its peculiar difficulties. The Churchwardens have a small credit balance. The meeting instructed the Parish Council to consider an increase in the Vicar's stipend, though the Vicar announced that at present he could afford to remain without an increased income, nor did he think the parish could pay more. The different works of the parish have continued their steady activities. The Book Depot, which is an arrangement for selling religious books at Brisbane prices, through the kind help of a local business firm who display the stock and effect the sales without charge, did business to the extent of about £50, mostly with the people of the Missions, who are eager to possess bibles and service books.

During the Vicar's absence on furlough, the Bishop of Carpentaria acted as parish priest and diocesan secretary and accountant, and as nurse and general handy man during the influenza epidemic.

The local branch of the Mothers' Union at its meeting on May 28th took occasion to say good-bye to Mrs. Foxton, who, with her husband, is to leave the district in June to return to her home in Brisbane; and presented her with a small memento of friendship—a card tray made of pearl-shell mounted with silver, a reminder of the island of pearls. The meeting was largely attended, and the members expressed their appreciation of the help of one who has been a good Churchwoman, both by worshipping regularly in the Church and by working steadily for it, and also a good citizen, ready with hospitality and forward in every good work, especially ally the Red Cross Society and the local hospital. Life in the North is often difficult, and Mrs. Foxton, both by good works and good example, has helped to make it less difficult and more pleasant for many of us.

COOKTOWN.—The Rev. B. S. Cole arrived to commence his duties as Rector in the middle of March, and was followed by Mrs. Cole a few days later, and the people are trying to keep the parish going, although there are now so few of them.

MOSSMAN.—After the cyclone reported in our last issue there was almost continuous rain for many weeks, which rotted the roads and prevented building operations, and did further damage to property; the material for repairing the damage done by the cyclone was got under shelter, and the Rector hopes for better weather conditions soon.

NORMANTON with CROYDON.—We have not yet found a priest for this vacant parish, though the Bishop's commissaries are looking out for one, and the Archbishop of Brisbane has been most kind in trying to help. A self-denying man is needed, who is able and willing to face poverty, isolation, discomfort and hard work. The climate is healthy and generally pleasant.

DARWIN.—The Rector reports all well, and the people are hopeful of making progress with the organizations. Very many persons have left, and others are to go as soon as they can get ships to carry them, on account of the closing of the principal industry—the meat-works.

Unpaid Curates.

There has been a lot of discussion lately about the poverty of the clergy, especially in England, where it is a shame, and is largely the result of parliamentary interference with the liberties of the Church; our brethren there, both clerical and lay, have now good hope of relief from that tyranny. In Australia the poverty of the clergy, in the cases where it is distressing, is mostly caused by the indifference of the people in the just expenditure of the Church's revenues; there are anomalies which should not exist. In this Diocese the conditions are such that every clergyman must endure poverty and hard work, and only those who are able and willing to face those conditions should come here; but that does not mean distress, and although no clergyman receives more than a bare living, with a good deal of discomfort, we trust that none is penurious. But the most painful feature of the discussion is one which obtains everywhere, and is worse than a shame—it is scandal—and that is the necessity laid so often on the wives of the clergy of doing much unpaid work which is the duty of all the faithful to share, not to leave to one.

The Church of England contemplates married priesthood, and makes its arrangements accordingly; and the priest's wife is very often his most valuable asset, his greatest help in his work. Naturally, she will take a leading part in the women's work in the parish, but that does not mean that she is an unpaid curate. She has no official position at all, but is a private Christian, whose first duty is in her home, and whose most valuable church work is the example she shows of practical Christianity in managing her home. Yet in the secret and highly improper enquiries sometimes made by patrons of livings, there is generally something like, "Will his wife spend about four hours a day in doing some of our work for us?" It is not usually put so plainly, but that is what many a parish is seeking. A clergyman's wife who wore herself out in parish work had it said of her, "They also serve who only stand and wait!" In an obituary notice of a clergyman's wife whose final illness was the direct result of overwork—not for her husband, but for the parish—it was patronisingly asserted, "owing to the weak state of her health she could not take a very active part in Church work." When a certain clergyman died, and, through his misfortune, left his family destitute, the churchwardens called on the people and asked for money, which was obtained to a liberal amount, but they were disgusted at the answer made by quite a few who ought to have known better. "He was a good man, and did us much good, but his widow never worked for us; what should we help her?"

Every faithful Churchman can raise an effective protest against the impudent idea that it is the "duty" of a clergyman to provide his parish, at his own charges, with a worker who "ought" to do everything that others cannot or will not do. Patrons need clear views themselves, and should not hesitate to rebuke sharply wherever they find such opinions lurking. Among some of the sects as among the modern Jews, a minister is the were slave of a congregation, and it is the custom of slave-owners to extend their proprietorship to a slave's family, but the members of the Church of England cannot afford to tolerate similar abuses.

Prayers for the Lambeth Conference.

The prayers of the faithful are asked specially on July 4th (Sunday) and 6th for the Lambeth Conference and for the Reunion of Christendom; this request is being urged by the A.B.M. with the approval of the acting Primate. We regret that, as we publish only quarterly, we cannot advertise this matter to our readers beforehand, but notice of it has been sent to the Rectors of the parishes in the Diocese. The reason for these particular dates is that the Lambeth Conference begins its sessions in the week commencing on July 4th, and is to discuss and further the question of the Reunion of Christendom on Tuesday, July 6th. We append the forms of prayer suggested because they are suitable for use, either privately or at family prayers, the first at any time during the sessions of the Conference; the second at any time by those who pray that the rents in the seamless coat may be mended and the broken ramparts of the city of God repaired; and the third at any time by all who want to use their influence to make our land Christian.

"Almighty and everlasting God, from whom all wisdom and understanding; be present by the power of Thy Spirit with the Bishops and Pastors of Thy flock (about to be) assembled to confer upon those things which make for the maintenance, well-being and extension of Thy Holy Church; especially we beseech Thee to grant that through their deliberations the reunion of all who love Thee may be brought nearer. Grant to Thy Bishops that, seeking only Thine honour and glory, they may be guided in all their consultations to perceive the more excellent way, and also may have grace to follow the same; through Him who is the head over all things to the Church, Thy Son, Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen."

"O God, who didst plan the gospel for an undivided Church, refuse not because of misunderstandings of its message which rend the unity of Christendom, to continue Thy saving work in the broken order of our making. Prosper the labours of all Christians who strive to further righteousness and faith in Thy Christ. Help us to place the truth above our conception of it, and joyfully to recognize the presence of Thy Spirit wherever He may choose to dwell among men. Teach us wherever we are sectarian in our contentions, and give us grace humbly to confess our fault to those whom our communion has in past days caused to break its fellowship by ecclesiastical tyranny, by spiritual barrenness or moral inefficiency, that we may become more worthy and competent to bind up the Church the wounds of which we are guilty, and so to hasten the day when there will be one flock under one Shepherd, Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen."

"We stand in Thy presence, O Lord, and anew deliberately and solemnly we pledge ourselves to Thee; take us, our means, our strength, our all, us and our land, for Thine; we dedicate the country Thou hast given us to a purer life, to a more religious and unselfish patriotism, to a deeper loyalty to the great Kingship of Thy Son; work out in our land and by it what purposes Thou wilt; it is not ours but Thine; we are Thy servants; give us patient hearts, till Thou shalt create in all nations Thy chosen pattern of Christian government and Christian liberty. Read our hearts and accept our devotion. Thou art our God and we will praise Thee. Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, goodwill towards men. Amen."

The suggestion made in connection with this devotion that on July 6th, Christians go into the Church at any time during the day, and there pray separately and silently, after resolving what to pray for and how, is one that might well be given a permanent place in the devotions of those many who have not yet been in the habit of practising it, and would be productive of much good.

Whenever you wish to pray for anything in particular, or to bring the needs of any person before the Throne of the heavenly grace, after thinking about it go into the Church and there intercede, because that is the most suitable place, and makes the act of worship more definite. It is not necessary to take any notice of anyone else who may be there at the same time. Prayer is work, and cannot be accomplished without effort and practice; but there are several excellent books of devotion, any one of which will give the required help; and the Psalms have been for ages the hymn-book of the Saints, so that men familiar with them can always find in those holy words something to express their mind and open their heart to God. And for worshippers who find the Psalms too hard, the hymn-book will prove a useful help when they pray.

All the Churches in this Diocese are kept open every day for private prayer and meditation, and the more they are used the better it will be.

Prohibition.

The electors of this State will be required, and compelled, in October next, to decide on the issue of the future of the liquor traffic. This is not a question of principle, but of method only. All Christians are agreed on the principle that drunkenness is a sin against God; but it does not improve a man's moral character to compel him to abstain from alcohol. When JESUS is at the feast the wine will do no harm; and when He is not invited it does not seem to matter very much whether the wedding guests are total abstainers or not. In other words, those who are converted to Christianity are in no danger from strong drink; while those who neglect the only way of salvation cannot be saved by being teetotallers. The problem is to produce, not a country kept sober by force, but a country whose citizens are Christians—a much more difficult matter, but the only perfect solution of social evils.

But there can be no question that the liquor traffic as at present conducted has many and grievous evils associated with it, which we all should like to see eliminated. To many it seems hopeless to attempt getting rid of the evils unless the traffic is altogether abolished; they point out that we have had every opportunity for ages of controlling the sale and consumption of liquor, and everything we have done has only made matters worse.

Public ownership seems to meet with but little favour, because we are painfully aware that Government officials are not to be trusted with the control of liquor, but it has to be considered, for it is an issue on which we must vote.

We are bound to call our readers' attention to the necessity of using alcohol, though in minute quantities, in Christian worship; whatever the law says, this must be manufactured or imported and sold; and we must have ample security that Prohibition cannot forbid it before we can vote conscientiously for "total abolition of alcohol fit for human consumption." Many prohibitionists hope that laws will be made to render the use of wine in Christian worship impossible, so we must be careful. We are straitly commanded by the Lord of heaven and earth, by Him who alone can save, and whose sacrifice has power to redeem the worst characters to "Do this," and we dare not disobey.

We beg all electors to pray, and keep on praying until they receive enlightenment from above. The question can only be answered by the people themselves, and they must make up their own minds, and have a will of their own. The difficulty is the old one between "Lead us not into temptation" and "Blessed is the man that endureth temptation"; between "Am I my brother's keeper?" and "Every man shall bear his own load." It is quite possible that Prohibition may cause evils worse than it cures; but this is not the place to discuss the value of alcohol as a selective factor.

The personal opinion of the Bishop of Carpentaria, which his lordship has promulgated to his clergy, is that on the whole and in our circumstances it is better to give Prohibition a trial, since that vote could be reversed in three years or at any triennial period thereafter if it proved a failure.

One aspect of the question which should influence Northern electors is the notorious fact that grog is constantly supplied illegally to aboriginals; the police make a capture occasionally, but so long as grog is sold it will be sold to aboriginals—with disastrous results.

Forrest River Mission.

Rev. E. R. Gribble, of the Forrest River Mission, arrived in Sydney in May looking very well. He is undertaking deputation work in New South Wales during June and July, and later in other States, and hopes to return to the Forrest River not later than Christmas.

Mr Gribble has given us the following news of the Forrest River Mission staff:—Miss Kent and Miss Kitchenham are leaving this month for Forrest River. Mr Freeman has returned, and hopes to be ordained Deacon eventually by the Bishop of the North-west. Mr Sherwin will go to college, after five years of strenuous work, when Mr Gribble returns to the Mission. Mr Gribble is hoping to take back with him other workers, including his wife and son.

The Carpenterian

FOR THE DIOCESE OF CARPENTARIA,
NORTH AUSTRALIA.

Vol. XX., No. 79. Thursday Island, July 1, 1920

Holiness.

The last part of the Faith, commemorated annually in the kalendar of the Christian year (except the characteristically English Festival of the Holy Trinity, which summarizes the whole), is the Festival of the Holy Spirit, celebrated on Whitsunday; and it brings a message which we may remember, and be the happier for remembering, during the rest of the year.

Let us have it always in our thoughts that our God is holy; each Sunday we sing to him at our Eucharist, "Holy, holy, holy, Lord." He is the Holy Trinity; we describe His essential nature by that adjective rather than by any other. The Spirit of God is the Holy Spirit, and is so addressed because His peculiar office is to make His people holy, as the Catechism taught us. Here are the two sides of the Word—our God is holy, therefore we must be holy; that is our path to righteousness; we can develop all the virtues we admire if we are holy.

The Book of Leviticus is not much read, we fear; it seems to be filled with directions for ceremonies which are no longer observed, since our Saviour fulfilled the Law and took away the requirements of the Old Covenant, that He might establish the New Covenant; yet that book shows us what holiness is.

Those ceremonies were a means of attaining outward holiness, which is necessary as a general rule in order to attain true inward or moral holiness. Ten chapters of the book, beginning with xvii. and on to the end, except the last chapter of all, have been called in our own days "The Law of Holiness," because of the constant recurrence of such expressions as "Be ye holy, for I am holy," "I, the Lord your God, am holy," and the like. And as we read those ten chapters we see that they enjoin such things as honesty, truthfulness, respect for parents, fair dealing, kindness, social purity, and they give no reason for their injunctions except such reminders as those we have quoted.

What is that but the latter half of the Ten Commandments, which we hear every Sunday? That is moral holiness, "My duty towards my neighbour," and its place in Leviticus corresponds to the place of the Commandment's in our teaching. They are read at the time of Holy Communion, to show that the way to moral holiness is the pure worship of God.

The root idea of the word is separation. A person or thing is holy when separated from all profane and common uses, and kept for the service of a god; of course among the heathen a person can be "holy" without being good or pure, because his holiness is only that which he conceives as belonging to his god.

But it is the nature of the One True God to be separate from all tyranny, greed, deceit, exploitation, cruelty, impurity; and those are the vices forbidden to Christians; they are the cause of the crimes denounced in the Commandments. His holiness is stainless perfection and awful majesty, and He requires that our holiness shall be of the nature of His.

To teach the hearts of His people the importance of this principle, everything connected with God is described in the Bible as "holy"; He dwells in a holy heaven, He is seated on a holy throne, He is surrounded by holy attendants; His Name is holy, His arm is holy, His people are a holy people, their city is His holy hill, and we still call the country of His ancient people the Holy Land.

In the Old Testament that word is used sometimes of outward holiness, sometimes of moral holiness, sometimes of both, and in varying proportions; but in the New Testament it is always moral holiness that is in the foreground—its first readers took the outward or ceremonial holiness for granted, they were used to practising it, and they had to learn in their hearts that it is useless without its inward spiritual counterpart.

We, too, have our holy places, holy books, holy days, and they are all valuable and as a rule necessary, but they are useless by themselves; they are meant to promote the holy life. We do need to keep Sunday, we do need to go to Church, we do need to read the Bible, but those observances are not ends in themselves. The heart, the inmost self, ought to be sanctified, given up to God to love and serve Him.

And that is the work of the Spirit of God, who is called Holy nearly a hundred times in the New Testament, because His peculiar office is to "sanctify me and all the elect people of God." This sanctification begins at baptism, and goes on all through life, so far as we yield to His gracious influence.

We do need in these days to keep in mind the work of the Holy Spirit, to protect our minds against the delusions of "Spiritualism," which is but a revival of witchcraft, and has a strange fascination for many of those who do not believe in Christ.

Oh, the road to En-dor is the oldest road

And the craziest road of all!

Straight it leads to the Witch's abode,

As it did in the days of Saul,

And nothing has changed of the sorrow in store,

For such as go down on the road to En-dor.*

Christian Holiness consists in separation from the evil ways of evil men, true absolution and release; but not separation from evil men; it does not say, "Stand by thyself, come not near unto me, for I am holier than thou." While we are in this world, we must be surrounded by all that wickedness which cannot touch our God, and must not touch us, we are to separate ourselves from it by other means than by fleeing from the world. We are taught to distinguish between the sin and the sinner, to hate the sin but to love the sinner, and by our holiness to reform the sinner.

For separation is from wickedness to the service of God; devotion to the Holy One, and to men His offspring for His sake.

How am I to know whether the Holy Spirit is with me, guiding my mind aright? S. John tells us, "No man speaking in the Holy Spirit saith Jesus is anathema." The most shocking falsehoods are circulated by wicked men, probably not in full possession of human faculties, against the world's Redeemer; blasphemous stories circulate in the bush, and in the underworld of the cities, and a lonely Churchman must sometimes decide whether he will allow them to be repeated in his presence. In fact, there will often be petty persecution of men who dare to confess Jesus as Lord; it is part of the burden of the Cross, borne cheerfully by all who have the Spirit.

The result of holiness is freedom; the service of God is perfect freedom; the Spirit of God is the spirit of comfort, release, and gladness; the sanctified are the happy; for them the years are happy in the passing and happy in the memory; because they have a future to look forward to; for them the blessed hope of eternal gladness is no delusion, they are convinced of it, on the evidence, and they can go forward boldly in their faith, unashamed to meet Him from whom all holiness emanates.

Family Prayers.

We are sometimes asked to recommend forms of prayer suitable for use in families. But for use in this Diocese none of those published are so suitable as the forms contained in the Book of Common Prayer; the manuals, excellent as some of them are, contemplate circumstances so different from ours that they contain much that is unsuitable and would seem unreal. The conditions in out-back homes certainly require special prayers, but the collects of the Prayer Book, even when not specially appropriate, are always useful.

It is much to be desired that the good old custom of family worship should be preserved in homes which have it, and introduced into all Christian homes; we recognize the difficulties of getting the family together, both in town and country, but if only half, or less, of the household can be present, that is no reason for not getting those who are there to pray together.

Anything to which one has not been accustomed seems strange at first, but there should be no room for the opinion that the worship of God in a decent home is unnatural, or that prayer is the "parson's" business; the people of the bush are in the habit of doing the work of a surgeon, when the professional man is not available, and doing it well too; and they could pray well also. The natural feeling of shyness at obtruding one's piety should be overcome in one's own home; we are too apt to seem to consent with the view held by secularists—that religion is such a dangerous matter that it would better be kept in the background.

At least on Sundays, in places where there is no Church service, great good could be done by some instruction in divinity and some practice of worship.

We venture to suggest something like this:

Let the head of each household choose the most convenient time, whether after one of the meals, or late in the evening, and keep to the same time every day.

*The Years Between. Rudyard Kipling. Methuen & Co., 919

Let a hand-bell be rung to assemble the family into one room ; this duty, if given to a child, will be done regularly and eagerly.

Let one be appointed to read from the Bible, while the rest sit and listen. The reading may be done according to the Table of Lessons in the Prayer Book, choosing, say, the Second Lesson at Morning Prayer of each day. Or the Epistles and Gospels of the Prayer Book may be read one for each day—they will provide readings for about six months. Or the four gospels may be read straight through from the New Testament, a dozen verses or so each day.

Then let all stand and say the Creed, and the Lord's Prayer, and the two collects which follow it in the Order for Morning Prayer (or in the Order for Evening Prayer, according to the time of the day).

In most houses it is better to stand for prayer than to kneel, as being more convenient.

The Collect of the Day could be added before the two fixed collects.

The whole should take not more than ten minutes, and, if the reading was short, would not take more than five minutes.

If there are but two or three members of the household present, that would not matter. And as the above suggested words are used by millions of Christians, there is nothing in them to make anyone feel too conspicuous.

In some houses a hymn could be used, and would be found very helpful ; where there cannot be singing the words of a hymn could be repeated by all together.

On Sundays all, both adults and children, might recite or read the Catechism, one reading the questions and all joining in the answers. In most small editions of the Prayer Book the Catechism is in tiny print ; but it would soon become so well known that it could be read easily even with that disadvantage.

This is suggested to those who cannot get to Church.

It is especially "Christ's sheep who are scattered abroad," who live far away from the regular ministrations of religion that such recognition of God would be found helpful ; it would bring light and joy into many lives ; it would strengthen good character ; it would render the children more fit to go out into the world, and it is the natural thing to do in a Christian man's home. Of course, it will be jeered at, and, of course, that does not matter.

It is rather a reproach to us that Europeans travelling on one of the little ships manned by natives which abound in the Torres Straits are surprised to see the native crew assemble daily for prayer. Why should they be surprised ? To a convert from heathendom who has learnt the power of prayer the surprising thing is that white men should neglect that power to such an extent.

The advantage of gaining instruction from the Catechism will be realised by anyone who has seen a congregation of men and women seated in Church reciting it, while running explanations are given by the Catechist who asks the questions. The grotesque ignorance often met with would be impossible if everybody took care to remember that essential knowledge.

A collect like this will be found helpful :

"Visit, O Lord, this our household and habitation, and drive far from it all the snares of the enemy, that no evil accident befall us, nor any plague come nigh our dwelling. Let Thy holy angels abide in our home to preserve it in peace, and let Thy blessing be ever upon it. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen."

The Bishop's Movements.

The Bishop of Carpentaria has been so good as to send us the following : The Bishop left Thursday Island by the "Arawatta" on Tuesday, March 23rd, and after calling at Cooktown and Townsville, arrived in Brisbane about midnight on Monday, March 29th. While in Brisbane he was the guest of Mrs. Sully, at Kangaroo Point, for part of the time, and of the Archbishop of Brisbane.

On his arrival in Brisbane the Bishop found that the "Demosthenes," by which boat berths had been booked for him and Mr. MacFarlane, was not to leave till the middle of May, and as this would mean arriving in England after the Lambeth Conference had begun its meetings, the Bishop arranged for berths, after some trouble and many visits to shipping offices, on the "Suevic," to leave Sydney towards the end of April. These arrangements were not completed till April 7th, and on the following Saturday the Bishop left Brisbane for Lismore, in which district he spent a week, going on to Sydney by steamer from Byron Bay. Five days were spent in Sydney, and on Saturday, April 24th, the Bishop left for Melbourne by the "Suevic," where the boat was delayed eight days taking in cargo. The Bishop and Mr. MacFarlane left Melbourne on Tuesday, May 4th, and the first port of call was to be Durban.

While in Brisbane the Bishop took the services on Good Friday at S. Barnabas', Ithaca, and was the celebrant at the 6 a.m. celebration on Easter Day at Holy Trinity, Woolloongabba, where he also preached at 11 a.m. Eucharist. In the evening of the same day he preached at S. Mary's, Kangaroo Point. He attended a meeting of the Committee of the Women's Auxiliary at the Church House, and also addressed the members of the Auxiliary on Friday evening, April 9th.

While in Melbourne the Bishop was kept busy with meetings and sermons. On Tuesday, April 27th, he attended the meeting of the Executive Committee of the Australian Board of Missions for Victoria ; and spoke the same afternoon at the annual meeting of the Women's Auxiliary. On Sunday, May 2nd, he was the preacher in the morning at Holy Trinity, Kew, and in the evening at Holy Trinity, Balaclava. On Monday, May 3rd, the Bishop addressed the members of the Junior Clergy Missionary Association at the Cathedral, the Theological Students of Trinity College and Redly Hall at Trinity College, attended the meeting of the Council of A.B.M., and spoke at the annual meeting of the Victorian branch of A.B.M. in Melbourne.

Industrial Ailment.

No place has felt the blight of recent industrial disturbances more than this poor Diocese ; we have been half-starved because no ships could be manned to bring us food ; our parishioners are departing in thousands because the industries which employed them are closed, and afraid to venture on re-opening, and our immense and vastly productive country is going to waste because no one can be induced to till it.

Many principles from which much is hoped are becoming widely accepted ; as that employers must consider the interests of the community and the well-being of the employees ; that every man should have an opportunity for self-determination ; that no man should employ another unless he provides decent conditions ; that industry and efficiency deserve more than mere wages ; that success in industry depends upon the spirit of brotherhood.

But what hope is there of carrying out these principles except IN CHRIST ? They are Christian principles, and need for their practice the driving force of Christian graces. Real peace and contentment can be produced and preserved in an industry when all parties are inspired by the Spirit of Christ, and all other remedies are delusive.

Our Church's Committee on Industrial Problems has resolved : "That the true life of man is the life of brotherhood, not strife ; that the true wealth of a body politic consists in the persons composing it, to whom the use of all forms of property should be subservient ; that industry rightly conceived is a social service, not a selfish, competitive struggle ; that all men who labour have the right to live honourably by their labour, and all men equally have the duty to labour in order to live ; that there is no moral justification for the burden on the community of the idle or self-indulgent, or for the social institutions which encourage them ; that the resources of a Christian community must be used to provide necessities for all before they are employed to provide luxuries for a few ; these truths we hold are self-evident, and we believe that the economic life of a Christian Society must be based on them."

These principles will avert the horrible menace of Bolshevism, which, if it gets a footing in Australia, is more likely to do so in our Diocese than anywhere else. The immense debt which the cause of human betterment has owed in the past both to the Church and to individual Christians can never be estimated. But the Church has not been powerful enough in its attack on the forces of wrong. "We have been content with ambulance work when we ought to have been assaulting the strongholds of evil. We have allowed avarice and selfishness and grinding competition to work havoc with the broad spaces of human life. We want a strenuous re-affirmation of the principles of justice, mercy and brotherhood as sovran over every department of human life."

We have quoted part of the above from pamphlets issued by the Industrial Christian Fellowship, Church House, Westminster, S.W. 1, which we commend to our readers. It proclaims boldly "There can be no real and permanent solution of industrial problems apart from the gospel of Christ; and it is for those most in touch with labour to see to it that those principles are applied."

It emphasizes the need of good character, without which no comforts or pleasant environment will produce contentment. And the secret of character, and the power by which character is formed, strengthened and protected, is in the Church and only there.

The whole immense question, which all citizens should study, can never be understood by such as, for example, use the terms "master" and "servant" as if they were synonyms for "employer" and "employed." The latter terms describe a relation of contract only, the former a relation of status, which does not exist in our country, and which implies responsibilities that are certainly not recognized by employers.

We beg for the prayers of our readers, for a deeper sense of justice and equity in commercial dealings, and for the love of God in our hearts in order that we may practice Christian love to men, and for the practical application of the principles of our religion to social life.

Donations Wanted.

This Diocese has no endowment yielding income, except the Bishop's income, which is quite small; and the faithful within it are so few and so widely scattered that we are dependent on help from the faithful outside it for the carrying on of our work. Contributions from within the Diocese are liberal; also, no priest receives more stipend than a bare living; and the cost of administering the Diocese is kept down to a minimum; the Bishop is his own Registrar, the Sub-Dean of the Cathedral is a parish priest, and receives no payment from Diocesan funds; the same person is Honorary Diocesan Secretary and general factotum. But the population is extremely small, and the immense wealth that is produced, even under our primitive and undeveloped conditions, is spent elsewhere. All the Missions are maintained by the Missionary Societies, but they contribute nothing to the parishes. We are in the habit of receiving donations from friends in other parts of Australia, for which we are very grateful, and, in addition, A.B.M. receives for us, and forwards, donations contributed through it from friends in Australia. But A.B.M. has ceased to appeal for us, with this result:

Donations received per A.B.M. for—

1914	£161
1915	115
1916	66
1917	118
1918	121
1919	83

In addition, we have received help from friends in England, through the Carpentarian Association, for which also we are very grateful; but, owing to the deaths of friends there, these donations also have fallen as follows:

Carpentarian Association for—

1914	£219
1915	105
1916	190
1917	190
1918	140
1919	60

So far, nothing has been received this year from either body. There are men and women willing to endure the hardships and disappointments of the North, but they will be unable to go on doing so if their meagre livings are reduced, especially in these times of soaring prices. We therefore beg our friends who believe in the value of the work to seek for more contributors. We need £200 a year from the Carpentarian Association to pay the grants to certain parishes and the travelling expenses of the clergy (except the Bishop, who pays his own travelling expenses), and the work will be seriously hampered if we do not receive that gift. Those who are willing to contribute through the Association can most readily obtain information from the Bishop's commissaries in England, whose names are published in this paper. Until this year our Missions have received moneys from the S.P.G., but we have notified that Society that we shall not apply for any grant from it next year because the Missions here ought to be sufficiently supported from within Australia. It is to minister to our own countrymen that we appeal for funds—our brethren living lonely lives of hardship—a week's journey from a post office—the pioneers who are breaking the way for the rest.

SUBSCRIPTIONS TO "THE CARPENTARIAN":—

Mrs Burnett 2/6, Mrs Kirk 3/- (these two should have been acknowledged previously); each 2/6: Mrs Norgate, Mr Toulasik, Mrs Crees, senr., Mrs W. S. Johnston, Rev. E. Taffs, Mrs Geo. Clarke, Mrs Clarke, senr., Mrs J. Huband Smith; Dr. Ivens 1/6, Mrs Laishley 2/-, Mrs A. H. Simpson £1, Mr R. B. Herbert 5/-, Mrs Zabel 5/-, Rev. W. M. Wilkinson 10/-.

In Congress.

The Anglo-Catholic Congress is being held in London. The Secretary is the Rev. Marcus E. Atlay, a son of a former Bishop of Hereford, and the design of the Congress, which is likely to be largely attended, is to elucidate and to strengthen the position of those in the Church of England who owe their origin and devotion to the Tractarian Movement. Incidentally, they hope to serve the objects of the Lambeth Conference by defining their attitude on some of the burning questions of to-day. Mr Atlay writes under the head of "Strengthening the Faithful":

"Chaplain after Chaplain has come back from the front and told us that soldiers and sailors in the main are men who have no knowledge whatever of what we call Catholic Faith and Practice; organised religion has left them untouched. And we know that this is true also to a very large extent of what are called the educated classes. Whatever the cause may be, it is an indisputable fact that England, as we know it to-day, is amazingly ignorant of what the Catholic Faith really is. It is the aim of the Congress to put before the English-speaking world what English Catholics really hold with regard to such great questions as modern philosophy, modern criticism, the Roman Church, Nonconformity, and social and industrial problems. And further, we desire above all things to publish plainly and distinctly the good things of the Catholic Faith and the Christian religion. The Congress is designed first to be evangelical, but also we have to make clear to the world where we stand and where we mean to stand, that we are not going in any direction save in the direction of our Lord through His grace given to us in the Sacraments of the Catholic Church in England."

A Missionary Mission was held at Christchurch, South Yarra, during May. The Mission was taken by the Chairman of A.B.M., assisted by the Victorian Secretary. A new departure was made in that the Mission was extended over eight days in place of the usual four. As a result of the Mission, the parish hopes to accept the responsibility for an additional £50 per annum for the support of the Rev. E. E. Harrison in Japan. Mr. Harrison went out from Christchurch to his work.

Glennie Memorial School, Church of England School for Girls TOOWOOMBA.

PRINCIPAL - - - MISS LAWRENCE
(Assisted by a highly qualified Resident Staff).

The School is under the direction of
His Grace the Archbishop of Brisbane, and Council.

Thorough Education. Pupils prepared for University Examinations.

MUSIC AND LANGUAGE SPECIALITIES.

Pupils prepared for the Examinations of the Associated Board R.A.M., R.C.M.

The New Building, situated over 2000 feet above sea level in twelve acres of ground, has been constructed according to the most approved modern ideas. There is accommodation for fifty (50) boarders, and all the rooms are light and excellently ventilated. The health and comfort of pupils is specially studied.

TORRES STRAITS MISSION.

Balance Sheet for the Year ended 31st December, 1919.

RECEIPTS AND EXPENDITURE.

RECEIPTS.			EXPENDITURE.
	£	s. d.		£	s. d.
Australian Board of Missions ...	1,000	0 0	Salaries ...	401	13 5
" " " ...	375	0 0	"Herald" A/c.
		1,375 0 0	Wages, £120/14/1; Stores, £96/10/6; Gear,
Diocese of Carpentaria ...	35	12 0	£31/18/2; Insurance, £16/1/-; Chain,
" " per Rev. G. A. Luscombe	47	12 6	£23/18/4; Repairs, £8/9/3; New Sails,
		83 4 6	£72/3/10 ...	369	15 2
Papuan Industries Ltd. ...		12 3	Less Diocese of Carpentaria...	28	5 0
				341	10 2
			"Oituli" A/c.
			Wages, £65/11/6; Gear, £37/5/4; Stores,
			£68/15/11; Insurance, £6/0/6; Dinghy, £10;
			Sails, £34; Repairs, £59/11/-	281	4 3
			Less Donation ...	5	0 0
				276	4 3
			St. Paul's, Moa.
			Stipends and Board, £239/4/5; General,
			£4/19/1; Stores, £32/6/10; Grindstone,
			£4/4/6 ...	280	14 10
			Less Government Grant, £250; Church Collections, £4/1/4; Refunds, £6/12/8;
			Lamp, £1/1/- New Bell, £11/5/2 ...	273	0 2
				7	14 8
			Training College.
			Allowance Students, £9/15/-; Dinghy, £10;
			Stores, etc., £93/10/1 ...	113	5 1
			Less Island Contributions—Badu, £5/13/6;
			Darnley, £1/7/6; Mabuiag, £4/15/9; Yorke,
			£3/0/6; Adam, £2/3/6; Donation, 3/-...	17	3 9
				96	1 4
			"Banzai" A/c.
			Captain's Wages, £38/15/-; Crew, £21/12/11;
			Chain, £18/12/7; Repairs, £13/5/-; Sails,
			£47/8/10; Insurance, £4/0/6; Stores,
			£17/2/11 ...	160	17 9
			Invalid Food and Medicine A/c.
			General, £4/10/10; Special for Influenza, £6/4/9
				10	15 7
			House Repairs.
			Moa, £39/13/3; Mabuiag, £8/4/2; Darnley,
			£6/2/5 ...	53	19 10
			General Expenses.
			Exchanges, Telegrams, etc., £6/16/-; Workers'
			Compensation, £5/12/6; Interest, £7/12/6;
			Auditor, £1/1/-; Agency, £18; Sundries,
			£4/16/6; Medical Attendance, £4/4/- ...	48	2 6
			Excess Receipts over Expenditure ...	61	17 3
				£1,458	16 9

LIABILITIES AND ASSETS.

LIABILITIES.			ASSETS
	£	s. d.		£	s. d.
Island Churches—Badu ...	27	8 1	Island Churches—Adam ...	2	12 9
Coconut ...	31	14 8	Dauan ...	8	2
Mabuiag ...	5	10 0	Darnley ...	12	2
Murray ...		10	Yam ...	1	9 10
Masig ...	2	13 5	Stephen ...	10	9 7
Saibai ...	5	0	Three Sisters ...	3	5 0
		67 12 0			18 17 6
Native Bibles ...		2 17 6	Excess Expenditure over Receipts, 1918 ...	520	16 11
Diocese of Carpentaria ...	50	0 0	" Receipts over Expenditure, 1919 ...	61	17 3
D. Markwell ...	4	4 0			458 19 8
Bank of Queensland Ltd. ...		5 10
Torres Straits Plumbing Works ...	1	6 6
Hodells Limited... ...	351	11 4
		407 7 8
		£477 17 2			£477 17 2

Examined and found correct.—E. J. HENNESSEY,
10/1/1920. Auditor.GEORGE CLARKE,
Managing Agents.

1920.

Diocese of Carpentaria.

Bishop :

RT. REV. HENRY NEWTON, B.A.
Thursday Island, Queensland.

Administrator :

REV. F. W. SLADE, B.A.

Sub-Dean :

REV. F. W. SLADE, B.A.

Diocesan Secretary :

REV. F. W. SLADE, B.A., Thursday Island.

Commissaries :

REV. PREB. PONSONBY, M.A., The Rectory, Devonport, England.
REV. J. JONES, M.A., 242 Pitt Street, Sydney.
REV. W. P. GLOVER, Th.L., Warwick, Q.
REV. J. W. ASHTON, M.A., St. Kilda, Melbourne, V.
REV. C. R. MIRLEES, Springhill, Maesmor., Gloucester, England.

Clergy :

REV. B. S. COLE, Cooktown.
REV. C. HALL, Th.L., Normanton (on leave).
REV. C. W. LIGHT, Darwin.
REV. F. W. SLADE, B.A., Thursday Island.
REV. E. TAFES, B.A., Mossman.

Honorary Lay Readers :

MR. H. F. L. FINNISS, Darwin
MR. G. R. A. PATCHING, Cooktown
MR. D. A. ROBERTS, Darwin.

Diocesan Council :

REV. F. W. SLADE, B.A. | MR. GEO. CLARK.
REV. J. J. E. DONE. | MR. GILSON FOXTON.
REV. G. A. LUSCOMBE. | MR. A. SULLIVAN.

Honorary Legal Adviser :

HIS HONOUR JUDGE MACNAUGHTON.

Aboriginal Mission, Mitchell River :

MR. J. W. CHAPMAN. | Mrs. MATTHEWS.
REV. H. MATTHEWS, J.P. | Miss F. SMITH.
(Supt.)
J. Geibo, T. Solomon, J. Savo.

Roper River Mission :

MR. DYER. |
REV. R. D. JOYNT. | Mrs. DYER.
REV. H. E. D. WARREN |
(Supt.)

Torres Straits Mission :

REV. J. J. E. DONE. | *REV. JOSEPH LUI.
REV. G. A. LUSCOMBE. | *REV. POEY PASSI.
REV. W. H. MACFARLANE, | Mrs. LUSCOMBE.
(Th.L.) | Miss LUSCOMBE.
* Native Deacons.

The Diocese.

The See was founded in 1900, and consists of such part of Queensland as is bounded by the sea on the north and east, by the Northern Territory on the west, and by a line drawn from lat. S. 19deg. 30min. on the western boundary of Queensland due east to par. 144deg. E. and thence N. to lat. S. 16deg. 40min. and thence east to the sea, together with the whole of the Northern Territory, comprising an area of not less than 620,000 square miles. The population, which is very widely scattered over this immense area, consists of about 10,000 whites, 5,000 Japanese, Chinese, and other aliens, and 35,000 aboriginals. The white population is mainly mining and pastoral. The See town is Thursday Island, a pearling centre north of Cape York.

Finance.

The Diocese has no endowments beyond the Bishop's income of £395 per annum. Every parish needs a grant from central funds which come from subscriptions to the Diocese, and grants from English Societies.

Missions.

Missions are carried on amongst the Japanese at Thursday Island; the South Sea Islanders; the aboriginals on the Mitchell and Roper Rivers; and among the Islanders of the Torres Straits.

Special Offertories.

On Easter Day the offertories are given to the Clergyman of the Parish, and on Good Friday to the Australian Board of Missions.

The "Church Standard."

Posted to any Address for 6s. 6d. per Annum.

The CHURCH STANDARD holds the unique position of being the only independent weekly paper published in the interests of the Church of England in Australasia.

Published every Friday Morning.

Appeals to all Members of the Church of England, Members of the C.E.M.S., Churchwardens, Side-men and Parochial Councillors, Sunday School Teachers, Lay Readers, Catechists, and Clergy.

Specimen Copies on application to

THE CHURCH PUBLISHING CO. LTD.,

ROYAL INSURANCE BUILDINGS, 16 SPRING STREET, SYDNEY.

St. Margaret's, Brisbane.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND HIGH SCHOOL FOR GIRLS

Under the management of the Sisters of the Society of the Sacred Advent

Pupils prepared for examinations of the University of Queensland, Public Service and Associated Board R.A.

There are two Boarding Houses beautifully situated in extensive grounds overlooking the Brisbane River

BOARDERS RECEIVED FROM THE AGE OF EIGHT

FOR PROSPECTUS APPLY SISTER IN-CHARGE

St. Catharine's, Stanthorpe.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND HIGH SCHOOL FOR GIRLS

Under the management of the Sisters of the Society of the Sacred Advent

Pupils prepared for examinations of the University of Queensland, and Associated Board R.A.

Additional House secured

Increased Accommodation for Boarders

FOR PROSPECTUS APPLY SISTER-IN-CHARGE

Church of England Girls' Schools

UNDER THE MANAGEMENT OF THE
SISTERS OF THE SACRED ADVENT.

S. ANNE'S, TOWNSVILLE, Quarterly Fees for Boarders £10 10s.

S. MARY'S, HERBERTON " " " £15 15s.

Pupils prepared for Queensland University and Associated Board R.A. Examinations.
Commercial Subjects taught. Open-air sleeping accommodation if required.

In connection with S. Mary's, Herberton, there is a separate House for Boys under nine years of age. Quarterly Fees, £12 10s.

Diocese of Carpentaria.

INTERCESSION PAPER

July, August, September, 1920.

· THANKSGIVINGS.

We thank Thee and bless Thee, O Lord.

1. For the spirit of self-help among the Torres Straits Islanders.
2. For the new schools in the Torres Straits Mission.
3. For the perseverance of Thy servants at Roper River Mission.

INTERCESSIONS.

We beseech Thee to hear us, good Lord

THAT IT MAY PLEASE THEE:—

1. To open the hearts of the people of Hammond Island to the light of the everlasting gospel, and to enlighten Thy servants at Boigu and Dauan.
2. To provide means for evangelizing the heathen tribes of Northern Australia.
3. To promote the extension of Thy Kingdom by means of the Lambeth Conference, and especially to give Thy blessing to the Bishop of Carpentaria.
4. To bless Bertie Stanley Cole and the people of the parish of Cooktown.
5. To shepherd Thy sheep who are scattered abroad and to send them faithful priests.
6. To destroy the forces of evil which promote industrial strife.

The Carpenterian

FOR THE DIOCESE OF CARPENTARIA, NORTH AUSTRALIA.

Vol. XX.—No. 80.]

THURSDAY ISLAND, OCTOBER 1, 1920.

PUBLISHED ON THE FIRST DAY OF EACH QUARTER.

[PRICE 2/6 A YEAR.
POST FREE.]

NOTICE.

All communications to be addressed to the Editor of The Carpenterian, Bishop's House, Thursday Island, to whom subscriptions may be sent. Subscription, 2/6 per annum, post free.

NOTICE TO CONTRIBUTORS.

All contributions of Parish News, etc., must reach the Editor before the last day of February, May, August, and November in each year.

The Bishop's Movements.

We got away from Melbourne with our full complement of passengers—not very many, as the Suevic had not been refitted since she was used as a troopship. We had only about 52 on a boat that used to carry over 500! and as the extra deck houses had been cleared away there was plenty of deck room for walking and for games. We were to make only one call between Melbourne and London—at Durban—which meant two long stretches at sea of three weeks each. Of course the trip got monotonous, but we managed to pass the time with sports and other amusements. A sports committee was elected, and of it I was the chairman, and Mr MacFarlane the secretary. His work was varied and at times very strenuous, so he did not find that time hung heavily on his hands. What with arranging programmes beforehand, keeping things going when the days and nights came on, to say nothing of photographing people in fancy costume, groups and so on—with the consequent developing and printing—the days and nights were not long enough for him. Everything passed off pleasantly, and to a great extent that was due to Mr. MacFarlane's work and personality. He was a decided asset to the company. We were able to have two services on board every Sunday, a celebration at 8 a.m., and morning service at 10 a.m. On one Sunday we had a service late in the afternoon for the crew, but not many were able to be present.

The weather was bad for some days after leaving Melbourne, and one of the stewards early lost his life when we shipped a big sea orward, which washed him backwards and forwards over the fore hatch. He got off with nothing more than a broken collar bone and some bruises.

At Durban we spent two nights and part of two days, about forty-eight hours. The ship was sailing, and it was advisable to be ashore. There is a fine harbour well sheltered, and with plenty of water—the channel made by dredging. There are fine quays, and there was a great deal of shipping in the port. A good service of trams ran us to the centre of the town, about a mile and a half from the harbour. There are some fine buildings, notably the Town Hall, but on the whole the buildings are not so good as one would expect. There is a fine Art Gallery, and Museum in the Town Hall, in which building Art Gallery, Museum, library, etc., are. There is a very useful bureau of information for travellers near the post office, where information can be got, and where a traveller is given a very convenient map of the town with tram routes and places of interest marked, so that one can find places quickly and easily. The Barea, which is the residential part is beautiful, on a range of hills which surrounds the town, high up and where there is a good breeze. The houses, and the gardens round them, are beautiful, each house having a good-sized piece of ground. We were able to visit several of the Churches, and at one—where Canon Hodgson is, who came to Queensland to help in the General Mission two or three years ago—we were present at the early celebration on the morning we left. Durban is well supplied with Churches, and judging from the buildings and the 'atmosphere' there is a tone of reverence and devotion. It is doubtful if in a town of the same size in Australia we have so many churches of dignified proportions. We were able to visit an orphanage which is under the care of a diocesan sisterhood; the Mother Superior showed us over the buildings, which are well arranged, and have a fine garden and grounds round them.

We had good weather through from Durban to London. The Bay of Biscay and the Channel were kind to us, excepting that in the Bay we had a thick fog, which meant slow travelling and once we nearly had a collision. A steamer came out of the fog meeting us, and we only just missed running her down. Another little excitement was a fire in the Marconi room, caused by faulty insulation apparently. It was soon got under, but most of the papers were burnt. In a couple of minutes the whole place was in flames. We had beautiful weather in the Channel, and as we passed up in daylight we were able to see a good deal of the coast and towns—and there is nothing more beautiful than the green fields and woods of England in the spring and summer, whether seen from a ship at a distance or from a train or car as one passes through them. For that sight alone, a relief for sore eyes, it is worth coming across the world. Most beautiful were the fields along the banks of the Thames as we steamed up to the docks. We did not get off the steamer till after eight o'clock at night, when it was still daylight owing to the twilight and the daylight saving, which puts the clock on an hour. Then there was a long business with customs, and most annoying charge of between six and seven shillings for the hand luggage we were carrying! Port of London dues. It was after eleven at night when we got to London and the question was: should we find rooms. It was too late to go exploring, but we were fortunate in getting rooms at the Grand Midland Hotel at St. Pancras station.

We arrived in London on June 21st, and so were in time to get to Salisbury on the 24th for the 700th Anniversary of the Cathedral. Mr. MacFarlane and I went down on Wednesday the 23rd, and hospitality in the close had been arranged for us. The weather was glorious, and the Cathedral, with its close were almost perfect. There was a magnificent service in the afternoon, when about 40 bishops from all parts of the world were present. Bishop Brent, of Western New York, was the preacher, but we could not hear the sermon as the bishops were far up in the choir, and the pulpit is at the western end of the choir. The Cathedral was packed with people, and there must have been hundreds outside. On the Saturday I went to a village near Canterbury, Bishopsbourne, of which the rector of the parish where I served, my first curacy, is in charge. This is the place where Richard Hooker lived, and where he wrote his ecclesiastical polity. On the Sunday I preached twice in Canterbury Churches for the S.P.G. at St. Mildred's in the morning, and at St. Gregory's in the evening. The car which took me to the evening service broke down—a broken axle—but fortunately it happened close to the church. I came back to London the following Tuesday, to be present and to speak at the annual meeting of the St. Andrew's Waterside Mission. I was glad to be able to do so, as the committee are generous in their help to the diocese of Carpentaria. On the following Friday the proceedings of the Lambeth Conference began with a Devotional Day in Fulham Parish Church for the Bishops. Bishop Gore gave the addresses, and the Bishop of London provided breakfast and lunch at Fulham Palace, and we had the use of the gardens and grounds. Nearly 200 bishops made use of the opportunity for quiet thought and devotion.

Many of the bishops went down to Canterbury that night, and I, with two Canadian bishops, from Quebec, and Kootenay, were the guests of the Rector of Bishopsbourne. There was a very full programme for the day—celebrations of the Holy Communion in the Cathedral, and at St. Martin's Church, at 8; Mattins in the Cathedral and a lecture by Canon Mason. Lunch at St. Augustine's, Canterbury; Reception Service in the Cathedral; and after that a Garden Party given by the Dean and Chapter of Canterbury. Then a special train took us to London, leaving Canterbury at 6.10 p.m. It was a wonderful day, and the most wonderful of all, the service in the afternoon. There were two processions—one by the Cathedral clergy and other local people, with the Archbishop of Canterbury; the other by the bishops, some 260 in number. The first made its way through the Cathedral to the west door and formed in two lines in the alley-way, the Archbishop, with his Chaplains, standing near the west door to receive the bishops who had passed from the Chapter House through the cloisters. As the bishops passed on either side of the Archbishop, they bowed to him and then passed on to the choir. Nothing can be conceived more suitable to such a function than Canterbury Cathedral. There is a long flight of steps leading up to the choir from the nave, and it was a glorious sight as the bishops ascended the steps. Then the altar is high up in the sanctuary, and on the top step before the altar, well elevated, was placed the Chair of St. Augustine, with two bright scarlet cushions. Here the Archbishop sat and read his allocation, and then the whole body of Bishops said the Nicene Creed. That was very impressive indeed, and more so perhaps than if it had been sung. Such an inspiration as nothing greater could be imagined.

On Sunday, July 4th, was the service in Westminster Abbey. The Litany was sung in procession, and we who were far back lost and heard it as the choir turned the corners of the cloisters and into the Cathedral. Then there was the celebration when the Dean—Bishop Ryle—preached a grand sermon. In the bidding prayer and in the sermon, he made reference to the fact that it was Independence Day of America.

The sittings of the Conference began on Monday, July 5th, and we were kept close at work morning and afternoon in the library at Lambeth Palace, which is just large enough to contain the bishops when many of the book cases were taken away. Probably at the next conference a larger building will be needed. Prayers were said every day in the Chapel at 10.30, and the proceedings began at 11, continuing till 5 p.m., with an hour for lunch. During the week the various subjects for consideration were discussed, and then on Monday, July 12th, committee work was begun. This will continue for a fortnight, and then the Bishops will reassemble for another fortnight to discuss the reports of the committees, and the Conference will close with a big service in St. Paul's Cathedral on August 8th.

There have been many and will be many other functions of a social nature, and the various Missionary and other societies are doing all they can to interest and provide profit and instruction for overseas people. So it is a strenuous time but a very inspiring one. We realize how much the Church should do, and does, and also how far we fail.

People are very kind and hospitable. The weather for Canterbury and Westminster functions was beautiful, but then it changed and we have had it cold and wet and miserable for the last ten days. Some of us tropical folk have been glad of overcoats in the middle of summer.

The Missions.

CHURCH MISSIONARY SOCIETY.—Groote Island, on the western side of the Gulf of Carpentaria, has been proclaimed an aboriginal reserve, and the Church Missionary Society, at the invitation and request of the Home and Territories Department, has made application for a site for a mission station on it, choosing the western side, where they have selected an area of 200 square miles. It is intended to establish a mission station there as soon as possible, and we ask for the prayers of the faithful for God's blessing on this forward movement. The prospects of accomplishing good work there are very favourable.

It should be remembered that any person who trespasses on an aboriginal reserve is liable to a heavy penalty.

In connection with this work, the C.M.S. has purchased the aux. ketch Holly, and we hope that it will be much more convenient for the new mission to make Thursday Island its town, instead of Darwin, which has been the town for the Roper River Mission.

Mr. A. Dyer, of the Roper River Mission, is on furlough in the southern states, and is being kept busy preaching and lecturing.

MOA.—Congratulations to the Rev. and Mrs. G. A. Luscombe on the birth of a daughter, at Bishop's House, Thursday Island, on the 25th June. Having been baptized, she made her first visit on our hazardous seas at the age of ten days.

Miss Luscombe, who has been a lay missionary at St. Paul's, Moa, for nearly two years, has resigned and returned to her home; she sailed by the s. Tango Maru, on the 6th July. We regret to hear that Miss Luscombe has had a breakdown in health, and hope for her complete recovery.

DARNLEY.—Mrs. MacFarlane and children sailed for Melbourne on the 6th July in the s. Tango Maru, on furlough; their return may be expected in November; they had been guests at Bishop's House for some time. They expect to spend most of their furlough in Ballarat, Vic.

ROPER RIVER.—Miss L. G. Cross has been licensed as a lay missionary at this mission. Mr. Perriman is expected to join the staff next month.

Major G. H. Vernon, M.C., a doctor from the A.I.F., is visiting several of our missions, to advise in health matters; he arrived here from Yarrabah Mission, in the s. Hwah Ping, on August 29th, and was a guest at Bishop's House for a few days, until a cutter came to carry him to Moa; from Moa he intends to proceed to Mitchell River and other missions in the Gulf, thence to New Guinea about the middle of October. We congratulate the Board of Missions on having obtained his services for six months, and expect that much good will accrue from his visits.

MITCHELL RIVER.—Miss Crutch, a new lay missionary, is expected to reach this mission to begin her duties there early in October. The Board of Missions is looking for a man and wife to join the staff.

The last news from this mission is good; an experimental plot of rice has produced a prolific crop, yielding enough seed to plant twelve acres, and the other crops, after many years of toil and failure, are successful. We are hopeful that the difficulty of supplying this mission with food will soon be relieved considerably.

TORRES STRAITS.—The mission priest, on a recent visit to town, reported all well in the Straits. The response of the people continues to be good; the new schools are progressing steadily; improvements continue to be made in the fabric and furnishings of the churches; the material prosperity of the people is high, and there is practically no distress among them.

The Parishes.

THURSDAY ISLAND.—Dr. Arthur E. Salter, whose death is reported to have occurred in Sydney on June 13th, was one of the first churchwardens of this parish, having been elected, along with the Hon. John Douglas and Mr. John Tetley (manager of the Q.N. Bank) on the 11th January, 1891. He took a very active part in the business of erecting the church, and was one of the three who, on the 7th March, 1893, drove the pegs which marked the exact position of the intended structure, whereupon workmen commenced excavating for the foundations. When the strange story was invented that the building was intended for other than Church of England purposes, he proved that it was utterly untrue, and took care to preserve the documents in proof. One of the windows is a monument erected by him to the memory of his mother.

Efforts are being made by the A.B.M. to secure the services of a deaconess to work among the native and other coloured races in this parish; we commend this to the prayers of our readers. Such work has great possibilities, although the persons to be ministered to are not numerous, and would prove the best means of gaining experience for further evangelizing of natives on their reserves.

Similar work has been done with most encouraging results, by a deaconess in the past, but was then unpaid, as the deaconess had private means. We are very anxious to see this work resumed.

On Sunday, July 4th, intercessions were offered for the Reunion of Christendom, as the Lambeth Conference commenced its sessions that day; and on the following Tuesday, when the subject was to be deliberated upon at Lambeth, some came to spend half an hour separately in the church, and doubtless others did so at home. We wish that the church were more used by parishioners for private prayer; it is often the most convenient place for the purpose, and is open all day.

On Friday, July 9th, during the conference of overseas workers of the Mothers' Union, in London, the members of our branch made a corporate communion and held a prayer meeting in the afternoon, with intercessions for the homes of the people.

The vicar has had visits from Miss Holloway, who was on her way back to China from furlough; and from the Rev. and Mrs. F. W. Rowlands, of Fukuoka, Japan, who were passengers in the s. St. Albans.

The many friends of the Rev. W. M. Wilkinson will be interested to know that he is as much as ever impressed with the needs of the north, and wishes that he could still do his old work in this diocese—work which he continued as long as possible, in the hope that some younger man would arrive and take it over; the hope was unfulfilled, and the work is still waiting and calling. Who will hear the call?

Much glee, quite unintended by the author, has been caused to those who know Thursday Island by Bennet Copplestone's story "Madame Gilbert's Cannibal," in the "Cornhill Magazine" (the magazine which has the lonely distinction of taking seriously the lucubrations of Mr. Edward Clodd). The "howls of laughter," of one of the characters were not so vociferous as the merriment of some of the "sweepings" when they read the following:—

"She frowned viciously upon Thursday Island, that sorry western gate of the lovely tropic Straits. A treeless, desolate waste, dotted with corrugated iron buildings. Cluster the iron buildings a little, drive wide dusty roads between clumps of them, and one has Port Kennedy, the seat of government. Impelled by greed of pearl and shell, and undeterred by the stark hideousness of the island, the sweepings of most nations have poured down upon that uncanny spot, and have greatly contributed to make it what it is, and to keep it from reaching up towards better things."

Other sweepings, of a more vindictive temperament, suggested that the passage was a product of corrugated iron drinks, and wished that the author might be set the task of counting the thousands of trees that clothe the hillsides of the little island, and line its streets with beauty. Other passages in the story are just as delightful; "the hulk which does duty for a wharf at Thursday Island" would be kept busy, if it existed, in accommodating the average of over a thousand tons of shipping daily which, in spite of the dislocation caused by the war, enters or clears at the little port.

CROYDON.—Unfortunately this parish is still vacant; but a sum of money collected there has been received by the diocesan secretary; it is for the A.B.M. Thankoffering for Victory and Peace, and was collected at the bishop's request by Mrs. Greig.

GILBERT RIVER has also contributed to the above Thankoffering, and its donations, collected at the bishop's request by Miss Sindel, have been received by the diocesan secretary.

MOSSMAN.—Since our last issue, we have learned that work has been resumed on the new church, and is making some progress in spite of the many difficulties which attend it.

DARWIN.—We hear of much activity in this parish. The whole of the money required to pay off the debt on the new rectory house has been raised, in an unexpectedly short time; this is a symptom of progress at which the friends of the parish will rejoice.

All Peoples, Nations, and Tongues. .

An incisive article in the "Church Times" deals with the colour question, which is a painful problem in the U.S.A. and in S. Africa. It has not yet become insistent in N. Australia; we thank God that at his altars here men and women of half a dozen different races and languages kneel together to receive the true bread of heaven; men of very high social and official positions are one in Christ with Chinese and Aboriginal girls. We thank God, too, that the helot-theory, according to which the coloured races are destined to be hewers of wood and drawers of water to a superior white race, has no chance of becoming a permanently accepted theory in Australia. The other theory, as stated in the article we have mentioned, is that the coloured races are not inferior but only backward, needing education. But how long will they endure that position. More than one thoughtful statesman in Northern Australia has foreseen already that the time is near when the aborigines will demand the full rights of citizenship; even now, "industrial unrest" is not unknown among them, and the income of a native is often greater than that of an English professional man. The problem requires study and prayer; the only feasible solution yet proposed is a policy of segregation, which, if carried out, will take the Australian aborigines out of the labour market altogether. This policy is being pursued, though on a very small scale so far, on some mission stations, on the principle that He who "hath made of one blood every nation of men for to dwell on all the earth" hath also "determined the bounds of their habitations," and as a result of the experience that the backward races need protection from exploitation by unprincipled white men.

In connection with this question, we wish to express our thanks to the doctors at the recent Medical Congress in Brisbane, for reminding the public that Northern Australia is a country well fitted for white men, white women, white children, to live and work in; the doctors stated that it is high time to bury the old fables to the contrary, and we heartily agree.

Our Trip to Badu.

(Contributed).

'Twas a "red letter" holiday. We were amongst scenes that were at once new and yet strangely familiar. New because the Torres Strait Islands are fresh pastures to us; strangely familiar as we have been living amongst similar foliage and surroundings at the Yarrabah Aboriginal Mission, Cairns. The auxiliary ketch "Goodwill" was our means of conveyance from Thursday Island to Badu. The distance "as the crow flies" is some 25 miles, but the "Goodwill" not being a crow, generally makes the journey in 35 miles. Thursday Island is the "jumping off" spot for quite a number of missions. The name of Badu is not to be found on most maps, the English for it being Mulgrave Island. It ranks amongst the three largest islands in the Torres Strait (its coastline is about 30 miles), the others being Prince of Wales Island and Moa (Banks Island), on which St. Paul's College and the South Sea settlement are situated. Here the students are being trained, who it is hoped, will eventually form a native priesthood. The schooner was on a business trip for a Christian Trading company registered as Papuan Industries Limited. This organisation was formed several years ago through the efforts of Mr. F. W. Walker (formerly a L.M.S. missionary in Papua) to encourage the natives to work, the results of their labours being exchanged for goods. The indirect influence of such trading must be considerable. Five per cent. is the maximum dividend distributed amongst the shareholders, and further profits being allocated for the benefit of the natives in various ways. Bethlehem Church (at Badu) was built by the London Missionary Society, and handed over to the Bishop of Carpentaria when the transfer of its work in the Torres Straits took place in 1915. It is roomy and evidently well used. The reredos consists of matting with the Star of Bethlehem and a shepherd's crook prominently displayed. On the Sunday that the writer and his wife were worshippers the congregations were of a respectable size. The Rev. G. A. Luscombe (Principal of St. Paul's College, Moa) was visiting Badu, and staying in a tiny house alongside the church that he has had erected recently. Appropriately enough it has been dubbed "the prophet's chamber." He celebrated Holy Communion at 7.30 a.m. The reverent behaviour of the sixty communicants was most noticeable. The number would have been considerably larger but for the absence of the crews engaged on the island's pearling luggers. Mattins was sung later. One feature of this service was the harmonious and extremely hearty singing of some hymns in the tribal language. These have been translated. The Sacrament of Holy Baptism was administered after the third collect. At this a baby girl was enlisted in the church's army to fight under Christ's banner unto her life's end. One could not help notice how easily a congregation can turn itself round to face the West when it uses backless seats! Badu possesses a numerically strong branch of the "Heralds of the King," with a native woman as Secretary. Her photograph recently appeared in the "Herald," the children's paper published monthly by the Australian Board of Missions. As the members are working this year for the benefit of the Yarrabah Mission they are interested to hear what we had to say about the life and work there.

The dances, with their pageantry and grace, in our honour, the excursion across the channel to Adam Village, the smiles of the children, and last, but not least, the thoughtful and unstinting hospitality of the Walker brothers (Papuan Industries Limited), will remain green in the memory for many a day. We came back to Thursday Island feeling confident from personal enquiry and observation, that there are boundless possibilities for the spiritual and physical welfare of the 2,500 inhabitants of the Torres Strait islands, if Badu is a fair criterion, and praying that our church may have the vision to rise to her opportunities of building up the temple of the Everliving God amongst them. Solitude, and the danger and monotony of an incessant series of long voyages in small boats are cheerfully met by the missionaries, who are the church's representatives. Let us support their admirable endeavours to the utmost of our power by intercession, and the almsgiving without which their invaluable labours would be impossible.

—H. G. S.

Prize Essay.

At the request of the Warden of Trinity College, University of Melbourne, we are glad to publish the following. A prize of £100 is offered annually by the college for an essay in the history of religion and of the bible. The subject prescribed for the year 1921 is "The Results of Historical Criticism as applied to the New Testament." Essays must be addressed to the warden, and must reach him on or before the last day of December, 1921. Graduates of any university within the British Empire are eligible to compete. Essays must be between 20,000 and 30,000 words in length, and become the property of the college. The award shall be made not later than the end of March, 1922. The name of the prize shall be The Trinity College Melbourne Biblical Essay Prize. Full particulars can be obtained by writing to the warden. The establishing of such a valuable incentive to learning is matter for gratitude.

Bible Reading.

We beg to enter a plea, as some others have done recently, for the reading aloud of the English Bible in the homes of the people, and especially in those true homes, where children are being reared. It is not only the greatest book in English literature but the foundation and source of nearly all English literature even the most modern. No one can consider himself at all educated in English, unless he is familiar both with the contents and the style of that great version. On merely educational grounds, then, as a necessary practice reading of the bible is worth doing regularly and well. But, what is more important, there is no better way of developing good character; it removes the difficulty often felt by parents of imparting effective moral instruction; it does that for them; it can be appealed to as an authority greater than that of an individual, and its authority is quite readily accepted by little children, as being something different from any other book. Moreover, its interest is as wide as humanity, it has a special message for each separate person, and therefore it is one of the greatest of helps towards self-determination; it does not mould its readers all after the same machine-made pattern, but enables each one to attain his own true development, and to express his own personality.

This plea is made because the good old habit of bible reading, as a devotion, has gone out of fashion; it was abused, but never mind; the abuse of a thing doth not take away the lawful use of it.

The Carpenterian

FOR THE DIOCESE OF CARPENTARIA,
NORTH AUSTRALIA.

Vol. XX., No. 80. Thursday Island, Oct. 1, 1920

The Covenant.

God's people of old time in Canaan were conscious that they were living under a covenant. They were the people of God, the only nation in all the world with whom God had made a covenant. He had taken them for his people, delivered them from their oppressors and their enemies, protected them, guided them, taught them his law. That was the covenant. And each person was to be brought up in the knowledge that he was a member of a people, the people of the Lord.

And their prophets taught them that it was a great blessing to belong to Israel, to have the favour of the Lord of heaven and earth, that their laws promoted happiness and prosperity.

When in course of time their national life failed, and they were conquered and scattered by other nations, and exiled from their well-loved country and homes, it looked as if God had deserted them and had cancelled the covenant. So their prophets proclaimed that it was not God, but they themselves, who had broken it; they had deserted God, and ignored the sacred law. The people had done what no individual or any number of individuals could have done; they had turned away from their corporate obligations. God's favour was bestowed justly, on those who sought to do his will.

But God did not cast off his people. His ministers prophesied that he would make a new and better covenant. This new covenant was to be made with a people, a community, not with separate persons, but with persons who had been admitted into a society, joined together for the purpose of enjoying the powers and privileges of the covenant.

The writers of the Bible never supposed that a man could be right with God separately, or that anyone could make a bargain with God on his own account. If anyone could know God, it must be because he was a member of God's people. All the good that anyone could do, whether in his own sanctification or by way of helping other souls, could be done only because he belonged to a divine society.

The new covenant was made as prophesied, and is recorded in the latter part of the Bible, called after it, "The New Testament": it was made because of the work on earth of our Saviour, and you can see it in operation any day in any town—men and women living in real communion with God himself, because they belong to his church and practise religion.

The new covenant reminds us of three things about our religion: it has a moral inwardness, it depends on supernatural agencies, it produces direct fellowship with God.

It has a moral inwardness, it is in the heart; the outward observances, prayer, sacraments, Bible study (which is part of prayer) are done not as mere forms, but because the heart is in them, as the result of insight. We cannot think that it is permissible to do wrong so long as we say prayers etc., we know that God requires personal righteousness.

It depends on supernatural agencies. We could never please God and serve him truly and conquer temptation, without his help. His help is truly given to those who are in the covenant, given in the sacraments; grace sufficient to overcome sin. We, ourselves cannot put the holy law into our hearts, he puts it there.

It enables each person to realize a direct personal fellowship with the Most High God. Each one can know God, can see the vision, each one can be certain that he is forgiven, that God has nothing against him, that his Lord is with him always.

The new covenant, into which we are admitted in baptism, is better than the old, by so much as its mediator, JESUS, is greater than all the law-givers and prophets. It is better in the three ways we have mentioned.

It can cleanse and purify our hearts, making us all we long to be.

It gives each separate person who has been admitted into it, all the help he needs to live a godly, righteous and sober life, if only he uses his own will, uses the powers conferred upon him.

It is spiritual, it inspires us with the Holy Spirit himself; and being spiritual, it has a personal message to every man separately; each member is to understand and act on his position.

In those things is the personal blessing and the personal responsibility. No man can, by searching, find out God for himself, but everyone can, if he will, find God in his church; while you depend on your own powers the search is hopeless. And everyone desires to know God—to know what God thinks of him—to be sure that he is on the right path, the path that leads to enduring happiness. And every Christian can do it, by remembering the covenant, by using the powers the covenant gives.

We shall never be saved just by belonging to the church, or just by going to church. We can be saved by doing that and putting our heart into it, for God has truly put his laws into our heart. Why should we pray? Why should we keep Sunday holy? Why not join in the pagan follies of a "weed-end" which displays the falsehood of its character by including in the "week-end" the first day of the week? Why should we take an active interest in spiritual things; why be honest, pure, truthful, and otherwise virtuous? Because the Lord is our God and we belong to his people.

Once anyone sees the truth that he has joined that people that he has been admitted by authorized agents as a member of the people gathered out of every nation and language and race, the people that is redeemed, restored, forgiven, then the knowledge of that truth will issue in glad service, in a life of which none need be ashamed, in the peace which passeth all understanding.

Fear of Infection.

"Thou shalt not be afraid for the pestilence that walketh in darkness, nor for the sickness that destroyeth in the noon-day."

The form "Thou shalt not" is used to convey the prohibitions in the commandments of God. Here is no new commandment, but only what is implicit in the first of the ten; yet how often is it disregarded! We are commanded to fear God; we can test ourselves to see whether we are keeping that commandment, by asking ourselves: are we afraid of anything but God? Whoever is afraid of anything else does not rightly fear him.

It has been observed that every age is equally superstitious. Those who laugh at the wicked old superstitions about witchcraft, etc., are just as bad themselves, and, if they got frightened, would be just as cruel themselves. Only, superstition is displayed in different forms, and this is an age of superstition in regard to infection of sickness—a degrading and unchristian fear, a form of cowardice that quickly develops into cruelty. While the modern man is not worrying about his sins, he often does worry about his bodily health, sometimes with pitiful results. No doubt the reason that worry, the greatest trouble of our times, is forbidden to Christians, is that it so often causes cowardice and cruelty.

To take reasonable precautions against disease is not fear; indeed, to neglect them is as bad as going into the enemy's country unarmed; but when those who have taken the precautions are afraid for the sickness, they are like panic-stricken soldiers, who increase the power of the enemy. Being harnessed and carrying bows, they turn themselves back in the day of battle. For it is true of sickness, as of battle, that the coward is in greater danger than the man who stands his ground. The Christian attitude is, be reasonably careful, and go boldly on in the faith of God.

Little children shew us the extent to which the dread of infection is being implanted; a teacher of religion asked a class of very small children why the priest, in the Parable of the Good Samaritan, "passed by on the other side"; every little hand was promptly raised, and every little pupil, on being questioned, gave the same answer—"he was afraid he might catch some disease from the man." This experience occurred more than once, in more than one State. The priest in the parable was bad enough, but he was not so bad as that.

Another teacher of religion, using the ancient, and perfect, allegory of the nature of sin, drew a picture of a snake as large as his blackboard could hold, and as snakelike as his skill could compass, his pupils were only too familiar with real snakes, but when asked what the picture represented, every little voice gave the same answer: "Please, sir, it's a hookworm." And the parents of these "well-taught" children do not know that they need the fear of the loving God in their hearts, to drive out this fear.

Who does not know that during the severe epidemic of influenza, much more harm than good was done by the panic measures? The masks, the hideous quarantine camps, the fumigation chamber, the concentration hospitals, all helped the disease.

It seems likely that the current theories about the transmission of disease will soon come tumbling down like a house of cards; there is so much that they do not explain, and it is certain that the best friends of pestilence are: (1) a low state of general health; (2) dirt; (3) fear. Fear has the physical effect of reducing the resistance of the body to disease. It is certain also that they who are least exposed to infection are often the most liable to suffer from it, while on the other hand those whose duties bring them into frequent contact with the sick, are themselves remarkably healthy.

Not so long ago, it was the fashion to believe that the country would succumb to "the scourge of consumption" unless consumptives were treated as pariahs, far worse than criminals, and laws were passed accordingly; after a few of the unfortunate sufferers had committed suicide the laws were relaxed. But the cruelty of fear was only directed then against other diseases. A poor working man, with a large family to support, lost his living because his baby was found to be suffering from a disease which is always with us, but about which at that time a ridiculous Board of Health chose suddenly to raise a scare. The latest fashion is to declare that the strength of the Empire is being sapped by diseases which are the result of vice; the latest utterance is that a man afflicted with venereal disease is a greater menace than a murderer, the violence of the language being proportionate to the weakness of the case; and we are told that the only way to deal with the "menace" is compulsory notification—which, clearly, is not a remedy at all; there is one other way of dealing with it, an effective way, with which our readers are familiar, and which brings no fees.

But this fear of sickness is often, though not always, the fear of death. The unreasonable demands made on medical science are often demands to be saved from the common lot of all men; people vaguely expect the doctors to do the impossible. There is one thing, and only one, certain, about this mortal life, the certainty that we must leave it. God will call each one, and each one must answer and obey that call. There is one way, and only one, to be ready for death, the way of repentance and faith. Be prepared to go at any moment; be prepared to stay as long as God wills. Then even a pestilence may be a merciful warning.

The following is from the writing of Dionysius, Bishop of Alexandria, describing a pestilence in the third century. "Most of the Christians, of their exceeding love and brotherly kindness, did not spare themselves, but visited the sick, regardless of the risk; diligently waiting on them, and tending them for Christ's sake, they gladly shared their death. In this manner the best of our brethren left us, and a death of this kind, encountered because of great piety and strong faith, was felt not to fall short of martyrdom. The heathen on the other hand, drove the sick from them the moment the symptoms appeared, and fled from their dearest, casting them down in the streets when already half dead; as for the dead, they threw them out like refuse without burial, in their endeavour to escape from the contagion." The endeavour was, of course, useless.

Peake's Commentary.

This new book is of much interest to Bible students. It is sold in Australia at 12/6, postage 8d. It has over a thousand closely printed pages, and no other work of the kind has among its contributors such an array of scholars of the first rank. It is intended for the use of the laity, and is the first popular commentary to explain the origin of the Bible and the development of the canon. Modern study has thrown much light on the sacred scriptures, but for the most part, this new learning has not yet reached the general public, or even that portion of the public which is well educated.

Books on scientific subjects very rapidly go out of date, and the same thing is now true of commentaries, for bible study has become scientific in its methods; so that the old-fashioned commentaries are now almost useless as an aid to understanding the sacred scriptures.

This new work tries to make available for the public the results of the best modern scholarship, and the quality of its contributors can be seen from the fact that Dr. Driver, whose name is known to every student as a leader in sacred learning, was interested in it; only his death prevented him from contributing articles he had intended to write. Among the contributors are Dr. W. F. Adeney, Mr. W. J. Bartlett, Mr. G. H. Box, Prof. G. A. Cook, Prof. Gwatkin, Prof. Kennett Mr. A. H. McNeil, Dr. J. H. Moulton, Mr. A. E. J. Rawlinson, and others whose words must be received with respect by all.

The essays included among the commentaries on the different books are of great interest, as the titles of some of them will shew: "The Bible as Literature," "The Development of Old Testament Literature," "Introduction to the Pentateuch," "Hebrew Wisdom," "Old Testament Prophecy," "Pagan Religion at the Coming of Christianity," "Organization, Church Meetings, Discipline, Social and Ethical Problems." And there are good bibliographies.

Sometimes valuable space is wasted on wholly unnecessary opinions; such statements as "Matthew omits this story, perhaps because the methods employed (by the Lord Jesus) savour of magic" (page 690) shew that the book is not to be accepted as authoritative; each reader is expected to use his own judgment and form his own opinions, rejecting, wherever he chooses, those of the commentators. Or again, at p. 878 "Paul obviously at this time expected to live to see the Parousia... Paul afterwards outgrew this position... this passage contains Paul's earlier and cruder view"—a most unlikely theory. Even the facts require checking; in the paragraph first quoted above, Tac. Hist. 4. 81 is adduced to bear the burden of a sweeping statement which it is quite incapable of supporting; but the quotation is not given, and not many readers of Peake will have a Tacitus at hand to check by.

But on the whole the tone is restrained and reverent, and the book is fairly free from those rash assertions which are the bane of modern scholarship. The editor declares that his object was not to produce a book explicitly devotional or practical, but to provide that accurate interpretation of the text through which alone the sound basis for devotional and practical application can be laid.

A careful study of the sacred books with this aid will satisfy with the blessings of knowledge any Christian who has been instructed in the right manner of using the sacred literature. This is not a book for occasional reference, but for close, habitual reading with thoughtful prayer; indeed, its new methods are likely to prove bewildering at a first reading, and patience is required to profit by it. For a large class of readers, Dummelow's One Volume Commentary is still the best, and is still being sold in thousands; indeed, Peake will be best appreciated by those who have mastered the contents of Dummelow.

The editor deserves the thanks of all students for his courage in making available to the public a learning which many uneducated readers still regard with suspicion, as if it were an attack on true religion, and it is a good sign that his work has been so well received already by devout scholars.

SUBSCRIPTIONS TO "THE CARPENTARIAN":—

Per Mrs Greig: Mrs Lucas 5/-. Mrs Rains 2/6, Lady Garrahan £11/1-, Rev. L. B. Cholmondeley 5 yen, Mrs Fergusson, Rev. Frank Ballance, Mr H. G. Simson, each 2/6; Mrs Allan, Mrs Mulvey, Miss Davidson, each 2/6; Mrs Jones, 3/3; Per Mrs Greig: Miss Pass, Mrs G. M. Greig, Mrs Patteu, Mrs Lee, Mrs Shield, Mrs Ogilvie, Mrs Willocks, Mrs Aplin, Mr J. Chandler, Mr Sabine, each 2/6.

How Our Brethren Do.

Living on the very edge of our country, and of civilization, we are grateful to the friends who send us their publications; we receive regularly the diocesan magazines of every diocese in Australia except Melbourne, and some from further afield. We excerpt some paragraphs, which will interest our readers, and remind us of the communion of saints.

This comes from Brisbane.—The surprise of the month of July was the announcement of the appointment of Sir Matthew Nathan as the new Governor of Queensland. Many of us had thought that the present arrangement was permanent, in fact if not in name, and had settled down to the thought that in future we should have Governors or Lieutenant-Governors who were Australians. But, apparently, the British Government is not willing to allow the subject of State Governors to be settled in piecemeal fashion, and until some concerted action is taken by Australia as a whole, we shall receive Imperially appointed Governors. To many of us it seems the right thing that while the States retain sovereign power within the Empire, they should have a connecting link with the central authority, and to us the action of the Colonial Office will be welcome. Sir Matthew Nathan is a man of wide administrative experience, and it is really a compliment to our State that a man of such calibre and character should be appointed as its Governor. Of course, we should have preferred a Christian Governor to a Jewish, and it would specially have rejoiced the heart of us churchmen if a churchman could have been appointed. But in the divided state of Christendom, and in an empire of such a cosmopolitan character, such blessings are not always attainable. The absence of them should make us pray the more earnestly, "Thy Kingdom Come."

This from Armidale. To be quite candid, the Australian sentiment does not yet understand itself. There are not wanting those who think of Australia as a "new" country detached from the problems of the "old" world. National individualism is far from dead amongst us. This idea of the imperviousness of a nation's life must be given the lie direct. Discarded by now in matters of individual character, we must not allow it to be revived in national affairs. That is why the motto (recently suggested by one who is not a native-born Australian) "Australia first," is insufficient and misleading. Such a motto is either a barren truism, or it is the badge of a narrow self-centredness which would be fatal to all greatness in our national outlook. It is clear that the line of true development for Australia will not be found by trying to sever the ties of the past or by minimizing their importance, but by facing the old problems in a new spirit.

This shews that hardships are not confined to the north. Few can have any conception of the appalling struggle that has been waged between man and nature during the last two years in this outback settlement of civilization (Filliga). Drought has reigned and exacted a full measure of suffering from the indomitable pioneers who are in very truth the salt of our nation. Successfully foiled he retires and leaves the land scanty of herbage with flocks enfeebled and weak owing to the long scarcity of proper sustenance. With hopes buoyed up and feeling that the long struggle was over at last, all prepared for a record spring; but, alas! the rain once started never stopped until a week after rain gauges shewed anything from 11 to 20 inches, creeks enlarged and overflowed their wide banks, and the whole country from Bourke to Gunnedah was submerged by a flood which swept away whole flocks, destroyed what little vegetation remained, isolated several towns from all communication save by telephone. And yet, despite all this, as the clerk in charge and reader go through the district they meet the same brave smiles and cheery greetings from all and sundry. The note of optimistic determination is still predominant, and the only sign of how hard the struggle is, comes in the quiet talk of an evening or while waiting for divine service.

This note is from farther afield, at Magila. The Christmas midnight eucharist at Msalabani was almost too beautiful, the church looked lovely, and the eight o'clock was something to remember; we simply looked like corn in a field, swaying against each other; there was just room to kneel and that was all (there are no seats). When the people began going up for their communion we all had to stand to let them pass. There were altogether about 700 communicants.

Our good friend the Bush Brother writes:—Education is a far higher thing than information. Information is knowledge acquired for some specific purpose in the struggle of life, and might be called Technical Education. On the other hand a liberal education does not refer primarily to the battle of life, but to the drawing out of our hidden capacity to appreciate the True and the Good and the Beautiful. For the moment the ideal of a liberal education has lost its charm for the majority of the population, if it ever had any. Even our University seems to be mainly an enlarged technical school for the training of the various professions. But we must hope for better days. This shallow idea of a utilitarian education is a travesty on human nature and an insult to all that is noblest in us. Already the nemesis is working. Our utilitarian age has not proved itself very efficient after all, for it has the greatest tragedy of a war to its credit and perhaps more to follow. Man lives by aspiration, hope and love, and not merely by money grabbing. It is Germany more than any other nation which has confessedly looked on education from the point of view of usefulness to the nation rather than as a thing of value in itself. But this modern heresy has bitten deeply into the very texture of people's minds. Ask many parents what they want for their boy at school, and they will say that they want their boy to "get on." This reminds one of the candid American motto for the business world, "Get on or get out." Education then is valued as a means to so much per year. This means the killing of the deepest source of interest in life.

From Townsville comes good news.—We are building the foundation of a great school at Charters Towers. "We" really means the Warden. The number of boys already threatens us with the necessity of building extension. It is up to anyone who has any spare funds to help in this great work for the coming generation of Queensland, and to remove the scandal upon us of allowing the Roman Church to educate our children.

"The Willochran" writes of the Railway Mission in that diocese. In summer time your missionary is pretty well either roasted with heat or parched with the cold when he travels on, say, the East-West railway with its lack of accommodation at the sidings, where, except for the shelter of a tent house, he would be homeless and homeless. As a rule where there is a station-master, much courtesy is shewn him, and he has experienced, at the hands of the railway people, a good deal of kindness. The managers of cattle and sheep stations are generally kind and hospitable and put no drawbacks in the way of holding services, except that they are very seldom disposed to help one in the way of a suitable place for the celebration of holy communion.

"The Churchman" published in New York says:—The reports of the official gatherings of various branches of the Anglican Church agree in one remarkable particular—the admission of women to their respective legislative bodies. Women are now being elected in large numbers to membership in the parochial councils of the Church of England, and they have been made eligible for membership on the newly formed Representative Church Councils. By a vote of 133 to 27 in the clerical order, and 84 to 43 in the lay, the synod of the Church of Ireland admitted women to the select vestries, but denied them a place on the board of nominators. An equally decisive vote of the Representative Council of the Church of Scotland opened membership of that important body and all its boards to women. A committee of the Synod of the Diocese of Quebec reported adversely to the admission of women, but the synod itself, by a very large majority, voted to permit women to serve as voting members of the vestries, and as representatives to the diocesan synod. The action of the Church in England, Scotland, Ireland and Canada, stands out in refreshing contrast to the conservative timidity of the Protestant Episcopal Church. With ecclesiastical characteristic love of compromise we endeavour to dodge the issue by the creation of houses of churchwomen, a compromise which satisfies nobody. The Church in the United States cannot afford to lag behind her sister churches. We have been willing to accept the untiring service and sacrifice of our godly and devoted women and the time has now come when we should be generous enough to give them their proper place in the councils of the church.

It is well to face the facts. There is within our church in Australia a party, which opposes those of the brethren who will not submit to it, and that is sinful, as St. Paul teaches. Its methods are illustrated by the following, which it has published in describing the service in a church. "The limit of idolatry was reached when, after the consecration, the celebrant held up the wafer before the people, saying the words, 'Behold the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world.'" No instructed churchman will believe that this "limit of idolatry" ever took place, because the same story has been told so often, and proved to be false, about so many churches. Yet the lie continues to be circulated afresh, because the appeal of such a party is not to instructed churchmen. What does take place in the church in question is just what takes place in every one of our churches where the traditional English music of the eucharist is used. The curse of party is that it sets catchwords above truth, because it sets itself and its private judgments above The Truth, and therefore these stale falsehoods, if not believed, are still promulgated. Of course, if such accusations as that quoted were true, the idolatry would be stopped at once by the proper authorities.

We regret that several reports and items of news which we had arranged for, have not reached us in time for insertion in this issue; the mails are now so irregular that it often takes much longer for letters to reach us than our correspondents allow for.

Glennie Memorial School, Church of England School for Girls TOOWOOMBA.

PRINCIPAL - - - MISS LAWRENCE
(Assisted by a highly qualified Resident Staff).

The School is under the direction of
His Grace the Archbishop of Brisbane, and Council.

Thorough Education. Pupils prepared for University Examinations.
MUSIC AND LANGUAGE SPECIALITIES.

Pupils prepared for the Examinations of the Associated Board R.A.M., R.O.M.

The New Building, situated over 2000 feet above sea level in twelve acres of ground, has been constructed according to the most approved modern ideas. There is accommodation for fifty (50) boarders, and all the rooms are light and excellently ventilated. The health and comfort of pupils is specially studied.

PAROCHIAL STATISTICS.

PARISH. or MISSION.	CHURCHES LICENSED.	Total White Population of District.	*No. of Church People Ministered to	No. of Clergymen.	No. of Lay Readers.	No. of Honorary Lay Readers.	No. of Centres at which Services are regularly held.	No. of Sunday and Weekday Services.	Celebrations of Holy Communion.	Sunday School Buildings.				SUNDAY SCHOOL TEACHERS.		SUNDAY SCHOOL SCHOLARS.		Average Attendance of Sunday Scholars.	No. of Communicants.	Persons Baptised.	MARRIAGES.		Burials.	PERSONS CONFIRMED.		Schools in which Religious Instruction is given.	No. of Weekday Religious Instructions.	Number of children receiving instruction on week days.
										Men	Women	Boys	Girls	After Banns	By License	Males	Females
†THURSDAY ISLAND ...	ALL SOULS' CATHEDRAL (Quetta Memorial)	500	415	1	1	834	94	1	1	4	15	26	22	86	19	...	3	19	10	6	2	160	85
COOKTOWN ...	CHRIST CHURCH	600	600	1	1	416	53	1	2	4	68	35	74	56	14	...	3	11	2	200	85
DARWIN ...	CHRIST CHURCH...	1000	300	1	2	145	37	1	9	15	12	100	18	...	4	3
MOSSMAN ...	S. DAVID'S	500	172	1	2	183	59	2	22	16	16	42	10	4	...	2	3	23	57
†NORMANTON cum CROYDON ...	S. ADREW'S	1400
	S. PETER'S
	S. MARGARET'S
	S. JOHN'S ...
†THE BUSH MISSION
†MOA MISSION ...	S. PAUL'S ...	8	600	1	2	6	3	1277	42	1	n.r.	n.r.	n.r.	230	19	2	4	13	34	21	n.r.	n.r.	n.r.
	BETELEMA
	BETENIA
†ROPER RIVER MISSION	S. CATHERINE'S	14	100	2	1	...	1	433	11	...	3	3	28	37	60	6	1	318	65
†MITCHELL RIVER MISSION	ALL SAINTS'	6	120	1	1	...	2	730	110	n.r.	n.r.	n.r.	20	1	2	1	200	32
	THE ASCENSION
	S. MARY'S
	S. SAVIOUR'S
†TOBBES STRAITS MISSION	S. ANDREW'S	12	1060	4	2	23	12	1030	90	1	5	9	90	85	120	582	59	6	...	8	44	49
	CHRIST CHURCH
Totals	Six Others	4040	3367	12	6	32	24	5048	496	4	11	23	232	214	304	1122	140	12	14	58	88	76	9	901	324

* Including aboriginals and aliens. † Vacant; the Bishop of Carpentaria has ministered as far as possible.

PAROCHIAL FINANCES (To the nearest pound sterling)

PARISH.	RECEIPTS.										EXPENDITURE.								CREDIT BALANCES OTHER THAN CURRENT A/C.				DEBIT BALANCE OTHER THAN CURRENT A/C.
	Credit Balance from previous year.	Direct Offerings.			Indirect Offerings.			From Diocesan Funds.	Miscellaneous Income.	Debit balance at end of year.	Total	Debit balance from previous year.	Clergyman's Stipend	Expenses of Divine Service	Diocesan Objects	Missions	Charitable Objects	Church Property	Interest	Miscellaneous	Credit Balance at end of year.	Total	Building Funds	Sunday Schools	Other Items	Total	Property	Other Items	Total
THURSDAY ISLAND	...	2	150	79	82	25	25	...	363	...	220	53	4	17	11	27	...	10	21	363	11	19	9	39
COOKTOWN	...	18	105	92	35	35	285	...	*158	17	3	8	...	2	...	47	50	285	7	2	5	14
DARWIN	84	161	20	...	2	10	277	46	*125	53	35	2	15	1	277	48	6	1	55	275	12	287
MOSSMAN	90	44	...	111	...	75	5	...	325	48	200	15	5	10	3	30	4	10	...	325	77	77
NORMANTON cum CROYDON
Totals	...	20	429	376	55	111	84	145	30	...	1250	94	703	138	12	35	14	94	6	82	72	1250	143	27	15	185	275	12	287

* Part of year

F. W. SLADE, Hon. Diocesan Secretary.

1920.

Diocese of Carpentaria.

Bishop:

Rt. REV. HENRY NEWTON, B.A.
Thursday Island, Queensland.

Administrator:

REV. F. W. SLADE, B.A.

Sub-Dean:

REV. F. W. SLADE, B.A.

Diocesan Secretary:

REV. F. W. SLADE, B.A., Thursday Island.

Commissaries:

REV. FRED. PONSONBY, M.A., The Rectory, Devonport, England.
REV. J. JONES, M.A., 242 Pitt Street, Sydney.
REV. W. P. GLOVER, Th.L., Warwick, Q.
REV. J. W. ASHTON, M.A., St. Kilda, Melbourne, V.
REV. C. R. MURRELLS, Springhill, Maesmore, Gloucester, England.

Clergy:

REV. B. S. COLE, Cooktown.
REV. C. HALL, Th.L., Normanton (on leave).
REV. C. W. LIGHT, Darwin.
REV. F. W. SLADE, B.A., Thursday Island.
REV. E. TAFFS, B.A., Mossman.

Honorary Lay Readers:

MR. H. F. L. FINNISS, Darwin
MR. G. R. A. PATCHING, Cooktown
MR. D. A. ROBERTS, Darwin.

Diocesan Council:

REV. F. W. SLADE, B.A. | MR. GEO. CLARK.
REV. J. J. E. DONE, | MR. GILSON FOXTON.
REV. G. A. LUSCOMBE. | MR. A. SULLIVAN.

Honorary Legal Adviser:

HIS HONOUR JUDGE MACNAUGHTON.

Aboriginal Mission, Mitchell River:

MR. J. W. CHAPMAN. | MRS. MATTHEWS.
REV. H. MATTHEWS, J.P. | MISS F. SMITH.
(Supt.)
J. Geibo, T. Solomon, J. Savo.

Roper River Mission:

MR. DYER. |
REV. R. D. JOYNT. | MRS. DYER.
REV. H. E. D. WARREN |
(Supt.)

Torres Straits Mission:

REV. J. J. E. DONE. | *REV. JOSEPH LUI.
REV. G. A. LUSCOMBE. | *REV. POEY PASSI.
REV. W. H. MACFARLANE, | MRS. LUSCOMBE.
(Th.L.) | MISS LUSCOMBE.
*Native Deacons.

The Diocese.

The See was founded in 1900, and consists of such part of Queensland as is bounded by the sea on the north and east, by the Northern Territory on the west, and by a line drawn from lat. S. 19deg. 30min. on the western boundary of Queensland due east to par. 144deg. E. and thence N. to lat. S. 16deg. 40min. and thence east to the sea, together with the whole of the Northern Territory, comprising an area of not less than 620,000 square miles. The population, which is very widely scattered over this immense area, consists of about 10,000 whites, 5,000 Japanese, Chinese, and other aliens, and 35,000 aboriginals. The white population is mainly mining and pastoral. The See town is Thursday Island, a pearling centre north of Cape York.

Finance.

The Diocese has no endowments beyond the Bishop's income of £395 per annum. Every parish needs a grant from central funds which come from subscriptions to the Diocese, and grants from English Societies.

Missions.

Missions are carried on amongst the Japanese at Thursday Island; the South Sea Islanders; the aboriginals on the Mitchell and Roper Rivers; and among the Islanders of the Torres Straits.

Special Offertories.

On Easter Day the offertories are given to the Clergyman of the Parish, and on Good Friday to the Australian Board of Missions.

The "Church Standard."

Posted to any Address for 6s. 6d. per Annum.

The CHURCH STANDARD holds the unique position of being the only independent weekly paper published in the interests of the Church of England in Australasia.

Published every Friday Morning.

Appeals to all Members of the Church of England, Members of the C.E.M.S., Churchwardens, Sidesmen and Parochial Councillors, Sunday School Teachers, Lay Readers, Catechists, and Clergy.

Specimen Copies on application to

THE CHURCH PUBLISHING CO. LTD.,

ROYAL INSURANCE BUILDINGS, 16 SPRING STREET, SYDNEY.

St. Margaret's, Brisbane.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND HIGH SCHOOL FOR GIRLS

Under the management of the Sisters of the Society of the Sacred Advent

Pupils prepared for examinations of the University of Queensland, Public Service and Associated Board R.A.

There are two Boarding Houses beautifully situated in extensive grounds overlooking the Brisbane River

BOARDERS RECEIVED FROM THE AGE OF EIGHT

FOR PROSPECTUS APPLY SISTER IN-CHARGE

St. Catharine's, Stanthorpe.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND HIGH SCHOOL FOR GIRLS

Under the management of the Sisters of the Society of the Sacred Advent

Pupils prepared for examinations of the University of Queensland, and Associated Board R.A.

Additional House secured

Increased Accommodation for Boarders

FOR PROSPECTUS APPLY SISTER-IN-CHARGE

Church of England Girls' Schools

UNDER THE MANAGEMENT OF THE
SISTERS OF THE SACRED ADVENT.

S. ANNE'S, TOWNSVILLE, Quarterly Fees for Boarders £10 10s.

S. MARY'S, HERBERTON " " " £15 15s.

Pupils prepared for Queensland University and Associated Board R.A. Examinations.
Commercial Subjects taught. Open-air sleeping accommodation if required.

In connection with S. Mary's, Herberton, there is a separate House for Boys under nine years of age. Quarterly Fees, £12 10s.

The Carpenterian

FOR THE DIOCESE OF CARPENTARIA, NORTH AUSTRALIA.

Vol. XXI.—No. 81.]

THURSDAY ISLAND, JANUARY 1, 1921.

[PRICE 2/6 A YEAR.
POST FREE.]

PUBLISHED ON THE FIRST DAY OF EACH QUARTER.

NOTICE.

All communications to be addressed to the Editor of The Carpenterian, Bishop's House, Thursday Island, to whom subscriptions may be sent. Subscription, 2/6 per annum, post free.

NOTICE TO CONTRIBUTORS.

All contributions of Parish News, etc., must reach the Editor before the last day of February, May, August, and November in each year.

The Bishop's Movements.

On the evening of Sunday, August 8th, the last day of the Conference, the Bishop preached in the Parish Church of S. John, at Hackney, where he served his first Curacy in 1892-1893. On August 11th he spoke at a meeting at Tewin, near Welwyn, in Hertfordshire, on behalf of the Diocese of Carpentaria; and on Sunday, August 15th, he preached at the Priory Church, Great Malvern, in the morning, and in the evening at S. Matthias, Malvern Link, besides celebrating in the Priory Church at 8 a.m. On Monday, August 16th, he spoke on behalf of the Diocese at a meeting at the Vicarage, Crowley, and on August 18th on behalf of the New Guinea Mission at Bearsted. On August 20th there was a Garden Meeting at Bishopsbourne Rectory, and on August 21st another in Canterbury—both in aid of the Diocese. On Sunday, August 22nd, he celebrated the Holy Communion at Bishopsbourne, preached in the morning, confirmed one candidate in the afternoon, and preached at S. George's, Canterbury, in the evening. From August 23rd to August 27th he was in France, and on August 28th he spoke at a Missionary Meeting and gave an address at Evensong at Eltham S. Mary. On Sunday, August 29th, he preached at Hythe in the morning, and at Holy Trinity, Folkestone, in the evening. On August 31st he addressed a Drawing Room Meeting at Winchester; a Garden Meeting at Haslemere on September 1st; Ardingley on September 4th; and at Heathfield, Farnham, on September 4th. On Sunday, September 5th, he preached at All Saints, Reading, in the morning and at S. Mary's in the evening. On September 6th he spoke at a meeting for S.P.C.K. at S. Alban's, and for the Diocese of Carpentaria at Billesdon on September 8th. On September 9th he preached at the G.F.S. Service at Retford—which branch is linked with the branch at Thursday Island—and afterwards gave the long service certificates to members. On September 10th there were two meetings at Louth, and on September 11th the Bishop returned to Retford for a Confirmation, and then went to Hull. On Sunday, September 12th, he celebrated the Holy Communion at S. Paul's, Hull; preached at Kirk Ella in the morning, and at S. Paul's, Hull, in the evening. On September 13th there was a meeting at S. Mary's, Sulcombe; on September 15th and 16th meetings in Hull; and on September 17th he preached at Poeklington. On Sunday, September 19th, he preached at S. Thomas, Huddersfield, in the morning; took a Confirmation at Scarnmonda in the afternoon; and preached at the Parish Church, Huddersfield, in the evening. On September 22nd he was at Scarborough for a meeting, and on September 24th at Manchester for another meeting. On Sunday, September 26th, he celebrated the Holy Communion at S. Aidan's, Leeds; preached there in the morning, at S. Stephen's in the afternoon, and at All Souls' in the evening. On the Sunday some twenty Bishops were in Leeds preaching for S.P.C.K. On Monday, September 27th, the Bishop was at Ellesmere for a meeting, and on September 28th at Oswestry. On Michaelmas Day he was the preacher at S. Philip's, Cheltenham, at Evensong; and on September 30th he spoke at a meeting for the Carpenterian Association at Spring Hill, Maismorr, near Gloucester, the home of the Rev. C. B. Mirlees, at one time Rector of Croydon, Q.

The Missions.

MITCHELL RIVER.

Miss Bertha Crutch arrived at Thursday Island in the s.s. "Ohangsha" on the 11th September, and received her licence as a lay Missionary at Mitchell River. She sailed the same day for her new work in the Mission ketch "Francis Pritt." At the last news of her she was in good health and hopeful of accomplishing useful work.

Dr. Vernon, M.C., a major from the A.I.F., having visited Moa Island, returned to Thursday Island in the Mission cutter "Banzai," and proceeded to Mitchell River in the ketch "Francis Pritt" on the 11th September, calling at Mapoon Mission on the way. He was greatly impressed with the beauty of the situation of the station at Kowanyama, the new station of the Mitchell River Mission, and with its possibilities. Having finished his work there, he went overland to Cairns, thence to proceed to the Missions in New Guinea.

Mr. J. W. Chapman of the Mitchell River staff was on a visit to town early in October; he has great hopes of success in his farming operations, and expects soon to produce much of the food required at the Mission. He will not take yet the furlough which is now overdue to him, as he considers that his absence at this juncture would be prejudicial to his work, so he has postponed his furlough until after the wet season. The ultimate purpose of the farming is not merely to lead the Mission towards self-support, but to settle the tribes on their own land and thus prevent their gradual extinction from starvation (a fate which is overtaking many of the wild tribes). Mr. Chapman's work therefore has an importance greater by far than most farm work.

We have been able to send an extra ton of flour to this Mission, which will keep more of the natives at work during the harvest. Quite a number of cases of Christmas presents, from Brisbane, Sydney, and Melbourne, have been received and forwarded by the Honorary Diocesan Secretary. The ketch "Francis Pritt" sailed from Thursday Island on the 1st December, for her last voyage until after the rains.

TORRES STRAITS.

Aregu, teacher and lay Missionary at Coconut Island, died on the 17th September, after a very short final illness. In past years he did much unpaid work for the Government. He was a faithful workman, and had much influence for good on his island; he made and presented the processional cross in use at the cathedral. May he rest in peace.

The Mission cutter "Oituli," having undergone extensive repairs and received a new sheathing of cypress pine, which we hope will be better than copper, is to be put in commission again in the middle of December. Mr. MacFarlane, the Mission Priest at Darnley Island, arrived at Thursday Island with his wife and family in the third week of December, to proceed to his Mission in time to arrive there by Christmas. His furlough has been a lengthy one, as he has visited England in company with the Bishop of Carpentaria, but his work done there has made his absence from home well worth while; he uses the cutter "Oituli" on his pastoral visitations.

The Mission cutter "Banzai" has had to go on the slip for repairs, and the Mission ketch "Herald" will need new copper very soon, after five years of almost constant work.

Winnie, daughter of the Rev. J. Done, is expected home from her first year away at school in the third week in December. This year is the first in the history of this young Diocese when the children of Mission Priests have been away at school, and this necessity will now be a regular part of our Diocesan organisation each year.

ROPER RIVER.

Mr. A. Dyer expects to return from furlough with his wife via Thursday Island, and to travel to his Mission in the auxiliary ketch "Holly," which, as we have mentioned, has been purchased by the Church Missionary Society for this Mission, for the purpose of making voyages to Thursday Island. By this means the terrible isolation of this station will be greatly relieved, and the work at Groote Island facilitated.

The Rev. R. D. Joynt has to go to the South on sick leave. He reached Thursday Island in the auxiliary ketch "Sir John Forrest" on the 1st December, and was a guest at Bishop's House while awaiting a ship for Melbourne.

The Parishes.

THURSDAY ISLAND.

All Souls' Day was observed as usual in this parish with a requiem and dirge. "All Souls" is the dedication of the Cathedral Church—which is a Memorial Church—and part of the memorial is this annual service; another part of the memorial is the prayer for seafarers, which is said regularly in the services.

A font cover, given in memory of Gertrude Robson by her friends here, was dedicated at Mattins on Sunday, 24th October. Miss Robson worked for some years in this parish as a teacher and Missionary, before she went to New Guinea, where she was a Missionary until she departed this life.

Several useful gifts have been received by the Church lately, and a team of twenty men have painted the fence and other woodwork, offering their labour to the good cause.

The Girls' Friendly Society, among other good works, has made and despatched a large box of clothing to St. Mary's Home, Toowong.

The "Quetta Club," for boys (and men), has been successful for its first year, and intends to resume its meetings after the rains. It invited its friends to an enjoyable Social on the 25th November.

MOSSMAN.

The erection of the permanent stone Church, which has been delayed so often, has been checked again for lack of cement. For some months past this necessary building material has been unobtainable in Queensland, and the patient builders at Mossman have had one more disappointment; we hope it will be their last, and that they will be able to resume building operations shortly.

A Farewell Social and a parting present were tendered to Mrs. and the Misses Olines, who are leaving the district; the gathering was a big and enjoyable affair, and these parishioners will be missed much.

A successful Sale of Work has been held in aid of the parish funds. Mrs. Taff's class of girls, and the ladies above-mentioned, were the most persistent workers in making things to sell.

COOKTOWN.

The Rector has been visiting the tinfields for a service occasionally, and has succeeded in starting a Sunday School at Rossville. This town continues to lose parishioners by removals, but it continues to hope for better times.

SUBSCRIPTIONS FOR "THE CARPENTARIAN."—Mrs. Brownlow, £1; Mrs. Owen, Mrs. C. J. King, each 5/-; Miss K. Bensted, 2/-; Rev. R. D. Joynt, 3/-; per the Rev. E. Taffs: Mrs. Crees (sen.), Mr. F. W. Chantry, Rev. E. Taffs, each 2/6; per Miss Florrie Byrnes: Cooktown Subscribers, 12/-

The Lambeth Conference.

The 1920 Lambeth Conference has been perhaps the most wonderful of all that have been held, whether in the importance of the subjects discussed, the decisions arrived at, or the number of Bishops who attended.

The meetings began with a wonderful service at Canterbury Cathedral on Saturday, July 3rd, and on Sunday, July 4th, there was another wonderful service in Westminster Abbey. The actual business began on Monday, July 5th. The order of the proceedings was as follows:—For a week meetings were held—morning and afternoon—in the library at Lambeth Palace, when appointed speakers addressed the Bishops on the various subjects down for discussion; there was a general debate, and committees were appointed to report on the various subjects, and to suggest resolutions to the whole conference. These committees met for a fortnight, and then, the whole conference met again for a fortnight—on some days there were three sessions during the last fortnight—and the reports of the committees were received and discussed, and the resolutions debated. The conference as a whole is not responsible for the committee reports, only for the resolutions which were passed by the whole conference. The conference closed with a service in St. Paul's Cathedral in London, when the sermon was preached by the Bishop of Tennessee, U.S.A., who represented the Presiding Bishop of the Church in America. This service was a celebration of the Holy Communion, and the celebrant was the Archbishop of Canterbury. Just before the blessing the Archbishop said a short office and spoke a few words of dismissal. Those few words were amongst the most touching of all that were said during the conference.

The whole arrangements were almost perfect. Each Bishop has his own chair in the library—which was only just large enough to accommodate the conference—and that was made possible by the removal of many of the book-cases. The Archbishop and Mrs Davidson provided lunch and afternoon tea for all of us. There was a book store in an ante-room where any book dealing with the subjects of the conference could be got or ordered, and where photographs and Church papers could be bought.

There were some experiences during the conference that were very wonderful, and they were worth a journey of 15,000 miles. One was when the Bishops in Canterbury Cathedral said the Nicene Creed after the Archbishop of Canterbury had delivered his allocution from St. Augustine's choir before the altar. Another was the day when the Lambeth appeal—the first of the resolutions on Reunion—was debated. When that appeal was accepted one of the Bishops asked if we might sing the doxology. The Archbishop of Canterbury said a few very solemn words and then we all stood, and after a minute of silent prayer, the doxology was sung. Another of a different nature was when the presentation was made to the Archbishop and Mrs Davidson on Saturday, August 7th, from the Bishops. To the Archbishop was given a processional cross—the shaft of ebony, the cross silver gilt. On the one side were medallions, in the centre the Crucifixion, and on the arms of the Cross the symbols of the four gospels. On the other side were medallions of the five greatest Archbishops of Canterbury: S.S. Augustine, Dunstan, Theodore, Alphege, Anselm. The speeches of the Archbishop of York, the Bishop of Tennessee, the Archbishop of Armagh, and the Metropolitan of India were a most perfect blend of seriousness and humour, and the reply of the Archbishop of Canterbury very touching and very interesting in his resumé of past conferences, and perhaps most touching of all was his reference to the interest taken in the conference by the servants at Lambeth, who did so much to make it possible for business to be done smoothly. Mrs Benson was asked to get something for herself personally, or for Lambeth Palace. She was given the title of Mother of the Conference by the Archbishop of York.

The outstanding personalities of the Conference were the Archbishop of York, who, as Chairman of the Committee on Reunion, did much by placing the subject on the very highest level to enable the Holy Spirit to guide the Conference; the Bishop of Oxford, the Bishop of Litchfield, the Bishop of Zanzibar, the Bishop of Bombay and the Archbishop of Brisbane.

The Bishop-designate of Durham was perhaps the speaker who most of all forced attention, even from those who did not agree with him. The Bishop of Peterborough made a wonderful Secretary, and must have had very little time for sleep, as every morning there was ready a very full report of the minutes of the proceedings of the day before, with a resumé of the speeches, and that was a small part of his work. The Archbishop of Canterbury was an excellent Chairman, patient and yet firm—if anything perhaps a little too patient—and able to lift discussions to a very high level. How he managed to do all the work connected with the Conference no one knows, and other work had to be done at the same time.

There were many social gatherings and functions, meetings, etc., arranged during the time of the Conference for the Bishops, but many of them (the Bishops) were not able to attend. Conference business was too exacting. A garden party at Buckingham Palace; a reception of the Bishops by the King, when he—in answer to an address from the Conference, read by the Archbishop of Canterbury—read a very fine speech; a dinner at the Mansion House, when the Bishops were the guests of the Lord Mayor; functions arranged by S.P.O.K., S.P.G., C.M.S. and the Bible Society, were amongst the most important. Both the Archbishop of Canterbury and the Bishop of London had all the overseas Bishops to stay with them for two nights at Lambeth and Fulham.

The whole time was intensely interesting and very strenuous, and of the many historic gatherings at Lambeth during hundreds of years there have been few, if any, more important than the Conference of 1920.

The Mothers' Union.

At the Conference of Overseas Workers, held in London last July, we were fortunate in having as delegate from the branches in this Diocese Mrs. Zabel, who knows the local conditions from long residence amongst us. Mrs. Zabel has kindly favoured us with a report of the Conference.

Our delegate attended a preliminary committee meeting to discuss ways and means. Here, most of the discussions were on the work among women of other than our branch of the human race, an encouraging aspect of the conference.

Our delegate was present at the annual Eucharist of the Union in S. Margaret's, Westminster, and mentions the beautiful singing, an aid to worship which we cannot expect to have at outposts of civilisation.

The mass meeting of members is described as "most inspiring"; and the founder of the Thursday Island branch, Lady Arbuthnot, is mentioned as having, at a reception to welcome the overseas delegates, asked after all the original members of this branch.

One of the most discussed subjects was divorce, and the Mothers' Union is strictly true to our Lord's teaching in this particular, and is likely to be a great power for good in consequence.

On the question of re-instating lapsed members who desire it, we can only express the hope that if ever a branch refuses to re-instate a woman who has been a member and who is a communicant, that branch will be extinguished.

Our delegate mentions the opportunity of "linking" branches, a practice which may well aid the work of the Union; and we are glad to see that the magazine, "Mothers in Australia," was very warmly praised.

Mrs. Zahel addressed the Conference on the difficulties experienced by native women of Torres Straits in realising the ideals of the Union; and it is rather startling to one who knows the Straits to learn that she was asked why we did not keep a large steamship to convey our Missionaries and women workers from island to island in comfort. We are glad to learn that the Conference impressed the delegates with a sense of the wonderful influence for good, all over the world, exerted by the Mothers' Union.

Manifesto from the National Council of the C.E.M.S.

A statement and an appeal to the Church in Australia.

THE CHURCH'S TASK.

No Churchman can fail to realise that a supreme call has come to the Church in Australia to address herself with utmost energy to the tasks that confronts us in Australian life to-day. From all parts of our land men are asking for the Church to give a lead. If we have a vigorous Australian Men's Society it is possible to present a powerful united witness in public affairs from the Anglican manhood of Australia. It is therefore necessary for the keen Churchman of Australia "to find one another"—to realise their kindred aims and loyalties—to impart one to the other their kindling faith and hope and then to become an aggressive force to bring other men to a renewed love and loyalty for the Church of their fathers.

A NATION-WIDE MEN'S SOCIETY.

The C.E.M.S. has not yet achieved all that was hoped of it. We have learned lessons from experience. The time for rebuilding has come; there are clamorous and massive needs for a strong forward movement by the Churchmen of Australia.

In common with the parent society in England, we have adopted the expanded aims of the society and have made our pledge to witness for Christ and to work for the extension of His Kingdom.

We are making our society definitely "nation wide." All branches, federations and other organisations are to be gathered up into a great Australian confederation with a duly elected Australian National Council as the authoritative organ of Australian units, and the society is to be Australian, not only extensively but intensively, i.e., in concentrating its thought and service upon the problems of Australian duty in Church and State and in developing its own Australian literature, atmosphere and forms of organisations.

It is believed that when we have this Australian unity and outlook there will be much greater opportunities of central leadership and guidance and inspiration than was hitherto possible.

A nation-wide Churchmen's Society with a developing national consciousness in its members will help the Church as a whole to realise its nation-wide responsibilities. We have been encouraged in this ideal by the English authorities.

SOME PRACTICAL DETAILS.

How are these aims to be achieved? The new movement has shown hopeful beginnings. From every State in the Commonwealth representatives have met and were resolute in demanding a forward movement on national lines.

A council was formed which has been engaged since then in developing the national organisation.

The following are absolutely essential to the life of the Society.

- (a) Secretariat.—For any big movement there must be some set aside to make it their special study and duty. The society cannot come to its own if it has to depend solely upon the occasional attention that devoted but busy men can bestow upon it. It is the devoted "whole time" man that makes a big movement. We must soon be in the position to have at least one person set apart wholly in the interests of the society. Otherwise the work cannot be done.
- (b) Annual Conferences.—These are vital for inspirational and organising purposes. We shall need a National Conference, and also, as we develop, State Conferences. The conferences should meet under conditions that permit the uninterrupted concentration of mind and spirit. They must primarily be meetings for counsel, inspiration and consecration. They should be held away from the distraction of cities.
- (a) An Australian Men's Paper.—There must be a means of communication between members, and a men's paper is indispensable for generating the Church conscience of the Anglican manhood. No group-interest survives to-day without its press organ.

The above are three foundation needs that have to be met if the Society is to begin to develop as a power for the Church.

Do not let anyone say that the Church cannot supply these needs.

The Students' Christian Movement, embracing a generally impecunious body of young people, has a secretariat of eight University graduates, and for twenty-four years has issued a monthly paper and held a National Conference every year.

The S. Andrew's Brotherhood in America, which corresponds to C.E.M.S., has an executive staff of thirteen men; five at "National Headquarters" and eight as Field Secretaries allotted to different areas. These are all well-trained, capable, whole-time men. The Brotherhood publishes a finely edited and turned out monthly paper, "S. Andrew's Cross." This year it will hold its 35th National Convention at St. Louis, October 6-10, and parallel with it a Convention for the Junior Chapters or Boys' Societies.

Many other local instances of similar organisations will suggest themselves to your minds.

Will there still be some who will say that the men of the Church of England in Australia can do none of these things?

In reality these are the foundations upon which other things are to be built.

Once bring the men's movement to conscious organic life and it will exercise itself in manifold services to the Church and the nation. We look to it becoming the chief propaganda department of the Church, by publications, papers, study groups, men's clubs, boys' clubs, city hostels, homes, and a score of activities that the men of the Church need to take up to meet the demands of the new age.

Get the men together; bring to bear upon them inspirational forces; lay before them clear-cut policies and social service will follow.

APPEAL.

We now ask the Church to give at least £2,000 to the National Council within the next six months. We say give emphatically, because the appeal is for the Churchpeople to adventure this small sum in the hands of the National Council in order to try out the men's movement. The Council may be trusted to see that the utmost value is obtained for the money.

This sum of £2,000 is now asked in order that the work may be launched and in the belief that thereafter the work will bring along its own support.

If the Church is in earnest in the desire to bring its manhood together for effective co-operation it should be prepared to back the work at the outset for this modest sum.

The money would be employed to initiate organisation under the three headings previously indicated, and also to assist Provincial and Diocesan Executives in Forward Movement Work.

We appeal to all Churchpeople to subscribe to this fund, believing that there is no more hopeful investment of money and energy for the well-being of the Church in Australia than is offering in this New Forward Movement among men.

G. M. BATHURST, President.

LITTLETON E. GROOM, Vice-President.

RICHARD RUEGG, Hon. Secretary.

HAMILTON C. BYRNE, Hon. Treasurer.

Contributions may be forwarded to: The Bishop of Bathurst, Bishops court, Bathurst; Hon. Littleton Groom, Federal Parliament House, Melbourne; H. C. Byrne, Esq., Bland Street, Ashfield, N.S.W.

The Carpenterian

FOR THE DIOCESE OF CARPENTARIA,
NORTH AUSTRALIA.

Vol. XXI., No. 81. Thursday Island, Jan. 1, 1921

Thy Years Shall Not Fail.

The Church has no observance connected with New Year's Day, which, though a public and popular holiday, has no religious significance. It is true that the first day of January is a holy day, both as being the Feast of the Circumcision and the Octave of Christmas, but it was so ordered long before it was New Year's Day. Only from the middle of the eighteenth century have the years been counted as beginning on January 1st; before that March 25th was New Year's Day.

And the Church is quite right in not commemorating the mere passage of time, or treating time as if it were a person or a power. The Church's business is with eternal realities, which time cannot change. We are conditioned by time more and more as life becomes more complicated; time becomes more and more valuable, as every employer knows; and we are liable to look at everything in terms of the time it requires, and to assume that time can do anything.

Yet the mere passing of time cannot of itself effect anything. Whether any force works rapidly or slowly, a force must be present if anything is to be accomplished. There are wrongs which no length of time can ever put right; justice must be done by man in the name of God, or, ultimately, by God himself. Yet we are liable to suppose that time will cure everything. "Time heals all wounds"—it is a confusion of thought; time never healed a wound yet; if a healing force is not present, the wound never will be healed.

One of the most difficult ideas to grasp is the idea of eternity; S. Augustine must have puzzled countless readers by teaching that God did not make the world in time, but he made time in the world; and amid all the changes and chances of the world, it is helpful to remember that there is One who does not change; he is superior to time, not affected by it, unchangeably the same, never becomes any older, accomplishes his will in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye. It is not always easy to grow completely out of the mental process which prompts a little child's query, How old is God? But we can trust him always just because he is always the same.

On the one hand, there is a prevalent idea that men can get absolution by lapse of time; some old sin is so old that they think God must have forgotten it; a sad mistake; God never forgets any sin until it is forgiven. A sin of forty years ago, that used to worry the sinner's conscience until he quietened his conscience by ceasing to listen to its voice, is still awaiting punishment, unless it is forgiven, and will meet the sinner before the dreadful Judgment Throne of the Christ if it remains unforgiven. Let us search and examine our own consciences, truthfully confessing all our sins to God, with steadfast determination not to do the like again; and let us never rest until we are sure that we have God's forgiveness. Many a Priest knows of cases where some old sin, done in boyhood, has blighted a whole life, because the wrongdoer never fairly faced it nor really believed that it could be completely forgiven. "I believe in the forgiveness of sins," a great mystery, but true. "Our Lord Jesus Christ hath left power on earth to His Church to forgive sins"; if, then, you cannot be sure that God has nothing against you, consult one of His Priests and declare your troubles, that by the ministry of God's Word you may obtain absolution.

On the other hand, there are many who suppose that there is not time now for them to become righteous; it is too late, they think; they distrust themselves; bad habits have become too strong; opportunities have been let slip. They can neither cut themselves loose from the past nor develop now their neglected powers of soul; they used to have good intentions, but these came to nothing, and a good life is beyond their reach, they think. Peace! God's Grace is a force that requires no time; it can change bad characters into good, and that in a moment; a thing hard to believe, but proved by experience. It is true that development can go on all through life, and we should continue to aim steadily at eliminating our faults and strengthening our virtues.

If time can of itself do nothing, we can do our duty in time, and there is no revealed probation except in time, that is, while we live this mortal life. Time is fleeting, but God gives us our chance to fit ourselves in the hurrying rush of earth for the timeless life of heaven. Shall we be so foolish as to throw away that chance?

A Visit to France.

We are indebted to the Bishop of Carpentaria for this article:—

Mr MacFarlane and I were able to get to France for four days during August. The time was all too short, but we were thankful to have the opportunity of seeing as much as we did. We decided to make the trip as soon as we could after the Lambeth Conference, and before beginning deputation work for the Carpenterian Association.

We left Dover on Monday, August 23rd, and travelled to Ostend, going on by train to Ypres the same day. Before we arrived at Ypres we saw signs of the devastation of the country, and at Ypres and in the neighbourhood the sight was heartbreaking. In the town all the chief buildings are in ruins, and the town must have been almost destroyed. A good deal has been done in the way of rebuilding the smaller houses and shops. We were able to do a little sightseeing on Monday night, and were out again early on Tuesday morning. The Church of S. Martin's which was a magnificent building, is a heap of ruins. The people have built a small Church nearby, and the difference in the glory of worship in the one compared with the other must be very sad to the people.

I had not been able to get in London much information about the grave of one of my nephews who was killed near Ypres, but I was told that Major Allen, who is O.C. Graves Commission in the Ypres sector, might be able to help me. His headquarters are at Poperinghe, about 14 miles out, and we intended going there by train on Tuesday morning, but when we were going towards the train a motor car pulled up behind us, and we heard a voice hailing us. It was Major Allen himself, and he wanted to know if he could be of any use to us. Of course he could be, and we told him what we wanted. "Jump into the car and come out with me and we'll see what can be done," said the Major. In less than an hour we were at the headquarters and had exact information about the grave, and had also received a good deal of information about the work of the Commission.

It is very difficult work, but it is being done very thoroughly. The Major advised us to get a car and take a run out for a few miles round Ypres, and he said we should get a better idea of the trenches and of the Front in that time than we should on a long trip in other parts. This round would also take us to the cemetery to which we wished to get. We went back to Ypres by train, and in the afternoon did as we were advised, going first to the aeroplane cemetery where is the grave I was looking for, on to Zonnebeke, Polygon Wood, Hooge, and back to Ypres. We had a map and saw names that will always be familiar as long as the world lasts. Polygon Wood was especially interesting. Nothing has been done in the way of restoration. We went to the great obelisk that stands on a high mound dominating the country—a memorial of Australian soldiers, so many of whom died there. At the foot of the mound on one side is a cemetery with some 2,000 graves: a beautiful spot well cared for in the midst of ruin and desolation. There we said a prayer for those who had given their lives for truth and liberty and justice, and for ourselves that we may be made worthy of the sacrifice of the lives of the best of our nation. We were able to walk along the trenches—very shallow hereabouts as the water is so near the surface—to three of the pill boxes that are nearby. Broken rifles, helmets, shovels, barbed wire, wire netting and all sorts of other things were to be found lying about, and near one pill box were the bones of a man.

We passed through a village, for a long time the German headquarters. On past what is called the tank cemetery, where a large number of tanks had to be deserted, bogged in the mud, and most of which like great skeletons of crabs lie yet. We came to Hooge, one of the saddest of sights. On the side of the road was a notice board with the legend "This was Hooge." Here was one of the most beautiful chateaux of Belguim, and not a sign of the building or of the woods around it left. A new chateau is in course of erection—very startling and glaring compared with the old, of which we were able to get photographs. The Baron lives in a little cottage, army huts rebuilt for him, his wife and two daughters, and indeed most of the people are so housed while they labour to restore their land to something of its old prosperity, and it is wonderful what has been done.

Hooge, so the Baron told us, changed hands seventeen times during the war. So no wonder it suffered as it did.

Along the roads where once were beautiful avenues of trees are now long lines of dead timber, for all the world like ring-barked country in parts of Australia; great white ghosts of what were once beautiful woods. In other places the ground is one mass of shell holes like a deserted mining place where prospectors had been putting down pot holes; the holes filled with water and bulrushes growing in them.

On Wednesday we left Ypres for Amiens, where I might find two more graves for which I was looking, and where is one Mr MacFarlane wished to find. Before we left Ypres on Wednesday morning I celebrated the Holy Communion in the Chapel of the Church Army Hut for relatives who had come to visit the graves of their sons or brothers.

We had to change trains about three times between Ypres and Amiens, but we managed without a great deal of trouble though neither of us spoke much French, and few we met knew any English. We had got change in French money at Ypres to pay our fares through France, but we found that the town we were told to book at for Amiens was in Belgian territory and our money was not enough to pay for two second-class fares, so we had to get third-class fares instead, and it was really much more interesting travelling third than it had been travelling second. We passed through Turcoing, Lille, Albert, Arras, but could not see much from the train. One was tempted to get out at various stations and see places that are so well known. At Amiens we were to be put up at the Y.M.C.A. Hostel as we had been at Ypres—we made arrangements in London for the trip—but they had no room, and a room was found for us in the town with an old French lady who had lost her son in the war. He died a prisoner in Germany. We managed to hold conversations with her in broken French and English. At one of the hostels in Amiens where we went to see an English lady, we saw a notice asking that any travelling Priest would kindly celebrate the Holy Communion at S. Barnabas' Hostel in Amiens, so we went at once to the hostel and arranged for a celebration on the Thursday morning. After seeing the Cathedral and other sights in Amiens, we went by car to one of the cemeteries where Mr. MacFarlane was to find the grave of one of his relations, and on the way we passed through Villers Bretonneux, Habonieres, Caix, Le Quesnel and Haugard. The destruction is awful in these places, houses and Churches in ruins. At the S. Barnabas Hostel we met a lady who was very anxious to find the grave of a brother-in-law, a Canadian; the cemetery was on our route but the locality a little uncertain. We took this lady with us in the car. She had a letter from the Graves Commission giving general directions, but our chauffeur did not know the cemetery, and he took us to one or two others first. Then we got out his map and consulted the letter of direction and tried to make him understand where we thought the cemetery must be. It was not easy, but we got him to have an idea, and after one try more we found a very small cemetery a little off the road, which was the one we wanted.

On Friday we came back to Folkestone by Boulogne. It was a very interesting trip. It is wonderful how much has been done in the way of restoration, but there is a very great deal to be done yet. The fields are all under cultivation, and the crops are good, but it will be a long time before people are decently and comfortably housed, and they will never have the wonderful Churches again. We heard of other places even more terribly destroyed than what we saw, and where little has been done as yet in the way of reconstruction of buildings.

The Reunion of Christendom.

THE LAMBETH APPEAL.

Without doubt, the most important subject brought before the Lambeth Conference for the consideration of the Bishops of the Anglican Communion was the subject of Reunion. No other was of such world-wide interest, and no other presented so many difficulties.

There was very real anxiety in the hearts of many lest on the one hand principles of vital importance to the preservation of the continuity of the Church should be surrendered, lest the breach between the Historic Churches of the East and the Roman and the Anglican should be widened, and so complete reunion be made almost impossible; and on the other hand, lest conditions should be laid down which it would be impossible for the Non-Episcopal Churches to accept. The result, as embodied in the Lambeth Appeal, is a practical proof that the promise of our Lord that the Holy Spirit should ever be with His Church to guide her has not failed, and that when men are prepared, with real humility and a sincere desire to be led, the guidance is at hand.

It is a miracle worked by the Holy Spirit that an assembly of 250 Bishops, amongst whom were men of deep and strong convictions, and who were at almost diametrically opposite poles of thought, were able to issue an appeal almost absolutely unanimously without sacrificing their convictions and with absolute sincerity. The Appeal, which is the first of the resolutions on Reunion passed by the Conference, which invites co-operation in attaining an ideal, and which expresses that ideal, was debated for five hours, and there was hardly a single objection; though there were some, as would be expected, who were doubtful whether the method proposed was the right method, whether it might not hinder rather than help Reunion, but even they hoped they would prove false prophets.

Perhaps the controlling influence which brought about the result was—loyalty to our Lord Jesus Christ. Such an absolute conviction that the present condition of Christendom is contrary to His Will, that loyalty to Him demanded that personal convictions and preferences must give way, whenever such convictions and preferences were not inextricably bound up with principles which the same loyalty made it impossible for them to be surrendered. There was an absolute readiness to surrender all that was not essential, and on the other hand, and from the same influence, there was a readiness to see and to value the opinions and convictions of others. This spirit of loyalty, and with it a spirit of humility, made it possible for the Holy Spirit to do His work; and there was a sense of the Presence and guidance of the Holy Spirit, who does not over-ride, and can on only work in Harmony with, human wills.

Then again there was the influence and effect of the prayers that had been said by so many thousands of Christians for so many years that the will of our Lord might be done, and the Church made a more worthy and effective agent for the carrying on of His work in the world.

The appeal is remarkable for the attitude of mind which it expresses with regard to reunion. The whole question is approached from a new point of view. An ideal is put forth for which all are asked to strive. It is inclusive rather than exclusive, absorption of all into an ideal, rather than of others into one. Absorption into an ideal to which all will bring their various contributions of service and worship, not a dead uniformity but a living unity. It is a suggestion to make actual on earth the ideal of the heavenly Jerusalem to which shall be brought the glory and the honour of the nations. It implies a confession of failure on the part of the Church in the past to use all her powers for all conditions of men, and in so far accounts for the need there has been to assert principles and truths for which various bodies of Christians stand. It is a confession of sin and of failure. On the one hand there is an insistence on the need of faith, and the claims of Episcopal order which prevents a widening of the breach between the Eastern, Roman and Anglican Communion. On the other hand a recognition of the work of the Holy Spirit in the ministries of Non-Episcopal Churches, and if these later are asked to accept Episcopacy as the means of bringing about regularisation of Orders, it is also suggested that those Episcopally ordained should also receive a commission authorising them to minister to people of other bodies of Christians.

There are of course many details to be considered for which it was not the duty of the conference to arrange. There will be practical difficulties to be overcome, but if these are approached in the spirit of the appeal, there need be no doubt they will be met.

We can go forward, very slowly it may be, but in sure and certain confidence that if only we are all prepared to live and act in the spirit of the Lambeth Appeal, the Holy Spirit will lead us into all truth.

The Carpentarian Association.

The Annual Meeting was held on July 27th, but the news of it did not reach us in time for publication in our October issue; we cannot rely on getting letters from England in less than three months after they are posted, sometimes even four months.

The chairman of the meeting was the Rev. Chancellor Ponsonby. By the kind invitation of Mrs. Mayne, the meeting was held at 101, Queen's Gate, Onslow Gardens, London.

We are grateful to the Church Times for a report extending to more than a column; yet, we feel bound to correct some slight inaccuracies, such as were sure to occur from lack of local knowledge. There has never been a Bush Brotherhood in this Diocese, we wish we did have the help of one; the Torres Straits Mission costs the Church in Australia about £1,400 a year. We are grateful also to the Guardian for its report. We suppose our English brethren will find it hard to realise that a journey of 150 miles in a car through the bush brings the risk of death by thirst, because it occupies, not three hours—as one might expect—but three days.

We have received from the Association £260, and tender our hearty thanks to all the kind donors. The Clergy ask for no more than enough, and receive much smaller stipends than the same men are offered in other places; they are very willing to face the difficulties of the North; but with such a tiny population and such a huge area, it is impossible for the Diocese to do its work without the help of our brethren elsewhere. This "Christmas Present" is a most acceptable gift. Of course there is not time to spend it before the end of 1920, but we know now what we have to work with in 1921.

Intercessions.

We have been asked by a correspondent to print the two following forms of prayer in the hope that they will find a place in the private intercessions of some of the faithful, or be added to family prayers in conjunction with the petitions printed on the enclosed leaflet.

This is issued by the A.B.M. with reference to our own special Missionary charge:

"O Lord Jesus Christ, who hast promised in Thy gospel that whatever is done unto one of the least of Thy brethren, Thou wilt receive as done unto Thee: Bless, we beseech Thee, Thy servants whom Thou hast sent to minister amongst the aborigines of Australia, and the natives of Torres Straits: fill Thy Missionaries with Thy Holy Spirit, and so prosper their labours that the darkness of the ignorant ones may be enlightened and their weakness enabled by Thy strength: Who with the Father and the Holy Ghost art God over all, blessed for evermore." Amen.

This has been issued recently for use in the Diocese of Brisbane, and is suitable for this Diocese:

"O Lord God, to whom all souls belong, bless, we beseech Thee, Thy Church in this Diocese, and grant unto it all things necessary for its well-being. Bless the ministers of Thy Word and Sacraments: enrich them in their souls' life: reveal Thyself to them more and more: uphold them in weariness and loneliness: add to their numbers of those born in the land. Deepen the spiritual life amongst us: draw all men to desire and use the means of grace: call many to consecrate their lives in Thy service: and help us so to grow in knowledge and love that, through us, Thy Word may go forth abroad to the enlargement of Thy Kingdom and the glory of Thy Holy Name. Through Jesus Christ our Lord." Amen.

IMPORTANT.

For any information about the Diocese, apply to "The Hon. Dio. Sec., Box 57, Thursday Island, Q., Australia," or to one of the Bishop's Commissaries, whose names are published in this issue, or to the Hon. Secretary of the Carpentarian Association, Miss T. Scarth, Bearsted, Maidstone, Eng.

Protestant.

Already the supervisor of the census, which is to be taken in respect of the night after 3rd April, is warning the people not to describe their religion as "catholic" or "protestant." The warning is necessary; in spite of the absurdity of these designations, many continue carelessly to use them. We have before pointed out that "protestant" is not the name of a religion at all: Jews, Turks, infidels, heretics, are all protestants, and are none the better for it. If anyone imagines that there is a "protestant religion, let him ask, Who is at the head of it? How are its members admitted? What are the obligations of its members? What is their faith? And "catholic" is not the name of any religious denomination, though several include the word in their names. In the census of 1901 there were 5,179 Australians who described their religion as "catholic," but ten years later 75,379 used the same designation. On the latter occasion the Roman Catholic newspapers urged their readers not to call themselves "catholics," yet they do commonly and confusingly so describe themselves. Again, the number who were so ignorant as to call themselves "protestants" in 1901 was 20,558, and in 1911 the number had increased to 109,861. If a man has no religion he may, and ought to, be ashamed of himself, yet he ought to tell the truth; if he has a religion he is a member of a community, and should write it, "Presbyterian" or "Church of England," or "Roman Catholic" or as the case may be.

The Country Parish

The following, which looks as if it was pure Australian, comes from New York:

The census figures just published tell the old story of the steady migration of population from rural to urban centres. The lure of the great cities and their brilliant lights and pleasure palaces is proving an irresistible magnet to young people in the remote country districts, who are flocking there by the thousands. Factories are draining the land of labour necessary for the production of food, and abandoned farms are becoming far too common. All this makes the work of the Church in the rural districts increasingly difficult, and in a good many parishes threatens it with extinction. The country clergyman has a hard task. For the most part his congregations are small and, to that extent, uninspiring. His people do not come into contact with the large world and are therefore apt to become incurably conservative. They lack imagination and do not visualize all that worship may mean. Owing to lack of material the service is not infrequently indifferently rendered and both priest and people are apt to become discouraged and be content with things as they are because they are convinced that they are fighting a losing battle.

It is not a grizzle. It is written for the purpose of adding, "The Church must face this problem and adapt her methods to meet the changed circumstances."

Yarrabah.

Recently we learned from a friend that this Mission, in the neighbouring Diocese of North Queensland, was making great strides in its industrial work, its saw-mill having cut and delivered large quantities of railway sleepers and other timber; this is one of the results of many years of effort, a beginning towards self-support.

But on the top of this news comes news of a serious loss; we learn that the launch, which is an expensive necessity to the work of the Mission, has been wrecked, and a month's food supplies lost. We have no hesitation in begging the faithful to make good the loss; donations may be sent to A.B.M., 242 Pitt Street, Sydney. Having in this Diocese two of the four Aboriginal Missions which the Church of England maintains in Australia, we know all the careful thought and management required to make ends meet with the slender resources at our disposal. We fear that some of the shifts we are put to would, if known, seem contemptible, and we are therefore quite sure that Yarrabah cannot stand such a heavy loss, and needs the loving help of the brethren.

Glennie Memorial School,

Church of England School for Girls

TOOWOOMBA.

PRINCIPAL - - - MISS LAWRANCE

(Assisted by a highly qualified Resident Staff).

The School is under the direction of
His Grace the Archbishop of Brisbane, and Council.

Thorough Education. Pupils prepared for University Examinations.

MUSIC AND LANGUAGE SPECIALITIES.

Pupils prepared for the Examinations of the Associated Board R.A.M., R.C.M.

The New Building, situated over 2000 feet above sea level in twelve acres of ground, has been constructed according to the most approved modern ideas. There is accommodation for fifty (50) boarders, and all the rooms are light and excellently ventilated. The health and comfort of pupils is specially studied.

(Administered by a Committee appointed by the Diocesan Council)

	£	s.	d.	£	s.	d.
Balance, 1/1/1920.
Held by Diocesan Church Management Fund	150	0	0
Current A/c, Bank of Q. Ltd., T. I.	... 410	2	3
				560	2	3
Sale of bullocks			187	0	0
				£747	2	3

	£	s.	d.	£	s.	d.
Salary, Overseer...	200	0	0
Exchange on do.	... 1	1	0
Stores, Overseer 73	19	0
Horses, Saddles, etc.	... 22	9	0
Stock Tax	... 8	7	2
Cook Dingo Board	... 11	5	11
Rations for Boys	... 104	14	9
Exchanges, Duty, Bank Charge	... 2	0	9
Balance, 31/12/20	... 323	3	11
				£747	2	3

Memorandum of Balance—Held in Diocesan Church
Manag. Fund	100	0	0
Held in Mitchell River Mission a/c...	... 225	0	0
Current a/e, Bank of Q. Ltd., T. I.	... 14	19	0
				339	19	0
Less Outstanding Cheque 16	15	1
				£323	3	11

[illegible]

LIABILITIES.				£	s.	d.	ASSETS.				£	s.	d.	£	s.	d.
Models Limited	620	16	4	Bank of Queensland Ltd.	6	10	4
Cattle Committee	225	0	0	Ben. Account	6
Hospital Account	7	7	0	Excess Expenditure over Receipts, 1919	...	975	3	0
Diocese of Carpentaria	100	0	0	"	"	"	1920	48	11	5
Native Accounts	77	1	11							1,023	14	5
				£1,030	5	3									£1,030	5	3

HODELS LIMITED,
Per GEO. CLARKE, Managing Agents.

1921.

Diocese of Carpentaria.

Bishop:

RT. REV. HENRY NEWTON, B.A.
Thursday Island, Queensland.

Administrator:

REV. F. W. SLADE, B.A.

Sub-Dean:

REV. F. W. SLADE, B.A.

Diocesan Secretary:

REV. F. W. SLADE, B.A., Thursday Island.

Commissaries:

REV. FRER. PONSONBY, M.A., The Rectory, Devonport, England.
REV. J. JONES, M.A., 242 Pitt Street, Sydney.
REV. W. P. GLOVER, Th.L., Warwick, Q.
REV. J. W. ASHTON, M.A., St. Kilda, Melbourne, V.
REV. C. B. MURRELLS, Springhill, Maesmore, Gloucester, England.

Clergy:

REV. B. S. COLE, Cooktown.
REV. C. HALL, Th.L., Normanton (on leave).
REV. C. W. LIGHT, Darwin.
REV. F. W. SLADE, B.A., Thursday Island.
REV. E. TAFFS, B.A., Mossman.

Honorary Lay Readers:

MR. H. F. L. FINNISS, Darwin
MR. G. R. A. PATCHING, Cooktown
MR. D. A. ROBERTS, Darwin.

Diocesan Council:

REV. F. W. SLADE, B.A. | MR. GEO. CLARK.
REV. J. J. E. DONE. | MR. GILSON FOXTON.
REV. G. A. LUSCOMBE. | MR. A. SULLIVAN.

Honorary Legal Adviser:

HIS HONOUR JUDGE MACNAUGHTON.

Aboriginal Mission, Mitchell River:

MR. J. W. CHAPMAN. | MRS. MATTHEWS.
REV. H. MATTHEWS, J.P. | Miss F. SMITH.
(Supt.)
J. Geibe, T. Solomon, J. Savo.

Roper River Mission:

MR. DYER. |
REV. R. D. JOYNT. | Mrs. DYER.
REV. H. E. D. WARREN |
(Supt.)

Torres Straits Mission:

REV. J. J. E. DONE. | *REV. JOSEPH LUI.
REV. G. A. LUSCOMBE. | *REV. POEY PASSI.
REV. W. H. MACFARLANE, | Mrs. LUSCOMBE.
(Th.L.) | Miss LUSCOMBE.
* Native Deacons.

The Diocese.

The See was founded in 1900, and consists of such part of Queensland as is bounded by the sea on the north and east, by the Northern Territory on the west, and by a line drawn from lat. S. 19deg. 30min. on the western boundary of Queensland due east to par. 144deg. E. and thence N. to lat. S. 16deg. 40min. and thence east to the sea, together with the whole of the Northern Territory, comprising an area of not less than 620,000 square miles. The population, which is very widely scattered over this immense area, consists of about 10,000 whites, 5,000 Japanese, Chinese, and other aliens, and 35,000 aboriginals. The white population is mainly mining and pastoral. The See town is Thursday Island, a pearling centre north of Cape York.

Finance.

The Diocese has no endowments beyond the Bishop's income of £395 per annum. Every parish needs a grant from central funds which come from subscriptions to the Diocese, and grants from English Societies.

Missions.

Missions are carried on amongst the Japanese at Thursday Island; the South Sea Islanders; the aboriginals on the Mitchell and Roper Rivers; and among the Islanders of the Torres Straits.

Special Offertories.

On Easter Day the offertories are given to the Clergyman of the Parish, and on Good Friday to the Australian Board of Missions.

The "Church Standard."

Posted to any Address for 6s. 6d. per Annum.

The CHURCH STANDARD holds the unique position of being the only independent weekly paper published in the interests of the Church of England in Australasia.

Published every Friday Morning.

Appeals to all Members of the Church of England, Members of the C.E.M.S., Churchwardens, Sidesmen and Parochial Councillors, Sunday School Teachers, Lay Readers, Catechists, and Clergy.

Specimen Copies on application to

THE CHURCH PUBLISHING CO. LTD.,

ROYAL INSURANCE BUILDINGS, 16 SPRING STREET, SYDNEY.

St. Margaret's, Brisbane.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND HIGH SCHOOL FOR GIRLS

Under the management of the Sisters of the Society of the Sacred Advent

Pupils prepared for examinations of the University of Queensland, Public Service and Associated Board R.A.

There are two Boarding Houses beautifully situated in extensive grounds overlooking the Brisbane River

BOARDERS RECEIVED FROM THE AGE OF EIGHT

FOR PROSPECTUS APPLY SISTER IN-CHARGE

St. Catharine's, Stanthorpe.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND HIGH SCHOOL FOR GIRLS

Under the management of the Sisters of the Society of the Sacred Advent

Pupils prepared for examinations of the University of Queensland, and Associated Board R.A.

Additional House secured

Increased Accommodation for Boarders

FOR PROSPECTUS APPLY SISTER IN-CHARGE

Church of England Girls' Schools

UNDER THE MANAGEMENT OF THE
SISTERS OF THE SACRED ADVENT.

S. ANNE'S, TOWNSVILLE, Quarterly Fees for Boarders £10 10s.

S. MARY'S, HERBERTON " " " " £15 15s.

Pupils prepared for Queensland University and Associated Board R.A. Examinations.
Commercial Subjects taught. Open-air sleeping accommodation if required.

In connection with S. Mary's, Herberton, there is a separate House for Boys under nine years of age. Quarterly Fees, £12 10s.

The Carpenterian

FOR THE DIOCESE OF CARPENTARIA, NORTH AUSTRALIA.

UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS LIBRARY
JAN 23 1922

Vol. XXI.—No. 82.]

THURSDAY ISLAND, APRIL 1, 1921.

[PRICE 2/6 A YEAR.
POST FREE.]

PUBLISHED ON THE FIRST DAY OF EACH QUARTER.

NOTICE.

All communications to be addressed to the Editor of The Carpenterian, Bishop's House, Thursday Island, to whom subscriptions may be sent. Subscription, 2/6 per annum, post free.

The address of the Secretary for the Carpenterian Association in England is Miss Theodora Scarth, Bearsted, Kent, England.

NOTICE TO CONTRIBUTORS.

All contributions of Parish News, etc., must reach the Editor before the last day of February, May, August, and November in each year.

The Past Clergy of the Diocese.

The following notes about the past Clergy of the Diocese have been compiled by the Bishop of Willochra, and we are sure that our readers will be glad to have them, and will be grateful to the Bishop for compiling them. As we know the Bishop has a very tender spot for the north, and is always keenly interested in all that goes on in his old Diocese:—

I have been looking over the names of the Clergy who worked in the Diocese of Carpentaria between 1900 and 1915, and some notes on their present position and work may be of interest to your readers. There are thirty-seven names in all, of whom two are dead, H. W. Curtis and S. Lewis. Four are working in the Diocese of Willochra, namely, the Venerable Archdeacon Nash, A. R. Longmore, J. B. Drabble and W. M. Wilkinson; six in England, A. P. Gocher as Rector of East Orchard; H. H. Ascough as Curate of Christ Church, Woburn Square; J. Pranker as Vicar of Whitley, Ripon; F. M. T. Palgrave at S. Oswald's College, Ellesmere; and H. J. Boon as Curate of Easden, Newcastle. I saw C. B. Mirrilees at Gloucester. He has been very ill but is now better. He devotes himself to helping the Diocese by taking voluntarily the work of Clergy who need a rest or holiday. He has still a warm place in his heart for Oroydon, and is one of the Commissaries in England for the Bishop of Carpentaria. The rest, with the exception of three, whom I cannot trace, are working in Australia. Canon Grabham is on the staff of the Diocese of North Queensland at Townsville. R. W. Thomas was Rector of Latrobe, Tasmania, and retired in 1919. G. H. Smith is doing a big work as Archdeacon of Broken Hill, and W. P. Glover as Rector of Warwick in the Brisbane

Diocese. T. K. Pitt is Rector of All Saints', Hobart, and W. Hudson, of Coburg, in Victoria, where he has done fine work. D. Morgan Jones has been for many years Rector of Olayfield in Brisbane, and edits the Diocesan paper. E. Taffs is, as far as I know, the only one who through all the years has remained faithful to the one Diocese and the one parish. J. Jones is chairman of the Australian Board of Missions—a position of the very greatest importance. F. C. Hall is Curate of S. Michael's, Wollongong, and A. E. Smith is Rector of Goondiwindi. E. S. Chase is incumbent of Panton Hill, Victoria, and L. F. Trevor has returned from England, and is priest-in-charge of Beac, Victoria. A. M. Hassell has lately been appointed to the important parish of Pittsworth in the Diocese of Brisbane. L. Arnold is Chaplain to the Church of England Grammar School, Melbourne. J. Huthnance, ordained for the Roper River Mission, is Vicar of Bellengen, Grafton, and W. E. Godson is Rector of Dapto in New South Wales. F. H. T. Lane is Chaplain at Yarrabah, and J. Tweedie is at work in Tasmania. C. Hall went as transport Chaplain to England in 1917—when placed on the regular staff saw a great deal of service in France, and he should soon be back in Australia. W. A. Fletcher is still faithful to S. Thomas, North Sydney, and H. E. Warren remains Chaplain and Superintendent of the Roper River Mission.

I think your readers will agree that the record is a remarkably satisfactory one. Out of the thirty-seven only two have died, which does not look as if the climate were very deadly, and twenty-seven are still serving the Church in Australia. Of only three is the present work unknown.

I need not say that my old Diocese is often in my thoughts, and that I follow with great interest the record of its progress in the Carpenterian. Nothing can eradicate the memory of the happy days that I spent in the Far North.

GILBERT, BISHOP OF WILLOCHRA.

The Bishop's Movements.

On Friday, October 1st, the Bishop left Maesmore and went to Yate in Gloucestershire where he preached at the Harvest Festival, and on Saturday he returned to Gloucester where he was the guest of Bishop Frodsham, at one time Bishop of North Queensland. At the time of the Bishop's visit, Bishop Frodsham was one of the Canons of Gloucester; he has since been appointed Vicar of Halifax, one of the most important livings in the North of England. On Sunday, October 2nd, the Bishop preached in Gloucester Cathedral in the morning, and at S. Catherine's, Gloucester, in the evening. On Monday, October 3rd, the Bishop went to London with Mr Mirrilees to attend and speak at a meeting in the Church House for the Province of Queensland. The Agent-General for Queensland took the chair, and the speakers at a very large and enthusiastic gathering were the Archbishop of Brisbane, the Bishops of North Queensland and Carpentaria. The Bishop went to Bristol in the evening and was at Bath on October 5th for a meeting at S. Mary's, Bathwick. On October 6th he went to Glastonbury, after having been met at Radstock by Mr Crozier, at one time Sub-Dean of the Cathedral, Townsville. Mr Crozier drove the Bishop by car to his vicarage and after lunch drove him to Glastonbury. Mr Crozier had kindly taken over all the engagements that had been made for the Bishop in May and June, 1920, when he was expected in England early in the year. It will be remembered that the outbreak of influenza early last year made it impossible for the Bishop to leave Thursday Island at the time he intended doing so. At Glastonbury the Bishop preached at Evensong. He was the guest of Mr Day, at one time Archdeacon of Townsville. Mr Day, who had some wonderful experiences as a Chaplain in Egypt, Palestine and Persia, drove the Bishop back to Bath on October 7th to address a meeting of the Mothers' Union and to preach at the Harvest Festival at Claverton, a village near Bath. On October 8th the Bishop was at Castle Cary to speak at a meeting, and on October 9th he went to Liverpool, where he was the guest of the Bishop of the Diocese, with the Bishop of Riverina. On Sunday, October 10th, the Bishop preached at Seaforth in the morning, addressed the children of the Sunday School there in the afternoon, and in the evening preached at S. Nicholas, the Parish Church of Liverpool. This visit was on behalf of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel. On Monday, October 11th, the Bishop was at Wybenbury, near Crewe, where he preached and dedicated the war memorial in the Church. On October 12th he went to Oxford, where with the Bishop of New Guinea he addressed a meeting for New Guinea and Carpentaria in the hall of New College. On Wednesday, October 13th, he went to Clevedon in Somersetshire, where he stayed till the following Saturday, on which day he went to Eastbourne via London. On Sunday, October 17th, he preached at the Parish Church in the morning and at the children's service in the afternoon, and at S. Peter's, Eastbourne, in the evening. Canon Carr Smith is Vicar of S. Peter's. He was for many years Rector of S. James', Sydney. This was also an S.P.G. Sunday. On Monday, October 18th (S. Luke's Day), he celebrated at S. Peter's, the assistant Priest being a full-blooded West Indian of negro descent, a very capable and well educated Priest who had come to England for experience. On the same day the Bishop went to Tring, in Hertfordshire, for a Carpentarian meeting, and returned to London at night. On October 19th he went to the Forest School, Walthamstow—the head master, the Rev. R. C. Guy, is a brother of Mrs Nash—for a magic lantern lecture to the boys. On October 20th the Bishop was at Tunbridge Wells for an S.P.G. meeting, and on October 21st at Salisbury for a Carpentarian drawing room meeting. On October 22nd he addressed the boys of the Cathedral School in the chapel, and went on to Warminster, where he addressed the men of S. Boniface Theological College. The Warden of S. Boniface is the Rev. J. W. Tomlin, at one time Warden of S. Francis' College, Nundah, Brisbane. On Saturday, October 23rd, the Bishop was at Bearsted in Kent, the guest of Mrs Scarth, the mother of the secretary of the Carpentarian Association. On Sunday, Oct. 24th, he preached for S.P.G. at All Saints', Maidstone, in the morning; and at Holy Trinity, Maidstone, in the evening. October 26th was spent at Bishopsbourne, near Canterbury, and on October 27th the Bishop was one of the speakers at a wonderful Missionary meeting at Broadstairs. The meeting, for S.P.G., was held in the Cinema Hall just after a performance, and before the cinema people came out there was a huge crowd in the street waiting to get in. The hall was packed. The Bishop of Croydon took the chair, and the other speakers were the Bishops of North China and of Northern Rhodesia. The Bishop returned to Bishopsbourne late that night, so that he could take the celebration on the Festival of SS. Simon and Jude, as the Rector of Bishopsbourne had been suddenly called away from home. That day the Bishop went on to Cowley Uxbridge, in Middlesex, for a lantern lecture. On Sunday, October 30th, he was at Devonport, the guest of Chancellor Ponsonby, one of his Commissaries, and he preached at Devonport morning and evening. On November 3rd he was at Cambridge for a drawing-room meeting at the Lodge, Jesus College. On Sunday, November 7th, he preached morning and evening at S. Mary's, Bourdon Street, London; and on November 9th he was at Oxford to receive his D.D. degree, which was granted honoris causa by the University of Oxford. On November 10th he spoke to the students in the College chapel at Highbury, and on November 11th—Armistice Day—he spoke to the boys of the Westminster School in their hall. It was a magnificent ending to a satisfactory series of services and meetings: 300 boys as keen as could be, and their cheers after the meeting were such as could not be n.

most of his time in England was taken with seeing various people, packing and making arrangements about matters connected with the Diocese; and on November 16th the Bishop left London for Liverpool, calling at towns on the way to see relations of people in the Diocese. He left Liverpool on the White Star liner, the "Ceramic," on November 18th, and acted as chaplain to the ship on the voyage. He was able to have a celebration of Holy Communion every Sunday and Saints Day on the voyage out except on one of the Saints Days in Christmas week. On Christmas Day—which was spent at sea—there were two celebrations and thirty communicants. Besides these services there was morning service every Sunday, Sunday School for the children on Sunday afternoon. The Bishop prepared one of the passengers for Confirmation, and confirmed her in Christ Church, Sydney, after the arrival of the ship at her final port. Two days were spent at Capetown on the way out, and that was the only port of call between Liverpool and Albany. The Bishop arrived in Melbourne on December 31st, and the ship remained in port till January 8th. On Sunday, January 2nd, the Bishop celebrated at S. Peter's, Eastern Hill, at the early service; preached at Christ Church, Brunswick, in the morning; and at S. John's, Latrobe Street, in the evening. As it was necessary for him to assist at the Consecration of the Bishop of Rockhampton on the Festival of S. Matthias (February 24th), in Brisbane, and there were matters connected with the Diocese to be seen to in Melbourne and Sydney, the Bishop decided not to come home till after the consecration, especially as he had heard from the Administrator that there were no matters of immediate importance for which he was required in Thursday Island. In Sydney the Bishop took a Confirmation at Campbelltown, and preached on Sunday morning, January 16th, at Christ Church. During the time he was in Sydney he took charge of the Christ Church parish for a fortnight to enable the Rector and his family to get away to the seaside for a change. On Saturday, January 29th, the Bishop left Sydney for Byron Bay; and on Sunday, February 6th, he celebrated the Holy Communion and preached at S. Paul's, Wollongbar; and preached at S. Andrew's, Lismore, in the evening. He arrived in Brisbane on February 7th; and on February 8th married Dr. F. C. Bechtel, the son of old residents of the Gulf, in S. Mary's, Kangaroo Point. While in Brisbane he preached at S. Mary's, Kangaroo Point; at S. Andrew's, South Brisbane; and at Holy Trinity, Fortitude Valley; and addressed the students of S. Francis', Nundah, in their chapel. On S. Matthias' Day he took part in and preached at the Consecration of the third Bishop of Rockhampton; and he left Brisbane for the North on Tuesday, March 1st, arriving home on Monday, March 7th.

The Bishop wishes to express his gratitude to the many friends he made in England for all their kindness to him. He hopes and believes that there are very many who will take a keen interest in the Diocese of Carpentaria, and that the Carpentarian Association in England will be able to do a great deal for the Diocese.

SUBSCRIPTIONS RECEIVED.—Miss Miller 10/-, Mrs. McLeod 2/-, Mr. P. R. Allen £1, Mrs. Dove £1; Mrs. Woodhead, Rev. W. H. MacFarlane, Rev. F. H. T. Lane, Mrs. Norgate, Mrs. G. Clarke, each 2/6.

The Consecration of the third Bishop of Rockhampton.

The Rev. P. C. T. Orick, D.D., late Dean and Tutor of Clare College, Cambridge, was consecrated to be the third Bishop of Rockhampton in the Cathedral Church of S. John, Brisbane on the Festival of S. Matthias (February 24th, 1921). The Consecrating Bishops were: The Archbishop of Brisbane, the Bishops of Rockhampton and Carpentaria, and Bishop Le Fanu (Coadjutor-Bishop of Brisbane).

There was a large congregation in the Cathedral when the service began at 10 a.m. Two processions entered the Church from the vestry, the first comprising the choristers and the Cathedral clergy; the other, clergy of the Diocese of Brisbane, the clergy of the Diocese of Rockhampton, and the Bishop-elect. The choristers took their place in the choir, the clergy in the nave, and the Bishop-elect in front of the pulpit. The second procession of the consecrating Bishops entered the sanctuary through the Holy Innocents' Chapel during the singing of the hymn, "Holy, Holy, Holy." The Archbishop began the Communion Service, the epistoler being the Bishop of Carpentaria, the gospeller the Bishop of North Queensland. For the sermon—which the Bishop of Carpentaria was the preacher—the Archbishop and the Bishops occupied seats in front of the pulpit, returning to the sanctuary when the sermon was ended. The Bishop of North Queensland and the Bishop of Rockhampton presented the Bishop-elect to the Archbishop, who was seated in his chair in front of the altar, and when the official documents had been read, and the oaths of allegiance and obedience taken, Minor-Canon Simmons said the Litany, the Archbishop kneeling at his chair, the assistant Bishops to the east, and the Bishop-elect to the west of the Archbishop, at the sanctuary step. Then followed the examination, at which the Bishop-elect made the answers in a clear voice. The Bishop-elect then put on his cope, assisted by the Archdeacon of Rockhampton, the Administrator of the Diocese who acted as his chaplain. At the singing of the Veni Creator, which was very solemn indeed, the Archbishop and assistant Bishops stood in a semicircle around the Bishop-elect, who was kneeling in front of the Archbishop, and at the Act of Consecration the Archbishop and the three assistant Bishops laid their hands upon the head of the elected Bishop, while the Archbishop said the words of Consecration. After the delivering of the Bible to the new Bishop, the Archbishop proceeded with the Communion Service, the assistant Bishops having returned to their places within the sanctuary, and the newly consecrated Bishop with Bishop Le Fanu to seats in the sanctuary. After the blessing the Bishops returned to the vestry, the Archbishop having the newly consecrated Bishop on his right in the procession.

The service was beautifully rendered, and the congregation very reverent. The Cathedral lends itself well with its spacious choir and sanctuary to such a service; everything can be done decently and in order. The Coadjutor-Bishop of Brisbane and the Sub-Dean had carefully planned the details of the service beforehand, everyone knew exactly what was to be done, there was not a hitch, and there was an absence of anything in the way of fuss. The grouping at the singing of the Veni Creator and at the time of the consecration was very impressive. All such things are very helpful to the congregation, and add to the sense of reverence and solemnity.

The third Bishop of Rockhampton, the Right Reverend Philip Charles Thurlow Crick, was educated at Winchester, whence he proceeded to Pembroke College, Cambridge, as a scholar. He took a double first at the University in the Classical Tripos in 1904 and in the Theological Tripos in 1906. He was ordained Deacon in 1906 and Priest in 1907 by the Bishop of Wakefield. He was Curate of S. Mary's, Barnsley, for a year, when he returned to Cambridge, where he was Fellow and Dean of Clare College. After the war broke out Mr. Crick went to the Front as Chaplain, and he had a valuable experience at the Front for four and a-half years. During that time he came into contact with Australian soldiers. He was for a time attached to one of the Tanks Corps. He acted for some years as Examining Chaplain to the Archbishop of York. The new Bishop is a tall athletic man well over six feet in height, and broad in proportion.

On the afternoon of S. Matthias' Day a number of the Brisbane Clergy, with their wives and many of the Church workers in Brisbane, accepted the invitation of the Archbishop to meet the Bishop-Designate of Rockhampton and Miss Crick at Bishopsbourne.

Miss Crick, the sister of the Bishop of Rockhampton, who has come with her brother to make her home in Australia, was one of the "Wrens." She had a very large experience of war work.

The Archbishop of Brisbane and the Bishop of North Queensland were present at the enthronement of the third Bishop of Rockhampton in his Cathedral, Rockhampton, on Sunday, February 27th. The Archbishop was the preacher at the morning service, the Bishop of Rockhampton at the evening service.

The Rev. C. W. Light, Rector of Darwin, was married to Mrs. Hill in the Cathedral, Thursday Island, by the Sub-Dean on January 18th, 1921. Mrs. Hill came up from Brisbane by the "Kanowna," and Mr. Light came across from Darwin by the "Montoro." The bride and bridegroom spent their honeymoon in the Straits as the guests of Mrs. Luscombe at Moa and Mrs. Done at Mabuiag. Unfortunately Mrs. Light went down with dengue a couple of days after she arrived at Mabuiag, and as travelling on the "Herald" is not the most comfortable experience for those who are not good sailors, especially in the north-west season, the choice of the place for a honeymoon was not ideal. However, we doubt not that both Mr. and Mrs. Light are glad to have had some knowledge of the Torres Straits Islands before they went on to Darwin by the "Montoro" on February 11th.

The Rev. A. R. Ebbs, who has been Vicar of S. Andrew's, Lismore, for some time, has been appointed General Organising Secretary for Australia of the Church of England Men's Society. Mr Ebbs is very energetic, and it is to be hoped that he will be able to galvanise the society into vigorous life. There is a very great deal of work for the Church waiting to be done by laymen, and it cannot be said that they have been as eager to shoulder their responsibilities and to recognise their duties as they should have done in times gone by. There are a few notable exceptions in every parish and diocese, but laymen as a rule have been very lax.

S. Martin's Hospital, which is the war memorial of the Diocese of Brisbane, but in which the whole of Queensland has an interest, is making progress. The whole of the foundations are down, and the walls are beginning to rise above ground. The building and the furnishing will cost something like £80,000, and Southern Queensland has responded well to the appeal of the Archbishop. No doubt there are many in other parts of Queensland who would like to have a share in what is the best form of memorial to those who died in the war, and in the thank-offering for all the self-sacrifice that was made. Many from all parts of Queensland will make use of the hospital; some from the Far North we have heard of who have used the Pymont Hospital—which is the Church Hospital in Brisbane, and in a sense the mother of S. Martin's, as the new hospital is to take the place of the old one—larger and more efficient. Those who feel they ought to make this memorial a worthy one should send their contributions to the Registrar, Church House, Ann Street, Brisbane.

The ladies connected with S. Martin's League in Brisbane have started a Tea and Luncheon Rooms in Queen Street with the object of raising money towards the furnishing of S. Martin's Hospital. The ladies give their services and others provide much of the food, so it is not surprising to hear that there is a profit of about £100 a month, which will be a substantial help towards furnishing the Hospital.

The Missions.

The Bishop of New Guinea has had a bad experience of strikes and of the way they interfere with travelling; three times running he has been held up by them, the last time being when he returned from the Lambeth Conference to Australia, to find ships laid up by the stewards' strike. He was kept waiting in Sydney for about six weeks before he could get a boat to New Guinea. Can one wonder he thinks it is well to be out of civilisation! He declared he would not come back to Australia for years.

Mr. and Mrs. Tomlinson returned from England, where they had been on furlough, with the Bishop of New Guinea in December, and went on to New Guinea by the "Morinda" about the end of January. Miss Monypenny, who is to be the school teacher at Mukawa, went to New Guinea by the same boat. Mr. Tomlinson was kept busy in England revising the proofs of the Bible he has translated into Mukawan.

The Rev. Percy Shaw, who has been in charge of Dogura and of S. Aidan's Training College for some years, has to leave the Mission as Mrs. Shaw is not allowed to live in the tropics again. Mr. Shaw has been on the staff of the Mission for over twenty years.

Aidan Uwedo was to be ordained Priest at the Lenten Ember Season, and the Bishop was very anxious to be back that the ordination should not be postponed. Aidan is the second Papuan Christian to be ordained to the priesthood. There are five other Papuans in Deacon's Orders.

Peter Sukoko, who was ordained Deacon last year by the Bishop of Melanesia, was working for some years on the staff of the New Guinea Mission. Peter is an old S. Barnabas' boy at Norfolk Island. He returned home from there and came to Queensland to work in the sugar plantations. Then he answered the call of Bishop Stone-Wigg for helpers in New Guinea, and after working there for some years went back to the Solomons.

A priest with his wife has been accepted for Dogura to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Mr. Shaw; and another has been accepted for Port Moresby, which has been vacant since Mr. Leck resigned more than a year ago.

So far as can be judged the Australian Board of Missions will receive a little more than £15,000 towards the £30,000 appealed for as a thank-offering for victory and peace.

Clement Qaitavora, of Menapi, was a boarder at the Dogura School thirty years ago. There he was baptized and confirmed, and later on he returned to his home. Clement has done a great deal to help the priest at Menapi; taking such services as a layman can take, and that as a voluntary lay reader. The Rev. John Hunt, the priest at Menapi, says, "The Christians at Wakakanaki may be looked upon as Clement's children in Christ. For three years, Sunday by Sunday, he held services and classes for them; rarely did he miss." Would that white Christians were as eager to get others to share with them in their privileges and blessings.

Deaconness Hatton, who has been doing Church work for many years in Melbourne, has arrived in Thursday Island, and will work in the Cathedral parish under the direction of the Sub-Dean. There is a great deal of work, especially amongst the women and girls of the various alien races in Thursday Island, which it has not been possible to do with any thoroughness without one who can devote time to it. We are looking forward with great hopes for much good from the work and influence of Deaconness Hatton.

The Carpenterian

FOR THE DIOCESE OF CARPENTARIA.
NORTH AUSTRALIA.

Vol. XXI., No. 82. Thursday Island, April 1, 1921

Sermon

Preached at the Consecration of
The Right Rev. P. E. T. CRICK, D.D.
Clare College, Cambridge,

as Third Bishop of Rockhampton
by The Right Rev. the Bishop of Carpentaria, in S. John's Cathedral, Brisbane, on the Festival of S. Matthias, Feb. 24, 1921.

"Ye have not chosen Me, but I have chosen you."
S. John xv. 16.

"As My Father hath sent Me, so send I you."
S. John xx. 21.

The ministry of the Church is of those who receive power and authority from God Himself to act as His ambassadors, as stewards of the mysteries of God, and for those who exercise that ministry there is needed an inward call and an outward commission.

The sense of inward call can only be known fully by him to whom it comes, others may recognise signs of vocation, and all who are responsible for the education of the young are bound to foster vocation where it is evident, to see to it that there is nothing to hinder, to stifle vocation when it comes. It is the duty of the Church, and that means of all Christians, to arrange that there is every opportunity provided for those who are called of God to the special work of the ministry to answer the call, to fulfill the purpose God has for them in the world, that the very best education in its widest sense, that the best professional training be provided, that they who are called may be the most efficient and effective agents through whom God chooses to work. It is true that vocation needs testing, it is also true let us remember that vocation needs nursing. If only we all really mean what we say, if words express realities, then vocation means a call from God, and the call from Him must be obeyed. I appeal then to-day to the whole Church to make our Theological College as efficient as possible. No one who is called of God should be prevented by lack of means from answering the call; if such happens we are opposing the will and purpose of God. I stress this matter because a Bishop is the chief pastor in that part of the Church which is committed to him. On him rests the responsibility of providing for the spiritual nurture of his people. Feed My sheep, feed My lambs, lays a special obligation on him, and from the nature of the case he can only do this duty through the priests and deacons who under his authority minister to the spiritual needs of his people. We are grateful for all that has been done for us by our Mother Church in England, in sending us men trained by her—she has been our nursing mother, indeed, they have been our fathers; but the time has come—the growth of the Church in Australia demands that we shall provide largely for our own needs, and also become a more and more effective Missionary force in the world. God forbid that we should ever undervalue the great blessing that must come to the whole Church by the interchange of men. We can never shut up the various races within the Catholic Church into water-tight compartments, to do so would be to forfeit our claim to our name. There must be interchange to give true Catholicity to our outlook, that we may share in the fullness of the treasures; but we need a ministry largely recruited from our own people, able to understand the peculiar conditions of our life, to interpret and mould the aspirations of our people, that we may contribute our share to the glory of the whole Church; and it must be a ministry fully trained with the best of education and in the fullness of the teaching and discipline of the Catholic Church. That means parents and parish priests must watch for and nurture vocation. Churchmen provide the means for efficient training.

But besides the inward call, there must be the outward commission, and the commission, the authority, comes from God. It is authority delegated from heaven. So long as we live our life on earth where the body is the vehicle and agent through which normally the spirit works, we are tied to what is called the Sacramental Principle. Authority to act for Christ in the Church, and the grace needed is given by the laying on of hands with prayer, and from the first days of the Church till now this laying on of hands has been the special function of the Bishops. Episcopacy is one of the marks of the Orthodox Catholic Church. There may be different theories as to its meaning, but when one reads the history of the Church in the New Testament and in succeeding ages, one cannot surely but feel that the episcopate is a fact. We do not expect to find in the New Testament a complete history of the Church in Apostolic days. Rather we find there cameos, illustrating principles of teaching and order and discipline. There we have our Lord's own teaching that authority comes from the Father to Him, and from Him to the Church. We are surely right in claiming that S. Timothy at Ephesus, and S. Titus at Crete, act on authority received through S. Paul, the same authority which he as an Apostle received from our Lord, and even if it is true that for a short period the stream runs underground we can fairly claim that the stream which reappears in the Church of S. Ignatius is the same stream we find in the Apostolic days, and the very early and widespread organization of the Church on Episcopal lines is surely sufficient to assure us that such organization comes from the Apostles and is the will and purpose of our Lord Himself. The Episcopate is a fact of Church history, not a theory, a fact that held the field undisputed for 1,500 years, accepted by heretics and schismatics equally with orthodox Catholics, and whatever theories we may hold to explain the fact to account for it, a fact it remains.

I do not want to speak of the value of Episcopacy as the centre of unity, or as the guardian of the faith and discipline of the Church. The usefulness of it may indeed be an argument as far as it goes of Divine origin, or a reason for its retention, though we want to get to principles and can be confident that if our principles are sound the results will be useful. There is too much tendency to be concerned with results of principles rather than with principles themselves. We still suffer from a utilitarian view—a material standard of values in religion.

But I do want this morning to emphasize what is the great value of the outward part of all sacraments—that it is a pledge. Episcopal ordination is a guarantee with many centuries of proof behind it for those who are ordained and for the laity, a guarantee that the Bishops, Priests and Deacons are acting in their official capacity with a real delegated authority from God. We dare not act as we are called upon to act if we did not feel assured that we represent Divine powers; the responsibility that rests upon us is too great for us to act on anything less. "It seemed good to the Holy Ghost and to us," so wrote the Apostles after the first Council in Jerusalem. We must feel assured that we have received the Holy Ghost for the office and work of a Bishop, Priest or Deacon in the Church of God, and we humbly thank God that we have that assurance.

And the laity have a right to a guarantee that what they receive of teaching and of sacramental blessing is that which comes from God, that the ministers are acting not on their own or on any earthly authority when they minister to the needs of the laity. What Christ has won for all, what Christ gives to His people, those people have a right to claim comes to them with a guarantee. And we do need such assurance, and ought we not to thank our Lord that we can believe that of His love, of His knowledge of the needs of our nature, He has given us an assurance that what He has provided we do receive from Him. I do not think that this aspect of the question receives the consideration it should receive. It is not really—though Bishops are so human that it sometimes seems so—it is not really for the position of the clergy and their rights so much as for the rights of the laity that we are bound to be true to what has been entrusted to the Church.

But while we hold, and are bound to hold, faithfully to Episcopacy as of Apostolic, and therefore of Divine institution, as the means whereby there has been assured to the Church the participation in all that Christ has won and done and does, we do not for one moment deny that God does work, and has worked in other ways; that the Holy Spirit has been and is blessing the work of those not Episcopally ordained. We thank God, humbly and penitently, we thank God for it all. God is not tied to His ordinances—but let us remember we are tied to them; and, may I say it with reverence and without offence, does it not seem that we who humbly love our God have no right to put a strain and stress on the love of God. His love will go far beyond even His promises, but on our part, is it not more filial to work in harmony with the will and purpose of God—with His methods—rather than in other ways? We are bound to confess that it has been, to a very large extent, due to the sins of Bishops in times gone by; their pride, their ambition, their worldly outlook, their want of spirituality, that separation from Church order has come about. One of the most striking notes in the Lambeth Appeal to all Christians is that note of real penitence. If one could only reproduce the atmosphere of the Conference, the appeal would have the greater force. That appeal is, of course, open to criticism and discussion—to be amended, accepted, or it may be, rejected; but at least let it be discussed and criticised, prayed over, with something of that spirit of penitence and of love for our Lord, so real that, at all costs of the sacrifice of pride, passion and prejudice, it desires above all to help forward the carrying out of His Will. It is just that spirit of penitence that is needed in every department of life in these days; the spirit which honestly confesses both we and our fathers have sinned, which does not seek out the sins of others but our own, that would do more than anything else to bring peace to a distracted world—social, industrial, political, as well as ecclesiastical.

And now, my brother, you are here to-day to receive the Holy Ghost for the office and work of a Bishop in the way He has come in unbroken succession from the Apostles themselves. He will most assuredly come to you to-day that you may be enabled to fulfil the purpose for which God has chosen you as the third Bishop of Rockhampton. You know in your heart He has chosen you. Little more than three months ago you had no idea this call would come. There had been stirrings in your heart, moved it may be by your four and a-half year's experience with the soldiers as one their chaplains—stirrings prompting you, a voice calling you to something wider than your college work in Cambridge, important as that was. But it was all indeterminate till there came this call from God to something definite, and to-day you receive the commission and the grace to authorize and enable you to do that for which you have been chosen.

We need in this land where our furthest past is so recent, reinforcements from the older Church from time to time. There are problems in the Australian Church that need the light of learning and the touch with the past, if they are to be solved on Catholic lines. You come to us with the learning, tradition and training of one of the oldest Universities in England. You stand in touch with the historic past—in touch with the future of a new people emerging into nationhood. You come to us with the practical experience of life amongst men who showed themselves ready to die at the call of duty. All this has been part of the training for the work for which God has chosen you.

You will, of course, find heavy responsibilities and anxious times, not least in the responsibility and anxiety of ministering to the scattered people who have gone out far from civilisation to subdue the earth for God and man. How heavily that responsibility weighed on your predecessor we all know, and his example of self-denial is, and will be, an inspiration to all of us. But just because Christ has chosen you for this work, just because you receive the Holy Spirit to-day for that work, you will go forward, hopefully and bravely, for He who chose you tells you that He has chosen you that you may bring forth fruit, and such fruit as shall remain through all eternity. His purpose never fails.

The following is the text and translation of the Latin speech delivered by the Public Orator (Dr. A. D. Godley) when he presented the Bishop of Carpentaria for the conferment of the degree of D.D. at the Convocation on November 9th, 1920:—

INSIGNISSIME UICECANCELLARI UOSQUE EGREGII PROCURATORES: USITATUM EST IN HAC UNIVERSITATE, CUIUS IN UOTIS SACROSANCTAE MATRIS ECCLESIAE PROPECTUS COMMEMORARI SOLET, EOS BENEVOLENTIAE NOSTRAE TESTIMONIO SIGNARE QUI MAIOREM ALIQUAM RERUM ECCLESIASTICARUM CURAM OBTINENT: QUOD QUIDEM HIC QUEM HODIE AD UOS DUCO PERPETUO UITAE TENORE SI QUIS ALIUS MERITUS EST. EX QUO ALUMNUS NOSTER STUDIIS INTER NOS FELICITER PERACTIS SACRIS ORDINIBUS EST INSTITUTUS, SEMPER ITA UIXIT UT CHRISTIANAE FIDEI LONGIUS PROPAGARET. ADEO NEQUE CAELI NEQUE HOMINUM INIQUITAS PROHIBERE POTERAT QUOMINUS BENEFICENTISSIMI OPERIS CAUSA PER COMPLURES ANNOS INTER PAPUENSES HABITARET: QUORUM UITAE ET MORUM CONDITIONEM ET DECENDO EMOLLUIT ET SCRIBENDO NOTIOREM FECIT. IBI SPECTATA IAM ET COGNITA INDUSTRIA AD CARPENTARIANAE DIOCESES CURAM EUOCATUS EST, QUAM ADHUC EXERCET: QUOD QUA PIETATE, QUA DILIGENTIA FACIAT SCIRE UOS ARBITROR: NEQUE MINIMI ONERII OPUS SUSCEPIT QUI DIOCESES PER TANTA MARIS ET LITORUM SPATIA LATISSIME PORRECTAE SINGULAS PARTES INSPICIERE ET NOSCERE CONATUR. QUID AUTEM MAGIS, QUID UTILIUS, QUAM UT RERUM DIUINARUM ET BENEVOLENTIAE NOSTRAE IDEM INTERPRES ET SACERRIMAS RELIGIONES STABILIT ET AUSTRALIENSES DIMIDIO ORBI DIUSIOS, ANIMIS NOBISCUM CONIUNCTOS, NOVO QUODAM UINCULO AD FONTEM ET ORIGINEM POPULI PROPIUS ADDUCAT? NUNC Igitur CUM ET MUNERIS QUO FUNGITUR MAGNITUDO ET PROPRIA UIRTUS ITA EUM COMMENDARE DEBEAT UT TALI HONORE DIGNISSIMUM ESSE UIDEATUR, PRAESENTO UOBIS UIRUM ADMODUM REUERENDUM HENRICUM NEWTON, BACCALAUREM ARTIUM, E COLLEGIO MERTONENSI, EPISCOPUM CARPENTARIANUM, UT ADMITTATUR AD GRADUM DOCTORIS IN SACRA THEOLOGIA HONORIS CAUSA.

Translation.

Venerable Mr. Vice-Chancellor, and you worthy Proctors: It has been our custom in this University, whose prosperity is regularly mentioned in the prayers of our holy mother the Church, to honour with a proof of our goodwill those who hold the higher offices in the ecclesiastical world; and no one is more worthy of it than he whom I now present unto you, if we consider the whole course of his life. From the time when, having successfully completed his course as a student amongst us, he was admitted into Holy Orders, this scholar's life has been such as to propagate extensively the doctrines of the Christian Faith. He could not be deterred either by the climate and environment or by the barbarity of the inhabitants from dwelling for many years, for the sake of the most beneficent of works, among the Papuan natives; and while by his preaching he produced an amelioration in their morals and habits of living, he added to our knowledge of them by his writings. In recognition of his work there he was called to the Bishopric of Carpentaria, the position he now holds; and I think you know with what earnestness and industry he fills it. It is no small task that he undertakes who endeavours to oversee and become familiar with every spot in a Diocese that stretches over so vast an area of sea and land; but what work could be better, what more useful indeed, than that he should be the ambassador of the sacred Gospel and at the same time of our goodwill, both establishing our holy religion and attaching the Australians, who, separated from us by half the globe, are yet one with us in soul, by this bond, too, to the home of their ancestors.

Now therefore, since his high office and personal character ought to commend him as worthy in every sense of this distinction, I present to you the Right Reverend Henry Newton, Bachelor of Arts, of Merton College, Bishop of Carpentaria, to receive the degree of Doctor in Divinity honoris causa.

The Diocesan Accounts.

In this issue of the Carpentarian will be found the audited Statement of the Accounts of the Diocese for the year 1920, and if this Statement is compared with the one published in April last year for 1919 it will be seen that the Diocese is about £100 worse off now than it was then. That means we have used up £100 of our reserves, which are not very large, in spite of the fact that we received over £200 from the Carpentarian Association in England during 1920. We can probably hope for a continuance of support to the same amount annually for the future, but we must also get help from the Australian Church. We cannot expect the Diocese of Carpentaria to raise the money that is needed for general diocesan expenses, travelling expenses of the clergy, insurance and such like expenses. We could not pay the clergy the small stipend they receive were it not for the generous help of the Walter and Eliza Hall Trust, nor could the Bishop travel about in the Diocese as he must but for the help given by this Trust. The parishes are doing all that can be expected of them towards the support of their Priests, and the Diocese does its share for Missions within the Diocese and for the General Fund of A.B.M. What we need is at least £200 a year for the expenses of the Diocese for grants and other things from the Australian Church.

It seems that the Australian Board of Missions cannot under its constitution raise funds for "white" work, Home Mission work, in Australia. It can only receive and transmit money for that purpose. That being so, one of two things must be done; either the constitution of A.B.M. must be amended so that Home Mission work as well as "Foreign" Mission work can be a part of the business of the Board, and such Dioceses as Carpentaria be helped, or we must form a Carpentarian Association in Australia. It is obviously an undesirable thing to increase organizations, so it is to be hoped that at the next General Synod the constitution of A.B.M. will be amended in this direction. We ought to be able to appeal to the whole Church in Australia for our brethren who are scattered abroad in the back blocks, and it is the Australian Board of Missions that should do this. Home Mission work and "Foreign" Mission work are not two distinct duties, but rather two sides of the same duty.

The Church exists that all people without distinction may have the opportunity of receiving what our Lord has done for all. Meantime our expenses are going on and we want all the help we can get, so will our friends please remember the Treasurer's address is:

Rev. F. W. Slade,
Bishop's House,
Thursday Island, Q.

Bawia of Badu is going to Coconut Island as teacher in the place of Aragu, whose death was mentioned in the last Carpentarian.

A large party of Missionaries for the Roper River Mission is expected from south in Thursday Island early in April. The party will leave in the "Holly." It is expected that work on Groote Island will be begun during the year. In the party will be the Rev. R. D. Joynt, who has been south on sick leave, and Mr. and Mrs. Dyer who have been on furlough.

Captain Hurley has had an interesting and successful trip in the Torres Straits getting material for his cinema lecture, which should be a very good one indeed. All who are interested in the Missionary work in the Straits should make a point of hearing the lecture and seeing the pictures. It will be the best opportunity ever given to see something of the life of the Torres Straits Islanders, as well as the work of the Mission. People who are interested in Missions need to know as much as possible of the races amongst which Missionaries are working, if their interest is to be intelligent, and the Church life of the Torres Straits Islanders bulks so large that lectures and pictures of the Torres Straits must deal with it to a large extent.

We may hope too that many who are not interested in Missions will realize for the first time what the Missionaries are doing in the Straits. Australians who live South are as a rule woefully ignorant of the conditions of life in the North.

Captain Hurley's first experience in the Straits was to find himself ashore on a reef. The "Herald" struck a reef—fortunately not very hard—on the way out from Thursday Island. Needless to say Mr. Done did not appreciate the value of the experience, but Captain Hurley seemed to think that the incident was specially staged for photographs. We are glad to hear that the damage to the "Herald" was not very great. The loss of the anchor was the most serious thing. The repairs of the "Herald" cost a little over £20.

The Archbishop of Brisbane had a wonderful reception on his return from England. The Exhibition Hall in Brisbane was packed with people who were bursting with enthusiasm, and when the Archbishop rose to speak he was received by the whole assembly rising to their feet and cheering again and again. It was a striking tribute to the affection and esteem of Brisbane people for their Archbishop.

The Coadjutor-Bishop of Brisbane and Mrs. Le Fanu were to leave Sydney on a visit to England on March 12th. It will be remembered that their visit was postponed last year owing to the illness of Mrs. Le Fanu.

The Rev. C. Hall has resigned the Parish of Normanton. He will probably return to Australia and find work in a climate more suitable for his wife and child. The Bishop has not been able to find a priest for the Gulf. One will be available at the end of this year.

A meeting of the Diocesan Council was held at Bishop's House on Wednesday, March 9th, 1921, when there were present the Bishop, the Revs. F. W. Slade, J. J. E. Done, G. A. Luscombe, Messrs. A. T. Sullivan and Geo. Clarke.

Welcome to the Bishop.

After nearly a year's absence from his Diocese, the Lord Bishop returned to Thursday Island by the steamer "Eastern" on Monday, 7th March. The next evening a large number of Church people and friends met in the Parish Institute for the purpose of welcoming his Lordship home again. The Rev. F. W. Slade, Sub-Dean and Administrator, together with the Cathedral Churchwardens, voiced the opinion of all present when they expressed their pleasure at the Bishop's return. Reference was made to the new honours conferred on him by the Oxford University, and Mr. Slade gave a translation of the speech of Public Orator, given on the occasion of the reception of the degree.

The Bishop, in reply, explained that although away for so long he had been only about five months in England, the rest of the time being occupied in travelling. He had addressed something like eighty meetings, and had found that facilities for cross-country travel in England were far from convenient, in fact, it was almost easier to get about in the wilds of the Never Never than to go, say, from Hastings to Winchester. For cross-country travelling apparently the simplest plan seems to be, "go to London." He was able to take a short trip to the battlefields of the Western front, over which the spirit of those who so nobly fought and died still breathes.

He gave a most interesting account of the doings of the Lambeth Conference, tremendously important as it was, from the importance of the subjects discussed, the wide area from which the delegates came—the whole world—and the various nationalities of the Bishops. His address was interspersed with a few humorous incidents, but he emphasised the wonderful unanimity of the gathering, the spiritual uplift of the Conference services, and the marvellous powers of the Chairman, His Grace the Archbishop of Canterbury.

The Bishop's address was followed by a few songs and recitations, after which the refreshments provided by the ladies were agreeably disposed of.

New Church Window.

Our Cathedral has been further beautified by a second stained-glass window in the clerestory, which was dedicated on February 6th at the ten o'clock Eucharist. This window, like the other one in the clerestory, was painted in Queensland, and the artist has again been successful, the choice of colours being very rich and pleasing. All the seven windows painted in England for our Church are good, and several of them are of unusual merit, but none are better than the two Australian ones, much care having been exercised in the choice of an artist in this difficult art. The small size of these clerestory windows makes the painting of them the more difficult, as does the brilliant light of the tropics; indeed, it is not possible to paint a window which looks its best at every hour of the day; the new window looks best in the morning, those on the other side of the Church in the afternoon.

The subject is the Annunciation—the first in a series which may ultimately fill this series of windows—and the work has been adapted from Burne Jones' famous picture of the subject. The reference is to S. Luke i. 26-38.

The window, together with a brass mural tablet to be erected, bearing the inscription, is a monument to our very good friend Mrs. Newton, and all parishioners will be glad to have this memorial of her in the Church. Such a distinction may be claimed in honour of the memory of any communicant, but is particularly appropriate in this case, on account of the many years of faithful service loyally rendered by Mrs. Newton to the Church.

Glennie Memorial School, Church of England School for Girls TOOWOOMBA.

PRINCIPAL - - - MISS LAWRENCE

(Assisted by a highly qualified Resident Staff).

The School is under the direction of
His Grace the Archbishop of Brisbane, and Council.

Thorough Education. Pupils prepared for University Examinations.

MUSIC AND LANGUAGE SPECIALITIES.

Pupils prepared for the Examinations of the Associated Board R.A.M., R.C.M.

The New Building, situated over 2000 feet above sea level in twelve acres of ground, has been constructed according to the most approved modern ideas. There is accommodation for fifty (50) boarders, and all the rooms are light and excellently ventilated. The health and comfort of pupils is specially studied.

F. W. SLADE, Hon. Diocesan Secretary.

1921.

Diocese of Carpentaria.

Bishop :

RT. REV. HENRY NEWTON, D.D.
Thursday Island, Queensland.

Administrator :

REV. F. W. SLADE, B.A.

Sub-Dean :

REV. F. W. SLADE, B.A.

Diocesan Secretary :

REV. F. W. SLADE, B.A., Thursday Island.

Commissaries :

REV. FRED. PONSONBY, M.A., The Rectory, Devonport, England.
REV. J. JONES, M.A., 242 Pitt Street, Sydney.
REV. W. P. GLOVER, Th.L., Warwick, Q.
REV. J. W. ASHTON, M.A., St. Kilda, Melbourne, V.
REV. C. R. MIRRELES, Springhill, Maesmore, Gloucester, England.

Clergy :

REV. B. S. COLE, Cooktown.
REV. C. W. LIGHT, Darwin.
REV. F. W. SLADE, B.A., Thursday Island.
REV. E. TAFFS, B.A., Mossman.

Honorary Lay Readers :

MR. H. F. L. FINNISS, Darwin
MR. D. A. ROBERTS, Darwin.

Diocesan Council :

REV. F. W. SLADE, B.A. | MR. GEO. CLARK.
REV. J. J. E. DONE. | MR. GILSON FOXTON.
REV. G. A. LUSCOMBE. | MR. A. SULLIVAN.

Honorary Legal Adviser :

HIS HONOUR JUDGE MACNAUGHTON.

Aboriginal Mission, Mitchell River :

MR. J. W. CHAPMAN. | MISS CRUTCH.
REV. H. MATTHEWS, J.P. | MRS. MATTHEWS.
(Supt.) | MISS F. SMITH.
J. Geibo, T. Solomon, J. Savo.

Roper River Mission :

MR. DYER. | MISS CROSS.
REV. R. D. JOYNT. | MRS. DYER.
REV. H. E. D. WARREN
(Supt.)

Torres Straits Mission :

REV. J. J. E. DONE. | *REV. JOSEPH LUI.
REV. G. A. LUSCOMBE. | *REV. POEY PASSI.
REV. W. H. MACFARLANE, | MRS. LUSCOMBE.
(Th.L.) | †HARRY CAPTAIN.
†BANNI.
* Native Deacons.
†Native Teacher. ‡Native Lay Missionary.

The Diocese.

The See was founded in 1900, and consists of such part of Queensland as is bounded by the sea on the north and east, by the Northern Territory on the west, and by a line drawn from lat. S. 19deg. 30min. on the western boundary of Queensland due east to par. 144deg. E. and thence N. to lat. S. 16deg. 40min. and thence east to the sea, together with the whole of the Northern Territory, comprising an area of not less than 620,000 square miles. The population, which is very widely scattered over this immense area, consists of about 10,000 whites, 5,000 Japanese, Chinese, and other aliens, and 35,000 aboriginals. The white population is mainly mining and pastoral. The See town is Thursday Island, a pearling centre north of Cape York.

Finance.

The Diocese has no endowments beyond the Bishop's income of £395 per annum. Every parish needs a grant from central funds which come from subscriptions to the Diocese, and grants from English Societies.

Missions.

Missions are carried on amongst the Japanese at Thursday Island; the South Sea Islanders; the aboriginals on the Mitchell and Roper Rivers; and among the Islanders of the Torres Straits.

Special Offertories.

On Easter Day the offertories are given to the Clergyman of the Parish, and on Good Friday to the Australian Board of Missions.

The "Church Standard."

Posted to any Address for 6s. 6d. per Annum.

The CHURCH STANDARD holds the unique position of being the only independent weekly paper published in the interests of the Church of England in Australasia.

Published every Friday Morning.

Appeals to all Members of the Church of England, Members of the C.E.M.S., Churchwardens, Sidesmen and Parochial Councillors, Sunday School Teachers, Lay Readers, Catechists, and Clergy.

Specimen Copies on application to

THE CHURCH PUBLISHING CO. LTD.,

ROYAL INSURANCE BUILDINGS, 16 SPRING STREET, SYDNEY.

St. Margaret's, Brisbane.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND HIGH SCHOOL FOR GIRLS

Under the management of the Sisters of the Society of the Sacred Advent

Pupils prepared for examinations of the University of Queensland, Public Service and Associated Board R.A.

There are two Boarding Houses beautifully situated in extensive grounds overlooking the Brisbane River

BOARDERS RECEIVED FROM THE AGE OF EIGHT

FOR PROSPECTUS APPLY SISTER-IN-CHARGE

St. Catharine's, Stanthorpe.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND HIGH SCHOOL FOR GIRLS

Under the management of the Sisters of the Society of the Sacred Advent

Pupils prepared for examinations of the University of Queensland, and Associated Board R.A.

Additional House secured

Increased Accommodation for Boarders

FOR PROSPECTUS APPLY SISTER-IN-CHARGE

Church of England Girls' Schools

UNDER THE MANAGEMENT OF THE
SISTERS OF THE SACRED ADVENT.

S. ANNE'S, TOWNSVILLE, Quarterly Fees for Boarders £10 10s.

S. MARY'S, HERBERTON, " " " " £15 15s.

Pupils prepared for Queensland University and Associated Board R.A. Examinations.
Commercial Subjects taught. Open-air sleeping accommodation if required.

In connection with S. Mary's, Herberton, there is a separate House for Boys under nine years of age. Quarterly Fees, £12 10s.

INTERCESSION PAPER

April, May, June, 1921.

THANKSGIVINGS.

Let us give thanks :

1. For the safe return of the Bishop.
2. For the faithful work of Joseph Lui and Poey Passi, native deacons.
3. For the consecration of the third Bishop of Rockhampton.
4. For the safe arrival of Deaconness Hatton at Thursday Island.

INTERCESSIONS.

Let us pray :

1. For the blessing of the Holy Spirit upon the work of the Bishop of Rockhampton.
2. For the guidance of the Holy Spirit in the choosing of an Archbishop of Melbourne.
3. For Priests for the work in the Gulf.
4. For the work of Deaconness Hatton in Thursday Island.
5. For the people in the bush who have no shepherds.
6. For the work of the Mothers' Union, and of the Girls' Friendly Society in the diocese.

The Carpenterian

FOR THE DIOCESE OF CARPENTARIA, NORTH AUSTRALIA.

Vol. XXI.—No. 83.]

THURSDAY ISLAND, JULY 1, 1921.

PUBLISHED ON THE FIRST DAY OF EACH QUARTER.

[PRICE 2/6 A YEAR.
POST FREE.]

NOTICE.

All communications to be addressed to the Editor of The Carpenterian, Bishop's House, Thursday Island, to whom subscriptions may be sent. Subscription, 2/6 per annum, post free.

The address of the Secretary for the Carpenterian Association in England is Miss Theodora Scarth, Bearsted, Kent, England.

NOTICE TO CONTRIBUTORS.

All contributions of Parish News, etc., must reach the Editor before the last day of February, May, August, and November in each year.

The Bishop's Movements.

The Bishop left Thursday Island on Monday, March 21st, by the "Douglas Mawson" for the Gulf, accompanied by the Rev. Harold Thompson, the newly appointed Rector of Normanton. The "Douglas Mawson" has no passenger accommodation, and people can only get a passage by the kindness of the Captain. On this occasion the Captain evidently thought it a kindness to refuse a passage. The wet season was not then over, and there was no shelter on board, the awning would not keep out coal dust let alone rain. Four of the passengers who had started from Cairns had had enough by the time they got to Cooktown, and left the boat there. It required a good deal of persuasion to override the Captain's objections, but at last he gave way. The trip was really not so uncomfortable, and nothing could exceed the kindness of those on board. The Bishop was in Normanton for Easter Day and Low Sunday, going on to Croydon with Mr. Thompson on Tuesday, April 5th. He returned to Normanton on Tuesday, April 12th, and caught the "Douglas Mawson" for Thursday Island on the following Thursday, travelling via the Albert River, but there was no opportunity of getting to Burketown. The Bishop intended travelling overland to the Mitchell River Mission from Normanton, but late rains had made the country impassable, it was all water and bog, and the rivers and creeks a swim. He did not like to wire for the Francis Pritt to meet him at Normanton—she was in Thursday Island at the time for stores—as that would have meant the Mission people waiting an extra week at least, and the time of the year when stores are usually exhausted. He arrived at Thursday Island on April 20th, and remained there till May 4th, when he left for the Mitchell River Mission, returning to Thursday Island on May 1st. He took charge of the Cathedral parish for four days, including Sunday, May 25th, to allow the subdean to get away for a little range, and he left by the "Douglas Mawson" on June 2nd, for Cooktown, arrived there on the following Sunday in time for Evensong, when he was the preacher. On June 7th, he confirmed 8 candidates at Cooktown.

General and Provincial Synods.

Both General and Provincial Synods meet this year. Provincial Synod will meet in Townsville in September and General Synod in October in Sydney. There will be some matters of first rate importance at the Synod meetings and the prayers of the faithful are asked that those who are responsible for the arrangements, and also those who take part in the deliberations may be guided by the Holy Spirit in all things. The Bishop hopes to be present at both Synods.

St. Peter's, Normanton.

The Bishop arrived in Normanton on Saturday, March 26th, Easter Eve, accompanied by the Rev. Harold Thompson, who had been appointed Rector of Normanton. No one in Normanton expected the Bishop, but a band of willing workers was quickly got together and during the afternoon the Church was decorated for the Easter Services. Though it was nearly twelve months since service had been held in the church, the building was beautifully clean, as some faithful people had cared for it. On Easter Day, there were two celebrations of the Holy Communion—at 6.15 a.m., when the Bishop was the celebrant and there were 13 communicants, and at 7.30 a.m., when Mr. Thompson celebrated, and there were 11 communicants. At 11 a.m. Matins was said, and the Bishop catechized the children, and at Evensong he inducted Mr. Thompson as Rector, and preached.

On March 31st, there was a good attendance at the Easter meeting, when the wardens and members of the Parochial Council were elected and the accounts showed that there was a credit balance to the Church account of over £130. The rectory had been let for some months, the rent being paid to the credit of the Church account. The people of Normanton are thankful that a Rector has been appointed.

The Bishop took Mr. Thompson round to introduce him to the people, and he left for Croydon by train on April 5th.

St. Margaret's, Croydon.

The Bishop arrived in Croydon on April 5th accompanied by the Rev. Harold Thompson, the newly appointed Rector of Normanton, and during the week he was very busy taking Mr. Thompson round to introduce him to the parishioners. The arrangements have been made for Mr. Thompson to visit Croydon once a month, coming by train from Normanton and spending a week in Croydon. The Croydon Churchwardens have undertaken to provide the Rector of Normanton with a season ticket on the railway, so that if there is need for additional visits they can be made without extra expense, also to pay his board while in Croydon and give a donation to the Normanton Church funds.

On Sunday, April 9th, Mr. Thompson celebrated the Holy Communion in St. Margaret's when there were 24 communicants, and said Matins at 11 a.m., at which service there was a good roll up of children. The Bishop celebrated the Holy Communion at 11 a.m. the same day at Golden Gate, and he preached at St. Margaret's in the evening.

The Easter meeting was held on Monday, April 11th, when the wardens and members of the Parochial Council were elected. The treasurer's report showed a small credit balance with no liabilities.

There were a number to be baptised, and one that had been baptised privately to be received into the Church.

Christ Church, Cooktown.

In spite of the fact that the population of Cooktown is still becoming smaller—families are leaving from time to time and few new residents arrive—the Churchwardens were able to present a very satisfactory report at the Easter meeting. The financial report shows a balance on the credit side of the account of £60 for the year, and there was a credit balance at the end of the previous year. There were entertainments during the year, but as a matter of fact the freewill offerings of the people were more than sufficient for current expenses. The stipend of the Rector has been raised to £240 a year. The Rector has been able to do some country visiting, getting to the Ross River Tin Mines, and other places. Cooktown people have hopes of a revival of commercial prosperity—they have waited patiently for it for many years. The Bishop visited the parish early in June and confirmed 8 candidates on Tuesday night, June 7th.

Christ Church, Darwin.

During the last three months there has been a distinct awakening in Parish life, which is a cause of much thankfulness to God. The congregations have grown considerably, the Sunday school has increased in numbers, the number of communions made at Easter was larger than it has been for some years, and the choir has really come to stay this time, after several futile efforts to exist. To crown all, the awakening is being shown by the willingness with which candidates have come forward for Confirmation instruction, there being a record number of 21 confirmation candidates awaiting the Bishop's visit, of whom 8 are also candidates for Holy Baptism.

The services on Good Friday were well attended considering the fact that we had seven inches of rain between the morning and evening services. Easter Day was most uplifting, at the 10 o'clock celebration of the Holy Eucharist the choir sang Woodward's setting of the Holy Communion with great effect, and the Evening service was a really Festal Evensong. At the Memorial Services for Anzac Day, the soldiers were remembered in a fitting way, very large congregations gathering in the Church to remember that solemn anniversary before God.

The Easter meeting was held at the Rectory on April 11th. About 70 parishioners were present. The balance sheet showed that the church was free of debt, nearly £240 having been raised by a sale of work to clear the debt on the Rectory. The reports, however, all stressed the need for better attendance at the Holy Communion service, and the necessity of holding the ground which has been gained.

It is much to be hoped that this newness of life may grow and manifest itself in other directions. A little leaven leaveneth the whole lump, and Darwin as much as any place needs the leaven of a strong Christian society within it.

The Church wardens of every parish in the diocese of Carpentaria have decided to increase the stipend of the Rector, and so, in spite of the depression from which the North suffers, perhaps more than other parts of Australia, the Church people are trying to do their duty to the parish priests. The Church wardens, of course can only deal with money contributed by Church people. They have no magic with which to obtain wealth; so the fact that they are able to increase the stipends, shows that Church people in general are to be congratulated. With the cost of living still very high, the stipends are not even yet sufficient; but the Rectors are grateful, not so much for the easing of financial strain which they do appreciate, as for the evidence of interest in the work of the Church.

Archdeacon and Mrs. Nash have left for England. It is a good many years now since Mr. and Mrs. Nash came out from England to work in Thursday Island, where they are remembered with affection. For over four years Mr. and Mrs. Nash have been in the diocese of Willochra, of which diocese the Archdeacon was Administrator during the absence of the bishop in England last year. Mrs. Nash has done a great work for the Mother's Union in South Australia.

Personal.

The Rev. Harold Thompson, lately Rector of Roebourne, in the diocese of North West Australia, has been appointed Rector of Normanston. He will visit Croydon once a month, spending a week in that centre.

Mr. Thompson had just finished a holiday spent in the Malay States, where he was acting as Chaplain for some months, when he was offered and accepted the parish of Normanston. He stayed over at Thursday Island on his way South, hoping to see something of the work of the Torres Straits Mission. Unfortunately he just missed the Herald, and was not able to get to the Islands before he left for Normanston with the Bishop.

Miss E. Taffs, the younger daughter of the Rev. E. Taffs, rector of Mossman, was married to Mr. J. R. Dick, on Wednesday, April 13th, at St. David's, Mossman. Mr. and Mrs. Dick went South for their honeymoon, and are to live at Rossall Island, where Mr. Dick has a position as manager of a Plantation. Rossall Island is about 200 miles to the South East of Samarai. Mr. Dick is a returned soldier; he gained the military medal for bravery in the field.

SUBSCRIPTIONS TO "THE CARPENTARIAN."—Miss Miller, 10/-; P. R. Allen, Mrs Dove, each 20/-; Mrs McLeod, Mrs Woodhead, Rev. F. H. T. Lane, Rev. W. H. MacFarlane, Mrs Norgate, Mrs G. Clarke, Deaconess Hatton, Mr Toulasik, Mrs H. G. Simpson, Mrs Ashley, Rev. H. Thompson, each 2/6.

Visit to the Mitchell River Mission.

I have never had such a happy visit to the Mitchell River Mission as the one I paid in May of this year.

Readers of the "Carpentarian" have often read of the way we travel to the Mitchell, the slow progress in a sailing vessel, the long dreary time in the river, when one depends on tides; the voracity of the mosquitoes, and so on; so I will say no more about the trip down than that we left Thursday Island on Wednesday, May 4th, and arrived at the Mission Station on Monday, May 9th, having travelled a little more than 300 miles. We had sent a boy up from the mouth of the river to the Mission Station, and Mr. Matthews was at the landing with the car within half-an-hour of the time of our getting there. So little time was lost there. That car has been a wonderful comfort, and a very great service. It was a relief to be taken up the last 12 miles quickly. Again and again have the members of the staff been grateful to the good lady in Melbourne who gave them the money to purchase it. Tons and tons of loading were taken up from the landing last year by it, with little loss of time, and with a minimum of worry. Then, last year, when Dr. Vernon visited the Mission on behalf of A.B.M. to report on the health conditions of the station, Mr. Matthews took him nearly 200 miles to Gamboola Station on the way to the railway at Mungana. There must have been some excitement for Mr. Matthews on his return journey. The car negotiated many difficult crossings with little trouble going and returning, but on the return journey benzine and lubricating oil ran short. The benzine was spun out with kerosene, and for oil Mr. Matthews substituted beef fat. At one station the manager had just killed a beast, and Mr. Matthews got the fat, rendered it down, and poured it into the breather while boiling hot just when he was ready to start, and hey presto! the car ran sweetly. The time of excitement came when he had to start again after camping for a night, more fat was boiled, and the engine warmed up with hot water, and away she started with about half a turn. Of course, whenever "oil" had to be supplied, a fire had to be lit, and more fat made to boil. Certainly a Ford car can do nearly anything! The car is getting the worse for wear, of course. She has done a good deal of work in three years, and some very rough work too; but she still goes though she needs more attention as time goes on. She was also adapted for pumping for irrigation last year. The back axle was jacked up, the belting passed round one wheel, and the driving wheel of the pump. The only inconvenience was, that it was difficult to keep the pace slow enough for the pump. That use for the car is not needed now, as the Stockton (Newcastle, N.S.W.) people have sent us a portable engine for pumping for irrigation. This is a great convenience. The steam engine of the saw mill, which was used at Trubanaman for pumping in the old days, has too much to do at its own job now, and besides it is too heavy to be dragged about from place to place. The new oil engine has been fixed on a trolley, and can easily be taken from one part of the cultivation to another.

I spent eight days on the Mission Station, leaving there on May 17th, Tuesday in Whit-Sun week, and it was a very busy time. We had a Rogation Procession—a week late, in the week after Ascension Day—from and to the Church. A path had been cleared round part of the cultivation for the procession. We assembled in the Church at 5 p.m., and after a hymn and prayers we set forth. Mr. Chapman, in cassock and surplice, was crossbearer; after him came the small girls, then the women and the women on the staff, then the small boys, the men, the choir, and male members of the staff in cassock and surplice. There were two stations in the cultivation, and one at the school for intercessions. At each a psalm was sung, hymns were sung as we went from station to station. The procession was, perhaps, somewhat straggling, but the hymns and psalms were sung well, and the responses at the intercessions well said. It was a very reverend and impressive function. When we returned to the Church, thanksgivings were said, and after that, Evensong.

Whit Sunday was a red letter day in the history of the Mission. There was a celebration at 7.30 a.m. At Mattins I baptized five adults, and in the afternoon confirmed 34 others (20 males and 14 female candidates), and Evensong was said at dusk. The candidates for baptism and confirmation had been under preparation for a long period. I catechised them on the Saturday night. Their answers, when they answered in a body, were very good. It was difficult to get answers from individuals. When a name was called out, the person's head dropped to the chest, and the voice seemed lost! but even so some mustered up courage to answer in a not very audible voice.

When all the station people had gone to bed on the Sunday night, we had compline for the staff, and the first address for a quiet day. The station was a very quiet and peaceful place on Whit Monday, when we continued our Quiet Day Services and Meditations. A celebration at 7.45 a.m. Mattins at 10. Intercessions at noon, and nones at 3.30 p.m. All the people went bush immediately after Mattins at 6.30, and did not return till about 5 p.m.

Mr. Matthews took me across to Trubanaman in the car. The old station is nearly dismantled, but Mr. and Mrs. Murphy have their home there, and the cattlework is done from there. The mangoes, the lemon and lime trees look well, and it is good to have some one living there to look after these, at least until those at Kowanyama come into bearing.

I also went in the car to where the new establishment for the children is to be, about two miles from the head station. There a large sawn timber house is in course of erection, and will be ready for occupation about the end of June. The timber was sawn at the mill, the iron for the roof comes from the old building at Trubanaman. The house is large enough to have two good sized dormitories, and two bedrooms for the staff. There are wide verandahs all round the building, on which can be the kitchen and dining-room, and school can be held on one verandah until such time as a school room can be built, and also a temporary chancel for a school chapel can be enclosed at one end. Some native buildings will be needed for the children in the day time, and for Jack Geibo and his family, who is to be in charge of the outside work, and be generally useful to Miss Smith, the Matron. Miss Crutch will live there and have her school. The plan is to keep the boys at the school till they are 13 or 14 years of age, and then draft them to the head station, to be taught there gardening and other work, and on the head station they will then have their own dormitory till they can be passed on to live with the older boys. The girls will in all probability be kept at the boarding-school till they are ready to be married, and be taught sewing, housework, and such like. This is, perhaps, the most important development of the mission work that has been made yet. It will be possible to have the children more under discipline, their school work should improve and they will be more away from the influence of the old people—especially the camp people—which tends to perpetuate superstition and evil customs. Children of various tribes growing up together will also become more of a social unit. The new establishment is close to a magnificent lagoon and above flood mark. It is intended to fence in about an acre of ground with a sawn paling fence for gardens, so that the children will have some occupation outside school and play. The soil is very good, and there will be opportunity for gardens outside the compound. Gradually Kowanyama will extend in that direction. With the car Mr. Matthews can run up to the new place in a few minutes, and there will be opportunities for intercourse so that the children will not be too much cut off from the general life of the mission.

There has been wonderful progress in the agricultural work of the mission, and the station is a very beautiful place. There are large plantations of bananas and pawpaws; it is very beautiful to see the roofs of the houses peeping out from the groves, and as the roofs are mostly of palm leaves they fit in well with the foliage. One hopes that it will not be necessary to roof all the buildings with staring galvanised iron. There are large plantations of sweet potatoes, pea-nuts, cassava, pumpkins, and kaffir corn all doing well, and promising good crops. The rice and taro are not doing so well, possibly because the irrigation scheme was not in full working order, and the ground may still be a little too sour for rice.

There are also a number of fruit trees, oranges, lemons, mandarins, and mangoes, all of which look well, and there are other things with which Mr. Chapman is experimenting. There is every prospect of the ration bill of the station being reduced, and if it has been necessary during the last two or three years to get into debt to enable the staff to get things going by having enough rations to keep the people on the station, the whole year, the result is satisfactory, and the increased cost in the past will eventuate in the reduction of the debt in the near future. Mr. Chapman is to be congratulated.

One of the most satisfactory signs of progress is the interest taken by the people in the gardens. The married men all have little gardens of their own, and some of them were able to sell some produce last year, when the "Pritt" went to Normanton, and still more important is the fact that half-a-dozen camp men asked if they might be allowed to make a garden for themselves. They had the use of mission tools, and were supplied with seed and cuttings. It is only a small plot but it is a sign of a change. All the more important as one white man has been telling the aborigines that garden work is derogatory, "they are like pigs rooting in the ground!"

The mission is solving the first and most difficult problem of mission work amongst the aborigines, and that is to convert a nomad people into a settler community growing its own food, and the change in this direction is remarkable. The old-fashioned "walk about" which meant that the station people were out bush for weeks at a time is being done away with. There is still a walk about, and there must be as one does not want the people to lose their bushcraft altogether, and there must be some change for the people, some variety in their life; but now when they go out for a week or two they come back to the mission station every night to sleep. The people are quite satisfied with this.

Then the discipline is able to be made better. It is true that there are not so many people on the Mission Station as there were. The number is now about 115; but these are the better and stronger characters, and will form a stronger influence when others are brought in, these will come to a better atmosphere. The numbers have been reduced partly by the fact of the change of the head station from Trubanaman to Kowanyama, partly by the very heavy work of the last three years in getting the new station into working order, thus making it impossible for Mr. Matthews to bring in others; partly also by the new line that has been taken up which is this—The aborigines have been told that they may of course live on the reserve; but if they want to live on the Mission Station, they must abide by the rules of the station. They are perfectly free to choose which they will do. Then those who leave have to work their way back as it were. There are half-a-dozen for instance at the present time who left the station some months ago, and now wish to come back. They have been told they must do some work, clear some ground without receiving rations from the Mission, they receive only a little tobacco every day, and if they stick to that they can come back when it is finished. Five of these men came to see me about this, and agreed to do the work. The object, of course, is to make it a privilege for the aborigines to live on the station, not a compliment to us when they do so, and it is working. It is better to work with and on a few who are in earnest, and so have a better influence on those who come. Of course the Mission is in touch, in some cases, in close touch, with the 500 aborigines on the Reserve, as is evidenced by the fact that half-a-dozen have their garden at the station, and when the new establishment for the children is in working order, Mr. Matthews hopes to get some 20 children from the reserve to add to the 36 they have on the station.

There are still difficulties with the old superstitions, and these affect the Christians. In January last 22 people left the station—several came back the next day, others amongst them some undesirables have not returned. Five are working their way back now as mentioned above. The cause was the death of two old men belonging to the camp, one of whom died in December, 1920, on the station; the other in January of this year, in the camp. At that time of the year the camp people work along the river to get the wild fruits that grow in the scrubby country on the river bank. This brings them into close touch with the station people, and it is always rather an anxious time for the missionaries. The fellow tribesmen of these two old men living on the station began to accuse another tribe of being the cause of the deaths. "They had taken the fat out of the old men and so caused their death." Probably they were being "pushed," as the aborigines say, into it by their relatives in the camps. At all events, these mission boys raided the camp; there was some spear throwing, but no one was killed. Mr. Matthews had both parties up and talked the matter over, with the result that the station boys gave the others their day's allowance of tobacco, and it was thought all was over. A night or two afterwards some of the Mission boys came to Mr. Matthews and said they were afraid to remain on the Mission, that they had better go to their own part of the reserve as the camp people intended to have revenge. Mr. Matthews told them not to be foolish, that they were safer on the station than anywhere else. However, it seems they were not satisfied, and 22 left the station that night; some to return the next day. No doubt the others will come back in time, at least as many as it is desirable to have back, and in the end the incident will do good.

The arrival of Mr. Tonkin to join the Mission staff will make it possible to do much more work with the sawmill—and there is a couple of years work ahead to supply the needs of the Station; so that permanent buildings may take the place of the temporary ones that have had to satisfy the staff up to the present, and what a relief it will be to be able to say, "that need not be done again for years." Mr. Matthews will be relieved from the work of the saw mill, which took up a great deal of his time, and he will be able to devote himself more to his work as Chaplain, and general superintendence. The real spirit of reverence, which could be felt at the Baptism and Confirmation on Whit Sunday, and again on Tuesday in Whit Sun week, when the newly-confirmed made their first Communion, shows how great has been the spiritual influence of Mr. Matthews, and it is the more wonderful when one remembers the multitudinous things to which he has had to give his mind.

The herd of cattle on the Mission Reserve has increased, and will increase more rapidly. There were, according to the books, 1387 head on the reserve at the end of 1920, and it is estimated that the brandings this year will be over 400. There seems no prospect of any sales this year. We should be glad indeed to sell the 100 fat bullocks we have at last years price, £11 a head. That price is not likely to come again; but we hope for an improvement in the market next year. A beast a week will be killed from now on for the Mission Station. We are glad to be able to give our people more meat. Of course the cattle are there for the benefit of the aborigines in one way and another.

I left the Mission Station on May 17th, with a heart very full of gratitude for all I had seen, and thankful not the least for the encouragement it all means to the members of the staff. There are some on the Mitchell River Mission Station who have battled on for many years, in spite of difficulties and disappointments, and they begin to see very definite results, justification of their faith. There will, of course, be ups and downs, but the progress is definite and real. Church people in Australia little know how much they owe to those who are working amongst the aborigines. If they did they would see to it that nothing is wanting to extend the work. There are other places in the diocese of Carpentaria alone where mission work amongst the aborigines should be begun at once. In more than one, if it is not begun soon, there will be no need for it at all, for the aborigines will have disappeared before the evils and vices introduced by other races.

Torres Straits Mission.

ACCOUNTS FOR THE YEAR ENDING DECEMBER 31, 1920.

As usual in the July issue of the "Carpentarian," we publish the accounts of the Torres Straits Mission for the previous year. We cannot afford to publish all our accounts in pamphlet form, which would be the most convenient form for those interested in our work, we have to consider expense, and so our accounts are published piecemeal in January, April and July. It will be noticed that we have increased our debt by a little more than £71, but our expenses increased—owing to the work of the new deacons—and we did not receive quite so much from the islands as we expected, though as a matter of fact some of this money was paid in after the year's accounts were closed, also we had some heavy expense in refitting the "Ortuli." Our debt has grown owing mainly to the high cost of materials and supplies for the boats, wages, and repairs. We hope that as the costs go down the debt will be reduced by degrees. It is quite impossible to reduce the expenses, they are at bedrock, if the work is to be done efficiently. The priests must have boats in which to travel, and it is the cost of the boats which is so heavy. We hope to live within our income this year and perhaps reduce the debt by a little.

The Carpentarian

FOR THE DIOCESE OF CARPENTARIA,
NORTH AUSTRALIA.

Vol. XXI., No. 83. Thursday Island, July 1, 1921

A Pilgrimage Towards Unity.

The following article by the Bishop of Western New York, will interest our readers. The Bishop of Willochra was present at Geneva as the representative of the Church in Australia.

Ten years ago a little group of Christians embraced the purpose, first conceived at an early Eucharist, of joining together in a special pilgrimage towards unity in the broken Church of Jesus Christ. It was not a man-made scheme but a humble endeavour to put ourselves in accord with the mind of our Lord expressed in His prayer, that they all may be one. From this modest beginning a world-wide movement has grown, so that at the preliminary meeting of the World Conference on Faith and Order, which has just closed at Geneva, eighty churches and forty nations were represented. This Conference marks a stage on our journey, and also exhibits the spirit of the pilgrims, some of whom, such as the Germans and the Roumanians, came at great cost to themselves.

Our journey is a long one. Christians have taken more than a thousand years to reach the far country of disunion where they now reside. We cannot return home again in a moment. Some of the pilgrims who first caught the vision a decade since had hardly hoped to get as far as they have in so brief a space of time. The temptation is to be content with slow progress, and to rest satisfied with something less than the goal of God's placing—a Church, on earth, among men, visibly and organically one. Partial unities seem more possible and federation has alluring features, but they fall far short of home. Then, too, impossibilities according to God's design are the only aim high enough for human capacity. We have allowed ourselves to take for granted the necessity of Christian disunion, blind to the fact that oneness is the first, not the last, requirement for God's firm foothold among men. The tinkling ambitions of separation are shocking in the face of a shattered, bewildered world that is looking for leadership and finding none. The performance of the churches, first and last, individually and collectively, is pitiful measured by their high sounding professions and claims. The failure of Christianity—and it has failed—is the inevitable failure of a Kingdom divided against itself. It will go on failing until it manifests unity and all the privileges and wealth which each enjoys separately are placed at the disposal of all.

The pilgrims do not maintain that theirs is the only method of travel, by the way of Conference on Faith and Order, but they do contend that theirs is the only goal and that the spirit for which conference stands is the only spirit for a pilgrim towards unity—the filial spirit which embraces God's purpose as its own and the fraternal spirit which claims each Christian as a brother beloved. Through a long stretch of time controversy has burned with fierce flame in the churches, great and small, and has blackened and scorched many a fair subject. It is not extinguished yet. The spirit of controversy rejoices in dialectic victory—what a hollow triumph it is—and gloats over a defeated foe. The spirit of conference is the slave of the Truth and weeps because gulfs remain unbridged, and good men are alienated from one another. Controversy loves war and conference loves peace. Controversy has great respect for its own convictions, and little for those of others. Conference applies the Golden Rule to the separated and demands mutual respect for each other's convictions.

For a week the pilgrims were in conference in Geneva. Differences of thought were sketched in clear outline nor did any immediate reconciliation appear on the horizon, but never was there a word of harshness or self-will. The common conviction at the centre of being, was that difficulties boldly exposed and openly met, were the only difficulties in a fair way of settlement. What appear as contradictions have, as the secret to their strength, riches of being which, when at length put into harmonious relation to the whole of God's scheme, will be revealed as supplementary elements necessary to perfection. The study of the Church as it exists in the mind of God, of what we mean by unity, of the sources of the Church's inspiration, of the best expression in language of a living faith, occupied the prayers and thoughts of the pilgrims during the Conference, and for a long time to come will continue to occupy them. Faith first and then Order. The inner principle of life, the ideal, and then the mode of propagating and protecting by organic self-government of what is within.

The competition of churches received a body blow from the united action of the pilgrims. It is a sin against love to endeavour to detach a Christian from his own church in order to aid another church to increase its roll. Sheep-stealing in the cattle world is held to be a crime. How then ought it to be viewed by the under-shepherds of the Good Shepherd? That is a question which the pilgrims ask of all the churches. It is not as though the whole world were evangelized or there were any dearth of opportunity anywhere. The number of unconverted and untouched in almost any given community form the majority of that community. A combined effort in the direction of those who know not Christ is our elementary duty.

The spirit of God was the strength of the pilgrims. He made us one in our fellowship. The Conference was a living body. Life touched life, nation touched nation, the spirit of the East held Communion with the spirit of the West as perhaps never before. By invitation on the last day of the Conference we gathered together—it was the Feast of the Transfiguration in the Eastern calendar—in the Russian Orthodox Church in Geneva for the solemn worship of the Divine Liturgy. Anglican, Baptist, Old Catholic, Presbyterian, Wesleyan, Lutheran, Quaker were all there, and all there to worship. The Metropolitan of Seleucia in a spiritual address spoke to the pilgrims of his own joy in the vision of unity, and told how, out of the transfigured troubles and pains of the present, would rise the glory of the future. We of the West need the fragrant, graceful worship of the East. The beauty of God filled his temple. We felt that we had been drawn within the pearly gates of the Apocalypse, and we came away, with pain benit and grapes in our hands, and sweetness in our souls, under the spell of the mystic East. It was fitting that we should forthwith consider certain proposals of the Orthodox Churches, sane and strong, touching on co-operation and fellowship. A few minutes later and the Conference became a fact of history, a hope and a vision.

The pilgrims go home with added inspiration, conviction and responsibility. No one departed unmoved. What another decade will bring forth in this movement who can say? But it is in the hands of God from Whom it came and to Whom it belongs. It is ours only so far as we recognise it to be His. Directly and indirectly it has already reached far. Its possibilities are measured only by our willingness to explore them. They will be realized fully if we pilgrims continue to aim to do our little share as God, Whose co-workers we are, does His great share. Some day there will be one flock under one Shepherd. We pilgrims register our active belief in this fact, and promise to pursue our journey until we reach the Heaven where we would be.

C. H. BRENT.

Chairman of the preliminary meeting of the World Conference on Faith and Order.

Geneva, Switzerland,
August 21, 1920.

Roper River Mission.

We were glad to welcome a large party of missionaries of the Church Missionary Society, who arrived in Thursday Island on April 9th, on their way to the Roper River. There were six members of the staff, amongst them the Rev. R. Joynt. Mr. and Mrs. Dyer, who had been south on furlough; Mr. and Mrs. Forbes and Mr. Perriman, new members of the Roper River Mission staff.

The party remained in Thursday Island for a fortnight, and then left for the Roper in the auxiliary ketch, "The Holly." The missionaries had a very busy time getting the boat ready for sea before they left on April 23rd, intending to call at Mapoon on the way. The last news we had of them was that they left Mapoon on April 26th.

The bishop celebrated the Holy Communion in the Cathedral, Thursday Island, with special intercessions for the work of the mission on Saturday, April 23rd, when all the missionaries communicated. This year there is to be an extension of the work of the Mission to Groote Island, and those who are responsible for this new development will need all the support we can give them. Let us at least remember them in our prayers. The C.M.S. are to be congratulated on making this forward movement of work amongst the aborigines. Church people are very slow in realizing their duty to the aboriginal inhabitants of the country of which they have taken possession.

Financial Position of the A.B.M.

The finances of the Australian Board of Missions is causing a good deal of anxiety at the present time. The year 1920 ended with a deficit of over £3,000, and there were other serious liabilities, so that the Board is asking for £40,000 this year to enable it to carry on its present work, and pay its debts. It is unthinkable that the church should withdraw from any part of her work in the Mission Field. Of course the expenses have been very heavy during the past few years with the high cost of travelling, of living, and the high rate of exchange in the East. The Board has responsibilities in China, Japan, and India, besides its work in New Guinea, the Pacific, and amongst the aborigines of Australia. The Mission work of the Church is expanding, and that means there is needed an expanding income. Let us remember that missionary work is the primary duty of the Church, that we owe all we have in the way of Christian civilization to Missionaries, who came to our forefathers with the same message we send to other races now, and above all, as our Lord's sufferings and self-sacrifice were for the salvation of mankind we ought not to shrink from self-sacrifice to carry on His work in the world, the completion of which depends on our sense of gratitude and loyalty and love for Him. Let us see to it that our own contributions are increased, and that we interest others in the cause. The Diocese of Carpentry is expected to raise £75 a year for A.B.M. It is really not much when one thinks of all we spend on ourselves. Let us see if we cannot double the amount this year. Individuals can do much, cannot Churchwardens and Parochial Councils realize the claim missions have? Nearly all, if not all, our parishes are free of debt, and some have a creditable balance in hand. Vote some of the balance to A.B.M. What a relief it is when the parish ends the year with no burden of debt. Churchwardens know the harassing anxiety that parish debts mean. Fellow feeling makes us wondrous kind, take off some of the anxiety from the minds of the executive officers of the A.B.M. It is quite a legitimate object for which to use some of your funds!

Industrial Problems.

One of the most important of the reports of the Lambeth Conference was that on the opportunity and duty of the church in regard to industrial and social problems. The key note of the Encyclical of the Conference was fellowship, and in this connection the letter says:—"The relation of men one to another in industry or trade is another fellowship which God intended to exist, and created to be good. Yet to-day we are confronted with a world-wide upheaval, and embittered antagonism in social relations, the course of which none can foresee. We seem to be involved in an internecine conflict between capital and labour in which each aims at exclusive supremacy. Any such supremacy would be inconsistent with the Christian idea of fellowship. And the church insists that, in its essential nature, industry is not a conflict, but a fellowship. Again every trade or profession ought to be producing something which men want or ought to want; and so far each is doing service to the community. But in industrial life all such service depends on combined effort. It is rendered in co-operation. The message of Christianity in this matter is to make men see that here they can and must "in love serve one another." To all concerned, employer and employed, director and workman, investor of money, and investor of brain or muscle—to all alike the Church must say: "Put first your service to the community, and your fellowship in that service. Do your work heartily, keenly, carefully, as to God, because you are benefiting His children. Have good will and expect others to have it. Rearrange your mutual relations, as men co-operating in fellowship not competing in suspicion and hostility." These are fundamental principles. Beyond them lies the whole region of practical application. In the technical side of economics, which is a science for experts the Church has no authority. But whenever in the working out of economic or of political theory, moral issues are directly involved, the Church has a duty to see that the requirements of righteousness are faced and fairly met. The Church will, for instance, maintain that fellowship is endangered if all who serve do not share equitably in the results of labour. For this is a part of Christian justice. "The Church will fearlessly claim that the human character of every worker is more sacred than his work; that his worth as a child of God and member of the fellowship must not be forgotten, or imperilled by any form of industrial slavery. For this belongs to the spirit of Christian liberty. In all such things the Church will, under the guidance of the Holy Spirit, proclaim its message of brotherhood and mutual service, founded on the Divine purpose for men, and will aid the community in giving active expression to it. But our hope throughout is in the spirit of God. In no other way, as we believe, can society recover itself than by recovering one plan of God for its well-being, and by reliance on His inspiration for realizing that plan." The vast majority of the British race, no matter to what section of the community they belong, with its instincts of liberty and fair play will agree with these words. The whole question of industrial problems needs to be studied in this spirit. A meeting was to be held at the end of June, in the Chapter House in Sydney for this purpose, and it is hoped that a movement may be started there to study the questions involved. Of course, as always, the trouble is, that while people agree in principles they are not prepared to put the principles into practice. What a fine thing it would be if, when some question came before the Industrial Court, each party would look at it from two points of view, the other side and the side of the community, and say to the judge, we agree that the claim is just and fair, and for the good of the community, and though it will reduce dividends, or restrict our privileges or mean more work or less pay, we will agree to it. What a change from wrangling over disputes, trying to score every point, and to minimise every claim. The industrial courts would get through their business more quickly, and might even find they had no business to do, no reason for their existence!

Missions.

The Bishop of New Guinea has had to return to Australia under doctors orders, after being in his diocese a few weeks. It seems the bishop hit his shin against the cover of a steam pipe on the boat by which he returned to Australia from England. Some skin trouble followed and after he arrived in New Guinea this became so troublesome that the doctor ordered him back to Australia for treatment. After being in hospital for three weeks in Brisbane, the bishop was much better; but he cannot return to New Guinea for some time. Meanwhile he is acting as locum tenens at St. Andrews, South Brisbane, to give Mr. Needham two months' holiday. No doubt the bishop is especially glad to do this, as Mr. Needham is one of the most enthusiastic workers for Missions in Australia.

The Reverend P. C. Shaw, late of the New Guinea Mission, is curate of St. Thomas', Toowong, Brisbane.

The Reverend S. R. M. Gill is administering the diocese of New Guinea during the absence of the bishop.

Mr. and Mrs. Warren, who are south on furlough, expect to return to Samarai, New Guinea, shortly. Mr. and Mrs. Benson are doing their work.

The Bishop of Polynesia (Dr. Twitchell), has sent in his resignation to the Archbishop of Canterbury.

The Bishop of Melanesia has propounded a scheme which would give three suffragan or assistant bishops to the Church in the Pacific. The new responsibilities for the Pacific mandates to Australia and New Zealand will include the extension and the developing of missionary work in those parts.

Mr. Lyon, the Superintendent of Yarrabah, has been ordered to take a long furlough by the doctor. Mr. and Mrs. Lyon intend to go to Scotland, and the Rev. S. C. Smith, the rector of Cairns, will be acting superintendent while Mr. Lyon is away.

The Rev. E. Harrison, the A.B.M. Missionary to Japan, passed through Thursday Island, on his way to Australia on furlough, by the Eastern.

A new launch for the Forrest River Mission has been bought, and was dedicated by the Archbishop of Perth before it left Perth. The boat is called the F.R.A.M., the initials of the Forrest River Aboriginal Mission.

Early in July there will be special services in the Torres Straits to commemorate the Jubilee of Missionary work in the Islands.

It is just fifty years since the first L.M.S. Missionaries landed in the Straits, and that was really the beginning of their work in New Guinea. The work in the Straits was undertaken with a view to work in the larger island.

The chairman of the Australian Board of Missions—the Rev. J. Jones—has had to give up his intended visit to the North. Mr. Jones was to visit New Guinea, and he hoped to be able to get to the Torres Straits as well. There are many in Thursday Island, where Mr. Jones was subdean for some years, who would be glad to see him again.

Two Important Ventures.

First:—Four priests, three of whom are Australians, born and bred and educated; while the fourth has had long experience in Australia, are about to found a Community, to be called the Community of the Ascension. The first home of the Community will be near Goulburn, in a cottage within the grounds of what was the home of the Bishop of Goulburn for many years. The priests will live a community life, under vows, and we pray that they may have a strong influence upon the spiritual life of the Australian Church. It is a bold venture of faith, and it is encouraging that within the Church in Australia, there should be some who are definitely prepared to give up all in answer to a call from God. We all need the inspiration that comes from self sacrifice, and a single eye to the supreme importance of spiritual things. It is not all whom God calls to this life of self sacrifice, but the community will keep before all of us

GLENNIE MEMORIAL SCHOOL, TOOWOOMBA

Principal: MISS LAWRENCE.

*Church of England School for Girls, Toowoomba. Under control of the Brisbane Diocesan Council.GLENNIE PREPARATORY SCHOOL, TOOWOOMBA

Principal: MISS SUTTON.

Patron: His Grace the Archbishop of Brisbane.

THE GLENNIE MEMORIAL SCHOOL gives Education up to Senior and Matriculation standard. Specialities: Music, Singing and Art.
 THE PREPARATORY SCHOOL receives pupils up to 13 years of age, and prepares candidates for the State Scholarship Examination.

Reduction for Sisters.

Fees for both Schools on application.

clergy and laity, the fact of the essential value of spiritual things. The very fact that we have to live in the world means temptations to adapt ourselves to worldly material standards, and it is well we should have a constant reminder that the standard of the world is not the one by which to measure our aims and our work. We shall watch the development of the Community with interest and sympathy, and we would assure the members of the help of our prayers that in all things they may be guided aright.

Second:—Dr. Halford, who resigned the bishopric of Rockhampton last year and gave up all his possessions in order that he might be free to give himself up wholly to evangelistic work, is coming back to Queensland to place himself in the hands of the Archbishop of Brisbane for any work the Archbishop may give him to do as a missionary. Dr. Halford, as we all know, is most of all concerned for the spiritual care of the people outback far from opportunities of spiritual life. It is not known whether some others will come out to work with Dr. Halford in Queensland, nor what particular work the Archbishop will have for him. We may surely hope that there will be some Australians, priests and laymen who will feel inspired by this example of self-denial and a passionate love of souls, and giving up all to be free for evangelistic work will join Dr. Halford in his Christlike work.

Possibly the more practical nature of the second venture will appeal more to the practically minded Australian than the first venture. Let us remember that the Church is Catholic, and at least one reason for that is that she can find room for quite different vocations. One reason why we long for the Re-union of Christendom is that we want to gain in spiritual life and power from the gifts which other bodies of Christians have, and which are needed for the fullness of life of the Church of God. We believe we have something to give and also something to gain.

These two ventures are a sign of real spiritual life in the Church in Australia, and also examples of the differences of operation of the Holy Spirit.

Azac Day, 1921.FESTIVAL OF ST. MARK, EVANGELIST AND MARTYR.

The soldiers who died for us in the war, all others who suffered, and the lessons of self-sacrifice we were taught during those years were well remembered in the various parishes of the diocese of Carpentaria. In every one there were one or two celebrations of the Holy Communion, and the congregations were large. At the Cathedral in Thursday Island the bishop was the celebrant at 9.30 a.m., and the subdean was the preacher. The Cathedral was filled with a reverent congregation.

The people of the Cathedral Parish, Thursday Island are raising funds to re-roof the Cathedral. On Thursday, May 26, the picture show company gave an exhibition, the proceeds of which were given to this object. The gross receipts were over £32, and enthusiastic ladies sold sweets during the entertainment, which brought in another £8. In July there is to be a moonlight fete in the Cathedral grounds for the same object. The Cathedral is the parish church of Thursday Island, but it is also the Mother Church of the diocese, and as such has a claim on the whole diocese.

The Continuation Committee of the World Conference on Faith and Order is to meet on August 17th, in America. Unfortunately, partly owing to the expense, and partly because it is difficult for him to leave the diocese again so soon, the Bishop of Willochra will not be able to attend the meeting. It is hoped that Archbishop Clarke, late of Melbourne, may be able to attend on behalf of the Church in Australia, but it will be necessary for his expenses to be paid. It is impossible to estimate the importance of the work which the organisation of the World's Conference has done for Reunion, more than any other organisation, it has created the atmosphere in which, and laid out the lines on which Reunion may come. Its influence is evident in the Appeal of the Lambeth Conference. An enormous amount of work has been done by bringing Christians of different and divergent views into personal relations, by publishing and distributing literature and information over the whole world. The printing and postage must be heavy items. The whole expense for some years has been borne by two loyal Churchmen in America, now the Committee is appealing to all Christians for financial help, and they ought to get all they need, for their work is most important.

The statement has often been made that it was strange that our church should contain no monument to its founder. Recently, however, the vicar ascertained definitely that there is such a monument, though it bore no inscription; a document in the handwriting of Deaconess Buchanan has been discovered proving that the silver chalice used on ordinary Sundays was given in his memory, and a silver plate has now been inserted into the base of the chalice inscribed in Latin to this effect: "For use by the faithful; given and dedicated to perpetuate the name of Albert Alexander Maclaren, priest, who was the first to make an effort to erect this church, whom God called to his own home on St. John Evangelist's Day 1891."—"Parish Gazette," Thursday Island.

We must compliment a Saibai boy on his manliness at the loss of the k. Assan Ceylon, 14 tons, which foundered after being struck by a squall near Dugong Island, about 25 miles from Mount Adolphus, on 21st February. Had he been on deck, it is very probable that he could have saved the ship with her valuable cargo. Feeling the inrush of water while cooking below, he sprang on deck to find the vessel sinking by the bows, and the rest of the crew, who were foreigners, too astonished to do anything but wait calmly for death. He first rescued from the hold a boy of fifteen years, a fellow-countryman, then succeeded in launching one of the boats, and in placing in it the whole company, eight souls; the other boat went down with the ketch. Grievously overloaded, they made for Dugong Island, where they found some turtle eggs and lighted a fire (without matches). Next day they made for Mt. Adolphus, where they found water and cocoanuts; and the day following they pulled into Thursday Island harbour. The rescue throughout depended solely on the promptitude and resourcefulness of one aboriginal. Similar courage and seamanship are practised daily in our narrow seas, but it is seldom that an occasion arises to remind landmen that those virtues are constantly exercised. For one wreck there are a hundred close shaves, but when there is no disaster the jeopardy is not noticed.—"Parish Gazette," Thursday Island.

Venturers for God.

FLORENCE BUCHANAN, the little Deaconess of the South Seas. By E. Jones.

Sydney. The Australian Board of Missions.

2/6

We may express our thanks to A.B.M. for publishing this small book; its cover displays the legend with which we have headed this notice, thereby indicating that other similar books are to follow. Too often it has happened that the biographies of pioneers are not written while there is opportunity to collect authentic materials, then when it is too late there is abiding regret that the inspiration of such lives can only be imagined, their results only dimly seen.

This book is but slight, and professes only to convey an "impressionist sketch"; some of its readers have complained that it does not tell enough of its subject. Miss Buchanan's memory is of peculiar interest to this diocese, since for over twenty years from 1895 she witnessed so nobly for God here, where the older residents still revere her name, and afterwards returned and commenced the Moa Mission in 1908, and remained there until the year before her death in 1913. She is commemorated in our Cathedral by a window with a figure of St. Catherine of Genoa, the mediæval saint whose life was so strangely like her own, and the face is a portrait of Miss Buchanan. The permanent value of her work is unquestionable, and we thank God that he raised up one with such devotion, insight and ability as to undertake a task for which few would have volunteered and at which fewer still could have achieved any success.

RECEIPTS and EXPENDITURE.

RECEIPTS.				£	s.	d.
Contributions from Islands	119	18	6
Grants : A.B.M.	1,500	0	0
S.P.G.	12	10	0
St. Andrew's W.M.	20	0	0
Interest	4	3	6
Morrison Fund	7	8	6
Excess Expenditure over Receipts	71	6	9
				£1,735	7	3

EXPENDITURE.				£	s.	d.
Stipends	472	17	8
General Expenses
Rent, £1/17/-; Audit Fee, £1/1/-; Exchange and Bank Charges,
£8/19/9; Workers' Compensation, £20; Agency, £18; Interest,
£6/1/10; Sundries, 14/10	56	14	6
Training College, S. Paul's
Stores and Allowances, Students	135	3	8
Invalid Food and Medicines	31	0	9
"Banzai" Repairs	11	10	6
S. Paul's, Moa
Stipends, £209/10/1; new Bell, £19/4/10; Stores,
£11/19/9; Tobacco, £7/7/6; Church Roof, £3/11/9;
Wages, two policemen, £2; Sundries, 18/-	£254	11	11
"Banzai": Captain, £34/15/-; Gear and Mast, £51/7/7;
Stores, £67/15/2; Insurance, £4/0/3	157	18	0
				412	9	11
Less Government Grant, £250; Donations, £5/10/-;
Roof, £2/5/-; Bell, £11/1/4; Church Collections,
£5/15/9; Refund, £2/1/6	276	13	7
"Oituli" Repairs
"Oituli" Working A/c
Wages, £43/7/6; Stores, £22/0/6; Gear, £20/19/7; Insurance,
£8/0/6	94	8	1
"Herald" Working A/c
Wages, £185/8/11; Gear, £65/7/5; Stores, £110/16/6; Dinghy,
£11/10/-; Insurance, £16/1/-	389	3	10
Property Repairs A/c
Mabuag, £8/12/3; Moa, £5/10/-; Adam, £2/4/3; Darnley, 3/6;
Tobacco and Nails, new Houses, £5/11/5	22	1	5
				£1,735	7	3

1921.

Diocese of Carpentaria.Bishop:

RT. REV. HENRY NEWTON, D.D.
Thursday Island, Queensland.

Administrator:

REV. F. W. SLADE, B.A.

Sub-Dean:

REV. F. W. SLADE, B.A.

Diocesan Secretary:

REV. F. W. SLADE, B.A., Thursday Island.

Commissaries:

REV. CHANCELLOR PONSONBY, M.A., The Rectory, Devonport, England.
REV. J. JONES, M.A., 242 Pitt Street, Sydney.
REV. W. P. GLOVER, Th.L., Warwick, Q.
REV. J. W. ASHTON, M.A., St. Kilda, Melbourne, V.
REV. C. R. IRRELES, Springfield, Maesmore, Gloucester, England.

Clergy:

REV. B. S. COLE, Cooktown.
REV. C. W. LIGHT, Darwin.
REV. F. W. SLADE, B.A., Thursday Island.
REV. E. TAFFS, Mossman.
REV. HAROLD THOMPSON, Normanton.

Honorary Lay Readers:

MR. H. F. L. FINNISS, Darwin
MR. D. A. ROBERTS, Darwin.

Diocesan Council:

REV. F. W. SLADE, B.A. | MR. GEO. OLARK.
REV. J. J. E. DONE. | MR. GILSON FOXTON.
REV. G. A. LUSCOMBE. | MR. A. SULLIVAN.

Honorary Legal Adviser:

HIS HONOUR JUDGE MACNAUGHTON.

Aboriginal Mission, Mitchell River:

MR. J. W. CHAPMAN. | Miss CRUTCH.
REV. H. MATTHEWS, J.P. | Mrs. MATTHEWS.
(Supt.) | Miss F. SMITH.
MR. E. C. TONKIN.
J. Geibe, T. Solomon, J. Savo.

Roper River Mission:

MR. DYER. | Miss CROSS.
REV. R. D. JOYNT. | Mrs. DYER.
REV. H. E. D. WARREN | Mrs. FORBES.
(Supt.) |
MR. WALTER FORBES.
MR. H. L. PERRIMAN.

Torres Straits Mission:

REV. J. J. E. DONE. | *REV. JOSEPH LUI.
REV. G. A. LUSCOMBE. | *REV. POEY PASSI.
REV. W. H. MACFARLANE, | Mrs. LUSCOMBE.
[Th.L.] | †HARRY CAPTAIN.
†BANNI.
* Native Deacons.
†Native Teacher. | †Native Lay Missionary.
DEACONESS HATTON, Thursday Island.

The Diocese.

The See was founded in 1900, and consists of such part of Queensland as is bounded by the sea on the north and east, by the Northern Territory on the west, and by a line drawn from lat. S. 19deg. 30min. on the western boundary of Queensland due east to par. 144deg. E. and thence N. to lat. S. 16deg. 40min. and thence east to the sea, together with the whole of the Northern Territory, comprising an area of not less than 620,000 square miles. The population, which is very widely scattered over this immense area, consists of about 10,000 whites, 5,000 Japanese, Chinese, and other aliens, and 85,000 aboriginals. The white population is mainly mining and pastoral. The See town is Thursday Island, a pearling centre north of Cape York.

Finance.

The Diocese has no endowments beyond the Bishop's income of £395 per annum. Every parish needs a grant from central funds which come from subscriptions to the Diocese, and grants from English Societies.

Missions.

Missions are carried on amongst the Japanese at Thursday Island; the South Sea Islanders; the aboriginals on the Mitchell and Roper Rivers; and among the Islanders of the Torres Straits.

Special Offertories.

On Easter Day the offertories are given to the Clergyman of the Parish, and on Good Friday to the Australian Board of Missions.

The "Church Standard."

Posted to any Address for 6s. 6d. per Annum.

The CHURCH STANDARD holds the unique position of being the only independent weekly paper published in the interests of the Church of England in Australasia.

Published every Friday Morning.

Appeals to all Members of the Church of England, Members of the C.E.M.S., Churchwardens, Sideemen and Parochial Councillors, Sunday School Teachers, Lay Readers, Catechists, and Clergy.

Specimen Copies on application to

THE CHURCH PUBLISHING CO. LTD.,
ROYAL INSURANCE BUILDINGS, 16 SPRING STREET, SYDNEY.

St. Margaret's, Brisbane.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND HIGH SCHOOL FOR GIRLS

Under the management of the Sisters of the Society of the Sacred Advent

Pupils prepared for examinations of the University of Queensland, Public Service and Associated Board R.A.

There are two Boarding Houses beautifully situated in extensive grounds overlooking the Brisbane River

BOARDERS RECEIVED FROM THE AGE OF EIGHT

FOR PROSPECTUS APPLY SISTER IN-CHARGE

St. Catharine's, Stanthorpe.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND HIGH SCHOOL FOR GIRLS

Under the management of the Sisters of the Society of the Sacred Advent

Pupils prepared for examinations of the University of Queensland, and Associated Board R.A.

Additional House secured

Increased Accommodation for Boarders

FOR PROSPECTUS APPLY SISTER-IN-CHARGE

Church of England Girls' Schools

UNDER THE MANAGEMENT OF THE
SISTERS OF THE SACRED ADVENT.

S. ANNE'S, TOWNSVILLE, Quarterly Fees for Boarders £10 10s.

S. MARY'S, HERBERTON " " " £15 15s.

Pupils prepared for Queensland University and Associated Board R.A. Examinations.
Commercial Subjects taught. Open-air sleeping accommodation if required.

In connection with S. Mary's, Herberton, there is a separate House for Boys under nine years of age. Quarterly Fees, £12 10s.

Diocese of Carpentaria.

INTERCESSION PAPER

July, August, September, 1921.

THANKSGIVINGS.

Let us give thanks :

- For 50 years of missionary work in the Torres Straits.
- For the appointment of a priest to Normanton.
- For the progress and development of the Mitchell River Mission.
- For baptisms and confirmations at the Mitchell River Mission.
- For evidence of spiritual progress in the various parishes of the Diocese.

We thank Thee and bless Thee, O Lord.

INTERCESSIONS.

Let us pray :

- For the work of the Torres Straits Mission.
- For those baptized and confirmed at the Mitchell River Mission.
- For the work of Harold Thompson, Priest, in the Gulf.
- For the Community of the Ascension.
- For the work of George Halford.
- For the meetings of General and Provincial Synods.
- For the Australian Board of Missions, that it may be free from debt.
- For the reunion of Christendom.

We beseech Thee to hear us, good Lord.

The Carpenterian

FOR THE DIOCESE OF CARPENTARIA, NORTH AUSTRALIA.

Vol. XXI.—No. 84.]

THURSDAY ISLAND, OCTOBER 1, 1921.

[PRICE 2/6 A YEAR.

PUBLISHED ON THE FIRST DAY OF EACH QUARTER.

POST FREE.]

NOTICE.

All communications to be addressed to the Editor of The Carpenterian, Bishop's House, Thursday Island, to whom subscriptions may be sent. Subscription, 2/6 per annum, post free.

The address of the Secretary for the Carpenterian Association in England is Miss Theodora Searth, Bearsted, Kent, England.

NOTICE TO CONTRIBUTORS.

All contributions of Fish News, etc., must reach the Editor before the last day of February, May, August, and November in each year.

The Bishop's Movements.

I returned to Thursday Island from Cooktown by the "Douglas Mawson," on Monday, June 13th, and left again on the following day to visit the Torres Straits Islands. I arrived back in Thursday Island on Friday, July 8th, and left by the "Marella" for Darwin on July 14th. Unfortunately, the train service from Darwin to the Katherine is fortnightly, and the train left the week we arrived. The Confirmation was fixed for the following Sunday, and so it turned out that I was not able to get up the line during the month I was in the Territory. By the kindness of Judge Hubert, who drove me out, I was able to visit Koolpinyah Station, where we had a celebration of Holy Communion on Tuesday, August 2nd.

The "Marella" was a few days late on her return trip from Singapore, so I did not get back to Thursday Island till Wednesday, August 17th. Fortunately, the "Francis Pritt" was in, and had been kept a day or two to enable me to get to Normanton. Means of travelling in the North are not convenient. The "Francis Pritt" left Thursday Island on Friday, August 19th. We had Mr. Matthews on board, and also an old Gulf stockman, who had been away in Western Australia for some years, and was returning to his old beat looking for work. We dropped Mr. Matthews at Koongalara to walk up to Trubanaman, and keeping a fair, though light wind, most of the time, we did the trip from Thursday Island to Karumba in a little under six days. The pilot launch took me up the River so that the trip had taken less than a week.

On the following Monday I went on to Croydon by train, and, after the Confirmation on Tuesday night, I left by coach early on Wednesday morning for the Gilbert River.

There we had service on Wednesday afternoon, and a celebration of the Holy Communion on Thursday morning. Mr. McIvor drove me part of the way to Forrest Home, Mr. Johnson meeting us in the car. At Forrest Home we had a celebration of Holy Communion, and Mr. Johnson drove me into Georgetown. I gave the children a lesson in the State School on Friday and on Monday; held services in Georgetown on Sunday. Went to Mt. Jackson on Monday for a baptism. Mr. Lewis kindly drove me out and back. On Tuesday, September 6th, I got to Forsayth by coach, and gave the children a lesson in the State School on Wednesday and Thursday mornings. Services were held in Forsayth on Wednesday night and Thursday morning, and on Friday I left Forsayth by train for Cairns, on the way to Townsville for Provincial Synod.

The Churchwardens of the Cathedral, Thursday Island, have sent a special donation of £5 from their funds to A.B.M., in answer to the suggestion in the July "Carpenterian." It is to be hoped other parishes will do likewise.

The Bishop's Visit to the Straits

When I returned to Thursday Island from Cooktown on June 13th, I found Mr. Luscombe waiting for me with the "Banzai," but as Mr. Walker was going out in the "Goodwill," and kindly offered us a passage, we chose the quicker and more comfortable way of travelling, leaving the "Banzai" to follow us, and take us round to S. Paul's. At Badu we had service on the Wednesday night, and a celebration on the next morning, when there were 52 communicants. Here, as at every place on the trip, we emphasised the duty of thanksgiving for the fifty years of missionary work in the Straits, and the Churchwardens were instructed to have special hymns and thanksgivings on Sunday, July 3. The "Banzai" took us across the Strait between Badu and Moa, on the Thursday afternoon, and we had service at Adam that evening. At the celebration next morning there were 18 communicants. We had intended going round by the "Banzai" to S. Paul's, but the wind was very high, and we decided to walk across the Island, leaving the "Banzai" to come as soon as she could. We walked across in about five hours, and the cutter arrived soon afterwards, the sea was not so rough as we thought. Service that night, a celebration on Friday morning when there were 26 communicants. The confirmation of the wife of one of the Students—she has missed her confirmation before, not from her fault—a talk to the students, time spent in discussing some new rules for the settlement, and a meeting of the people at night to discuss the rules, made a very full day. Mr. Luscombe has been very busy measuring out the garden. Each householder at S. Paul's is allowed five acres, but some of the people have many small plots in different places, and it was found some had more than their allowance of ground. It is almost necessary for the allotments to be in different places, as land for yams and bananas must be in good scrub soil, while other more sandy soil does for other crops. We have to be on our guard that there is land for future families. It was decided at the meeting that typewritten copies of the proposed rules be made, and that the people discuss them in the village, and a general meeting be held later on to accept or alter them. Of course the trustees of the Reserve have to decide matters, but it is well to have the opinion of the people. We want them as far as possible to govern themselves.

On Friday, Mr. Done arrived at S. Paul's in the Herald, and on Saturday, June 18th, we left for Mabuiag. There we had a preparation service for the Sunday Communion, and there were 78 Communicants on Sunday morning. The usual Sunday services were held, and after evening song the congregation remained to sing hymns. They evidently enjoyed it.

On Monday we had to wait till midday for the tide to allow us to get out by the smaller passage, and we had to anchor that night in a nice quiet lagoon at Mangrove Island, which is not inhabited. The next day we got to Boigu and found that the Government teacher was held up there by heavy weather. He had a small sailing boat, but the weather was too bad for him to get back in it, and the sails of the Island cutter were not good enough to stand the heavy beat down.

Poey Passi had four candidates for confirmation, whom he had prepared under Mr. Done's direction. We had the confirmation on Tuesday, and a celebration on Wednesday morning, 50 communicants on Wednesday. I examined the children in the school, and was more than pleased with the progress they had made after nine months' regular teaching. Their reading and writing and sums were good, and their knowledge of the catechism would put the white children of many schools to shame. The "New Guinea" Islands, as Saibai, Dauan and Boigu are called, have not come into such close contact with white people as the other islands of the Straits. The Government teacher at Saibai had the impossible task of teaching in three schools, the extremes being some 25 miles apart. So nothing effective could be done by him except at Saibai. This means that the people and especially the children, do not know so much English as the people in the other islands; so when I was catechising the children, in English, of course, they very often answered in their own language, and I have had to turn to Poey to ask him what the answer was. The most encouraging thing was the keenness of the children. They were quick and alert, and interested. The venture has been a great success. The Boigu people have their gardens on the other side of the island from the village, and they spend a good deal of their time there, especially when the island boat is away pearling, so Poey has to go with his school children and take school material with him. He was very glad to get a second blackboard so that he has not to transport that from place to place. There are 42 children in the school at Boigu, and the attendance is very regular indeed.

We left Boigu about 4.30 p.m. on Wednesday, June 22nd, taking the Government teacher with us as far as Dauan, but we could not get through that night, and had to anchor till morning. With a heavy wind to beat against, progress was slow, and when the tide turned we would go backwards instead of forwards. We anchored at Dauan soon after mid-day on Thursday, and the Government teacher went on home to Saibai in the Dauan boat. We had evening service and a celebration of Holy Communion the next morning, the festival of S. John the Baptist, when there were 38 communicants. Joseph Lui had candidates for confirmation, but we decided to take them over to Saibai to be confirmed with those Joseph had prepared there. On Friday I examined Joseph's school; he has 24 children, and has even better results in some ways than Poey at Boigu. At both schools it was remarkable how well they had learnt their tables, and it was not merely that they had learnt them by rote, but they could answer correctly no matter how they were dodged about, and they could do simple mental addition quite correctly and quickly. At Dauan it was necessary to suspend one of the churchwardens for a time, as he had acted foolishly in a matter, and though his explanation had to be accepted, it was necessary to express disapproval of what he had done. We left Dauan on Friday afternoon, taking with us Joseph and his wife, and also the candidates for confirmation. The confirmation was held that evening, when there were seventeen persons confirmed. On Saturday morning there were 125 communicants. We had to leave on Saturday, as we were due at Wariber for S. Peter's Day. We landed Joseph and his party at Dauan, had celebration there on Sunday, left immediately afterwards; anchored at Two Brothers for the night, and arrived at Yam on Monday. Service there that evening, and after the celebration of Holy Communion the next morning, we left for Wariber, where we found, on our arrival about 3 p.m., that the "Banzai" with Mr. Luscombe on board, had anchored just before us. We went ashore and had service in the open-air under a wide-spreading Wangai tree. It looked once as though there would be a shower of rain, but fortunately it did not come.

During the night boats came from Yam and Coconut Islands, bringing people to take part in the dedication of the new church, which took place on S. Peter's Day, and has S. Peter for its dedication. The service was early in the day, and followed immediately by a celebration of the Holy Communion, when there were a large number of communicants from Yam, S. Paul's and Coconut. Of course the church could not hold all the people, not even all who wished to communicate could get inside, for it is a small building to accommodate about 30 people. It is built of plaited coconut leaves for walls, and has a grass roof, and was built entirely by the people themselves. The people of Wariber—which is the native name of one of the "Three Sisters," Bet, Sue, and Poll—are an offshoot from Coconut Island. Efforts have been made to get all the Coconut Island people to migrate to Wariber, and why they do not do so no white man can say. Coconut is a small island, with no wood, no water on it, and very poor soil. Water and wood have to be brought by a sailing-boat from one of the neighbouring islands, much of it from Wariber, which is a fairly large island, has plenty of wood, water, and fairly good soil. There is every advantage on the one island; every disadvantage on the other—except that on Coconut Island the people have a large number of coco palms in bearing. Yet they will not move. There must be some sentimental reason that we have not been able to understand. However the little colony at Wariber determined to have a church and built one themselves. Mr. Done had a marriage and a baptism, after we had partaken of a very light breakfast on shore. The Herald was anchored about a mile away. Of course the Wariber people had a feast for their visitors.

We left Wariber early in the afternoon of June 29th, having Mr. Luscombe on board with us, as he wished to be at the Jubilee of Missionary work in the Straits to be observed at Darnley Island on July 1st, and he preferred to travel in our company on the Herald rather than on the Banzai. We arrived at Coconut Island just before dark, and went ashore for service, and left again at midnight for Darnley Island, as the tide suited, and we did not know what wind we should have, nor did we know what arrangements Mr. MacFarlane had made for the Jubilee celebrations. We passed Yorke Island as we were to call there on the way back very early, and then lost the wind for the greater part of the day; so we were thankful we had taken time by the forelock. Up to then we had had more wind than we needed; in fact we had been reefed down most of the time. By working the tides, and using a very slight breeze in the afternoon, we managed to get to Darnley about 7.30 p.m. on Thursday, June 30, well up to time. It was a wonderful reception we received. There were crowds of people on the beach and numbers of hurricane lamps moving like giant fire-flies amongst the coco palms. Just where we landed we had a short service, and it was wonderfully impressive. Then we separated nominally to go to bed after we had had some refreshments. No doubt the people did go to bed. Certainly Mrs. MacFarlane and the children did—but the Bishop and the three Priests of the Torres Straits mission were talking and arranging about the various services and other functions till very late!

On Friday, July 1st, we began the services with the dedication of the new chancel at Matins. Then the dedication of the Memorial Cross to commemorate the fifty years of mission work in the Straits; then some 70 of us walked about 3 miles along the beach to Treachery Bay, where the first L.M.S. Missionaries landed on July 1st, 1871. Here we had a short service, and one of the few remaining Darnley Islanders, who was present at the landing, gave us an account of what took place. We were back at the Mission Station for evensong before dark, and afterwards the people had a short dance. On Saturday, after Matins, we had a meeting of Churchwardens to talk over matters in connection with the work of the church in the islands. In the afternoon there was a feast for the visitors, when about 120 people sat to enjoy the good things provided by the Darnley people. There were representatives from nearly every island in the Straits, except the New Guinea Islands and Murray. After evensong there was more dancing till about 10 o'clock, when the people dispersed to get a good night's rest before the Sunday services. Sunday, July 3rd, was a very full day. There was celebration at 8 a.m., with 120 communicants, Matins with the confirmation of 12 candidates (11 male, 1 female); service for children in the afternoon, when a number of Heralds were admitted, and an informal service out of doors at night, when the older people recounted the stories of the early days of the Mission on the various islands.

On Monday, July 4th, we left Darnley, taking with us Mr. MacFarlane and Mr. Luscombe and we arrived at Murray about 5 p.m. Mr. MacFarlane was very busy with confirmation candidates, of whom 31 (17 male and 14 female) were confirmed on Tuesday morning. There has been a good deal of trouble at Murray with some of the young men, and Mr. MacFarlane had been obliged to try and awaken a sense of sin by refusing to have any hymns for the services for some time, and also forbidding any service to be taken after dark. I am thankful to be able to say that of the number of young men implicated, only one had been confirmed, and he claimed he was forced to take part in the offence. That means the others who had had opportunity of being received into full communion with the church had definitely refused to do so. Also of 40 people who during the last two years have asked to be prepared for confirmation three only were refused because of immorality; so it is those who have refused to identify themselves with the church who have caused the trouble, and over them we can claim no direct influence. We left Murray on Tuesday afternoon, with little wind, but managed to get out a few miles before dark and anchored under a reef. Another boat was anchored near by, so we hailed the crew to come to the Herald for service. During the night we drifted, but were able to get back again to our anchorage as we had the light of the other boat to guide us.

On Thursday morning we were at Yorke Island, and after the confirmation of eleven candidates (7 male and 4 female), we sailed again to anchor for the night near an island on the way to S. Paul's. As we passed Coconut the next morning a dinghy came off with the mail, school returns, and some money, part of which dropped into the sea as the dinghy jumped up and down near us. We arrived at S. Paul's in the afternoon of the same day, landed Mr. Luscombe, and after service and tea returned on board the Herald to sleep, as we wanted an early start the next morning. There was a heavy sea as we rowed out to the Herald at S. Paul's and both Mr. Done and I got a good ducking. We were back in Thursday Island by mid-day on Friday, July 8th, having been 25 days on the visit to the islands. We visited every island, except Stephen's island, on which there are inhabitants. There were not many cases of discipline requiring attention. The work of the church is going on steadily and surely in the Straits, and there is abundant cause for thankfulness. The church has, indeed, been fortunate in the three Priests who have guided the people through the change from Christian life under the London Missionary Society to the fuller life of the Holy Catholic Church. It was a great thing to have representatives from so many islands at the Jubilee services at Darnley, and to be able to thank God for the self-sacrificing labours of men like Murray and MacFarlane and Chalmers. It was an inspiration to think of the Light that shineth brought from England and Scotland to the Loyalty and other South Sea Islands, and passed on by those who had received it there to others in dark places. From Jerusalem west to the British Isles, and on to the South Pacific, and from there to the Torres Straits and New Guinea, through all the centuries of the life of the Christian Church the Light has been passed on and on. May we have the faith and love to pass it on to others.

S. Peter's, Normanton.

The people of Normanton held a Bazaar during race week in July, and over £150 was raised by the effort. The financial result was due partly to raffling and, as it is against the regulations of the diocese that money should be raised by such means, the Churchwardens have agreed at the suggestion of the Bishop, that so much of the money as can be estimated as having been raised by raffles shall be put to a separate account in the bank, and not to the credit of the church funds. The disposal of the money will be decided later on.

The Bishop took the funeral of a returned soldier who died in the Normanton Hospital. He confirmed six candidates (4 male—2 female) on Friday, August 26th, and left for Croydon on Monday, August 29th. Mr. Thompson hopes to be able to visit Burketown and the Stations in that direction shortly.

S. Margaret's, Croydon.

The Bishop paid a hurried visit to Croydon in August, arriving there on Monday, August 29th and leaving for the Georgetown district on Wednesday, August 31st. He confirmed 21 candidates (7 male—14 female) on Tuesday night, August 30th. Mr. Thompson has visited Croydon every month from Normanton, but has not been able to do any work in the district outside Croydon.

The Bishop of Carpentaria entered upon the seventh year of his episcopate on September 21st, S. Matthew's Day.

The Diocese of Carpentaria reached the age of twenty-one years on August 24, 1921. It was on the Feast of S. Bartholomew, 1900, that the first Bishop, the Right Revd. Gilbert White, now Bishop of Willochra, was consecrated in S. Andrew's Cathedral, Sydney. Bishop White occupied the See of Carpentaria for 15 years.

The Provincial Synod.

The Synod of the Province of Queensland met in Townsville on September 12th and following days. All the Bishops of the Province were present, and a fair number of the clerical and lay representatives of the dioceses of the Province. Unfortunately, owing to distance, and still more to the expense of travelling, it was necessary to call upon North Queensland Churchmen to represent the dioceses of Carpentaria and New Guinea. We are very grateful to those who represented us, but obviously they are not able to speak and vote with knowledge as to how matters will affect a diocese of whose conditions they know nothing. Larger and more wealthy dioceses can afford to pay the travelling expenses of their representatives. It is difficult if not impossible for others to do so. Laymen give up a good deal of their time to attend Synod, and the Church ought not to ask them to make other sacrifices, besides which the scope of choice should not be limited to people who can afford to travel in these days of high fares. Few, if any, of the clergy could afford the money.

The business of the Synod began with the delivery of the Charge of the President in S. James' Cathedral, Townsville, after evensong had been said on Tuesday, September 12th, and the Synod sat on Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday. The corporate communion was in the Cathedral on Tuesday morning. The greater part of the time was taken up in considering a canon to establish a fire insurance fund for the Province. The Canon was passed, but is not to come into operation until certain legal formalities have been arranged, and also not until the Canon has been considered by the Synods of the Province, and any amendments to be suggested have been considered at the next Provincial Synod. While the Provincial Synod has power to legislate for the Province on such a matter, it was felt that there were good reasons not to act without first consulting the various dioceses, two of which have established Fire Insurance schemes of their own.

Canon Batty proposed that should the committee for the election of the Archbishop of Brisbane decide to delegate its powers, such delegation should be to the Archbishop of Canterbury, or to the Archbishop of York, or the Bishop of London. This was really a more or less formal matter, and the motion was passed. The Canon of Provincial Synod, regulating the election of the Metropolitan, gives the committee power to delegate to a Bishop or Bishops who have been appointed, and as it was uncertain whether the committee has power to decide to whom the delegation should be made, it was advisable to have the matter quite clear in case it should be decided to delegate.

There was an important debate on a motion proposed by the Bishop of North Queensland, and seconded by the Bishop of New Guinea, dealing with Reunion, accepting the Lambeth proposals, and authorising the Province to act subject to initiation by the General Synod.

A motion recommending the Reformed Public House System was lost, as was also an amendment to give the imprimatur of Provincial Synod to Prohibition, and a further amendment was passed commending the sympathetic study of Temperance efforts, especially the Reformed Public Home System, and the working of the Prohibition laws in America and Canada to all Church men in the Province.

There were other motions of a more or less important nature, which were passed, and just before the close of the Session the Bishop of New Guinea proposed a motion dealing with the translation of the Archbishop of Brisbane to Salisbury, expressing the thankfulness of the Church of the Province for all the Metropolitan has done, and assuring him of our prayers for his future work.

The motion was seconded by the Rev. Canon Norman, Sub-Dean of S. James' Cathedral, Townsville, and supported by several laymen. The Archbishop, who was evidently much moved, spoke in reply, and amongst other things expressed the hope that the wonderful unanimity of the Province, and the loyal acceptance of the Provincial System would be maintained, but he warned us that it would need self-sacrifice and consideration each for other parts, if it is to be maintained.

During the Sessions of Synod, opportunity was taken to hold a public meeting in support of the League of Nations. This was held in the Townsville Town Hall, with the Deputy-Mayor in the chair. There was a large attendance; the chief speaker was the Archbishop of Brisbane. A visit was paid to S. Anne's school, and also on the Thursday night, there was a large attendance at the school, when the teachers and children gave a Missionary Pageant of the Coming of Christianity to England, the three scenes being the Mission of S. Columba to the North from Ireland, the Mission of S. Augustine from Rome to the South of England, and the Mission of S. Paulinus from Canterbury to Northumbria. After the scenes the Archbishop spoke about the Missionary Work of the Church, and the Bishops of New Guinea and Carpentaria spoke of the work of the Church amongst the Papuans, and the aborigines. Refreshments were provided by the school.

The Mayor and Aldermen of Townsville welcomed the members of Provincial Synod to the City at a reception in the Mayor's Room on Tuesday morning, September 12th. It was a very pleasant gathering at which the Mayor and some of the Aldermen spoke, and the Archbishop and the visiting Bishops replied.

The people of Townsville were very hospitable, and the Church people of the parishes in the city provided tea for the members of the Synod on each day the Synod sat. It was an important session of Synod, and especially memorable as the last one over which Archbishop Donaldson presided.

The Carpentarian

FOR THE DIOCESE OF CARPENTARIA,
NORTH AUSTRALIA.

Vol. XXI., No. 84. Thursday Island, Oct. 1, 1921

At Darnley Island, July 1st, 1921.

We were looking out over the waters across which, just 50 years ago, had come the little sailing-ship carrying the light-bearers to the Torres Straits islands and the great mysterious island of New Guinea.

Behind us rose the green-covered hills, guarding their secrets of bygone days, and looking down upon the sheltered cove close to which the blood of European sailor and island savage had not so very long ago mingled in fatal conflict. In a glade some little distance off was the "zogo-ground"—the sacred place where, in the giant clam-shells, were the two circular stones, "Meb" and "Yerger" (the shrine of the moon and the sun), round which many a mystic religious rite had once been made. And as, on that sunny afternoon of July 1, we listened to one of the old men of Darnley Island recalling the events of that auspicious day just half-a-century back, to which he himself had been witness, one's thoughts flew to the far-off isles of Thanet and Iona and Lindisfarne—to the days of Columba and Augustine and Aidan, the light-bearers to the distant shores from which our own Faith has come, and it was significant too, that with us in the service of thanksgiving at the site of the landing of the first missionaries to Torres Straits and New Guinea was one,—our Bishop,—who himself had been a light-bearer to New Guinea's eastern shores.

Early missionaries to Britain came by way of France. It was from French possessions, the Loyalty Islands, that Dr. Samuel MacFarlane and Mr. Murray came with their band of Lifuan native teachers to Darnley 50 years ago. The London Missionary Society, itself originally founded partly by Anglican vision, but later passing under Congregationalist direction, was responsible for the venture.

New Guinea was the goal, but it was felt that approach had best be by way of the islands of Torres Straits, just then becoming attractive to seekers of pearl-shell and beche-de-mer. Of the people of the islands much information may be gleaned from "The Voyage of the Rattlesnake," "The Wreck of the Charles Eaton," and other journals, in which the "Indians" (as they were usually called), are described as being intelligent, fine physical specimens, and of independent spirit. In common with other savage races, they possessed their worship-cults, their rules of social organisation, their ceremonies of malevolent magic. Infanticide, and strangulation of infants were amongst some of the usual practices, though they possessed many customs undoubtedly good. There seems to have been a fairly strict moral law. Certain offences were punishable by death. Unlike the mainlanders, they had fairly comfortable grass dwellings. They were for the most part accounted treacherous, and, if not actually fierce, at any rate people upon whom one would not call unless armed. Their own legends and stories record many instances of dark deeds—murder of shipwrecked crews, the killing of Europeans; but it must be remembered that, even apart from the old superstitious fear of "the white spirits," they suffered much at the hands of unscrupulous representatives of civilisation.

And so the mission, planted on the virgin soil of Darnley Island, grew. Teachers were placed at Saibai, Warrior, Mabuiag, and other islands in due course. Murray Island, at the head of the Barrier, was reached by one of the Lifuan teachers from Darnley, who made the risky voyage in a canoe, and prepared for the seminary for training native teachers which was afterwards established. The first European headquarters were at Somerset, Cape Yorke Peninsula; but later were removed to Murray Island.

In Dr. MacFarlane's "Amongst the Cannibals," and also in "The story of the L.M.S.," are given vivid pictures of those early years, and on the various islands one will meet grey-headed old men and women whose faces glow as they speak of their own coming to the Light through the waters of baptism, or whose eyes, again, will fill with tears as they speak of one or another of their early teachers, or of their own beloved "Tamate."

It all seems so recent, and yet so long ago. Entering the fine concrete church at Mabuiag (like all the churches of the islands, erected and paid for by the people themselves), who would dream that but a bare 50 years past the joy of Christian worship was a thing unknown? And the memorial cross at Darnley, fashioned by native hands from native stone, reminding all who gaze upon it, that "the Light Shineth," is symbolic of that transforming power that works and is still working.

At Boigu and Dauan one is greeted by the two recently-ordained deacons—the first natives the Australian church has given, and themselves the descendants of the old "zogo-men." Within the leaf-walls of S. Paul's college at Moa, brown-skinned Christian students are being fitted to become "stewards of the mysteries," not of old-time dark practices, but "of God!" On the island of Coconut (or Parema—let it retain its native appellation!) an island native imparts instruction to the grand-children of those who looked upon, perhaps even took part in, the ghastly spectacle which accompanied the tragedy of the "Charles Eaton's" passengers. And so one could go on.

And thus the Torres Straits mission has been keeping its jubilee this year, marking the great event by special services of thanksgiving and intercession by festive gathering, and in other ways. It is not good to measure God's work by figures and statistics, since in any event these can be known only to Him; nevertheless there is no reason to look with anything but happiness—and, shall we say awe, also?—at the results of the carrying of the message to the islands of the Straits. In general discipline and observance of religious duty, the people compare more than favourably with many a "white" parish. They are not perfect—no one expects them to be. Into that fuller conception of Catholic faith granted to them through the handing over of the mission to us, a few years ago, the islanders are entering more and more; and perhaps it is they who realise, more than some of us do ourselves, something of the vision of the Unseen that comes through her teaching of the Communion of Saints. It is to the islands that we look now for teachers and light-bearers to the remnant that is left on the mainland of Australia. Already they are realising their duty in maintaining their own teachers, and in contributing to what people are generally accustomed to call "foreign missions." As has been said before in these columns, language, native customs where they are good—both are retained. It is sought to develop the church in accordance with native temperament and surroundings so far as possible—to make it not a transplanted flower that must wither and die unless fertilised by English-fed sustenance; but a healthy, vigorous plant nourished by the people themselves. The Mission still requires European supervision, and will need it for many years to come, perhaps. And because of its geographical position, and its intimate trade relations with Thursday Island, it must necessarily imbibe much that is "white man." Naturally it looks for a lead to the town where stands its mother church, and where dwells its Father in God. More or less intimate association with the European church there must always be. Which is good for both, for by such comes the constant reminder that the holy church of Jesus is a Catholic society.

Resignation of the Metropolitan

It was with very great sorrow, and a sense of real loss, that we heard the news that our Archbishop was to be translated to Salisbury. There was a feeling of sorrow, for it meant the personal loss of a friend and adviser who has endeared himself to all of us who have come into contact with him, and they are very many, for Archbishop Donaldson has never spared himself, he has visited every diocese of the Province, and some of them on several occasions. There is not a parish, there is no part of the work of the church in the Province with which he is not familiar. There are none of the Bishops, there are few of the clergy who have not had the benefit of his advice and encouragement.

There is a feeling of real loss, not only to the Province of Queensland, but to the whole Church in Australia, for he has been the leader of the Church to whom all looked up, and whose lead the church was glad to follow. His intense interest in and support of the missionary work of the church is perhaps of first importance, and because of that he has had wide vision in other matters. His guiding hand in the development of Provincial life in Queensland has been invaluable. The Province was formed after his arrival in the State, and the church in Queensland will ever be the stronger for his wise guidance during the first years of its Provincial life. He has been the friend and guide of Church Education, and of the religious life.

Of his work and influence in his own diocese it is not for us to speak, nor can we say anything of the power he has been as a citizen of Queensland. We are grateful for the seventeen years of his life he has given us. We know it is only because he feels he has a call which he ought not to disobey that he is leaving us, and much as we regret his going, we have in his decision but another example of obedience to the will of God, which is the lesson he has been teaching us in many ways for seventeen years.

The church in Australia is poorer by the death of the Right Reverend Cecil Druitt, the first Bishop of Grafton, N.S.W. He came out to Australia, and was consecrated as Coadjutor to the Bishop of Grafton and Armidale in S. Andrew's Cathedral. His first great work was to raise the endowment for the See of Grafton, which was formed out of the Diocese of Grafton and Armidale, and when the See was founded he was elected the first bishop.

Always a very delicate man, he managed to do work which a man of strong physique would have thought too much. Of a deeply devoted nature, as shown by a valuable Book of Prayers, he has left a mark on the Diocese of Grafton of very great value. The prayers for General Synod were drawn up by him, and were received by the Primate at the same time as the news of his death.

All Souls' Quetta Memorial Church, Thursday Island.

On July 8th, the Bishop confirmed 28 candidates (8 male, 20 female) in the Cathedral. The racial origin of the candidates is interesting as showing the diversity of races in Thursday Island. Of the candidates of the white races there were descendants of English, Scotch, Norwegian, and Danish parents; there were some of Manila, Torres Straits Island, Loyalty Island descent, there was a native of the East Indies, and one who has Jamaica (Negro) blood in her veins.

The church people of Thursday Island arranged for a Fete which was held in the Cathedral Grounds on the night of July 21st, at which the sum of over £165 was raised. While the completion of the Cathedral cannot be taken in hand for some time, it has become necessary for something to be done to the roof of the Cathedral and the roof of the Institute. The iron on both is rusting, and the churchwardens hope to reroof the Cathedral shortly.

The Right Reverend Gerald Sharp, Bishop of New Guinea, has been elected Archbishop of Brisbane and Metropolitan of Queensland.

The Rev. J. W. Ashton, Rector of All Saints', S. Kilda, Melbourne, has been elected Bishop of Grafton in succession to the late Right Reverend Cecil Druitt.

Missions.

The Rev. G. A. Luscombe has resigned from the staff of the T. Straits Mission and with his family left for south in the Victoria in September. His resignation takes effect on October 31st, and Mr. Luscombe will act as the representative of the Diocese of Carpentaria in General Synod in October.

Mr. Luscombe has done valuable work for six years at S. Paul's, Moa, where he was Principal of the Training College and prepared the first candidates for Deacons Orders from the Torres Straits, besides having the pastoral care of Badu and Adam. He felt that his children are getting of an age when they ought to be in different surroundings, and much as he regretted doing so, he resigned for that reason. Mrs. Luscombe will be missed from S. Paul's where she did much work in the school and with the Mothers' Union, besides carrying on the lace-making which Miss Luscombe started when she was in charge of the school at S. Paul's. We wish them every happiness in whatever sphere they are called to.

The Rev. J. W. Schomberg has been appointed a member of the staff of the Torres Straits Mission, and Principal of S. Paul's College, Moa. Mr. and Mrs. Schomberg, with their infant son, arrived in Thursday Island on August 19th, and left for S. Paul's on August 22nd. He had a short time at S. Paul's with Mr. Luscombe before he left.

Our congratulations to Mrs. MacFarlane, and also to Mrs. Matthews on the birth of their sons.

Miss Crutch, of the Mitchell River Mission, has been obliged to go south, as her health has given way. We hope it will soon be restored by the change of climate.

The Rev. H. E. and Mrs. Warren have had a very sad time on the Roper River. There was a great deal of illness there, fever with gastric complications, just before the party from south arrived in May. There were several deaths on the Mission Station, amongst them the infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Warren, and their little boy was so ill that his parents gave up hope of his recovery. They did all they could for the little chap, and God answered their prayers. We assure Mr. and Mrs. Warren of our deepest sympathy in their trouble.

The Bishop of New Guinea is very much better, and hopes to be able to return to his diocese by the first boat after General Synod. He would have gone earlier, but the resignation of the Archbishop of Brisbane made it important that he should delay his return till after the election of the Metropolitan of Queensland. The Bishop of New Guinea, as Senior Bishop, is chairman of the election committee, and on him devolved the making of the arrangements in connection with the election. This also meant that he would be able to be present at both the Provincial Synod of Queensland and the General Synod of Australia.

A technical school for training boys in carpentry, etc., is to be established in New Guinea in connection with the New Guinea Mission.

All Saints' School, Charters Towers.

Certainly the most interesting and inspiring event of Provincial Synod week in 1921 was the Dedication of the School at Charters Towers. From first to last the arrangements were perfect, and there was not a single hitch or false note. Arrangements had been made for special carriages with sleeping-car to be attached to a goods train which left Townsville on the Friday night for the members of the Synod, many of whom travelled to Charters Towers by that train or by a special train on Saturday morning. The Archbishop and Bishops and the clergy all went up on Friday night. We arrived at the Towers about midnight, and the carriages were shunted to a side line, so we had not to turn out till daylight, when motor-cars arrived to take us to All Souls.

There was a celebration of Holy Communion, with special prayers for the school. The Archbishop was the celebrant, the Bishop of Carpentaria read the Epistles and the Bishop of New Guinea the Gospel. All the Bishops were vested in cope and mitre, the Archbishop taking off his cope and vesting in chasuble when the procession arrived at the altar. The Archbishop and Bishops were each attended by a Chaplain and two Acolytes, and in nearly every case it was possible to have boys for attendants who came from the Diocese of its Bishop. The service was beautifully reverent and dignified, and a very large number of the boys made their communion.

After breakfast, there were various functions. Trees were planted by the Bishops and others. The Archbishop declared the tennis court open for play. The Bishop of New Guinea talked to the boys about the New Guinea Mission, and at 11 o'clock we were taken in cars to visit the Girls' School—S. Gabriel's—where there are 25 girls. After dinner there was a short time for rest, and at 2.30 the procession was formed in the Community House for the Service of Dedication, which was taken by the Archbishop of Brisbane. Again the Archbishop and Bishops were vested in cope and mitre, and had their chaplains and acolytes; each chaplain carrying the Bishop's pastoral staff. The procession, headed by the Cross-bearer, who was followed by the clergy and then the Bishops, went first to the Chapel, then to the dining-room, to the school-room, to the dormitories, ending at the Community House, after the dedication of which the general dedication of the whole school took place.

The boys of the school joined the procession as it left the Chapel, and formed up outside the various portions of the buildings as each was dedicated. The singing, led by a cornet, was wonderful, and had so been arranged that it exactly fitted in with the distances traversed. There was a very large number of people present—estimated by some at 1000, a large contingent arrived by the special train on Saturday morning, including about 60 girls and teachers from S. Anne's School, Townsville. S. Gabriel's was present in full force, and there were visitors from Blackheath and Mount Carmel. Afternoon tea was provided, and then came the speeches. The Archbishop was in his best form and made a magnificent speech from the steps leading to the Community House. He was followed by the Bishops of the Province. The Bishop of North Queensland had a wonderful reception. People rose and cheered him again and again. He was able to announce that the donations received that day amounted to £1000—which includes a grant from the Walter and Eliza Hall Trust. Of course holidays were given to, and accepted by, the boys! Each Bishop gave a half-holiday, and the Archbishop a whole holiday. So ended a wonderful day which no

GLENNIE MEMORIAL SCHOOL, TOOWOOMBA

Principal: MISS LAWRENCE.

GLENNIE PREPARATORY SCHOOL, TOOWOOMBA

Principal: MISS SUTTON.

Church of England School for Girls, Toowoomba. Under control of the Brisbane Diocesan Council.

Patron: His Grace the Archbishop of Brisbane.

THE GLENNIE MEMORIAL SCHOOL gives Education up to Senior and Matriculation standard. Specialities: Music, Singing and Art.
 THE PREPARATORY SCHOOL receives pupils up to 13 years of age, and prepares candidates for the State Scholarship Examination.

Reduction for Sisters.

Fees for both Schools on application.

one who was present is likely to forget. Special carriages were attached to the 5.50 p.m. train from Charters Towers, and by that some 300 people returned to Townsville.

The perfect arrangements perfectly carried out were due to Canon Halse, the headmaster, and to the hearty way in which all, boys as well as masters, did their part.

The tone of the school is evidently very good indeed in every way. The relationship between masters and boys is so natural, and yet the discipline is good, boys and masters equally feel that they are members of a body. There is a natural homey atmosphere which is delightful, and religion is just as natural a part of the atmosphere as anything else. It was an inspiration to see how naturally the boys entered into the religious part of the proceedings, and how naturally they took part in the dignified ceremonial. There was no suggestion of self-consciousness. To pray, to sing, to worship, was just as natural as to play tennis or join into the songs and good humour at the planting of the trees, or to eat their meals, or attend to their guests.

The Church in North Queensland has much to be thankful for in the founding of All Souls, and it is going to have a very great and important part to play in the strengthening of the Church in Queensland. We in the North especially need to thank God for the work of the Bishop of North Queensland, Canon Halse, and the Masters of the School.

The fees are only £50 a year with extra for laundry. It seems impossible that it can be done for so little, and to ensure such good and cheap education. It is of vital importance such a chance should be within the reach of all, not only the children of the rich—Churchmen ought to rally to the support of the school. There are now 75 boarders in the school, and there is accommodation at present for 90.

We should make it possible for far more to be taken, and of course the more there are the easier will be the financial strain.

Finally, All Souls is a memorial to those Queenslanders who died in the war. What better memorial could we have than a school where boys will be trained in the lessons of devotion and self-sacrifice of which our men gave such a noble example?

Carpentarian Association

The Association was represented at the celebration of Holy Communion for the Province of Queensland which was held at S. Martin's, Trafalgar Square, London, on June 14, 1921, and which was a very inspiring service. The celebrant was Father Wigram of the Society of S. John the Evangelist, Cowley, who worked for some years as a parish priest in the Diocese of Brisbane before he joined the Cowley Fathers. The preacher was Father Waggett, S.S.J.E. A meeting on behalf of the Province was held on the same day, of which Dr. Kidd, the Warden of Keble College, was chairman; and the speakers were the Coadjutor-Bishop of Brisbane, Rev. Walter Scott (late of Brisbane), and the Rev. F. Proctor of North Queensland. The alms were given to S. Francis' College, Nundah. The annual meeting of the Association was held, at the invitation of Mrs. Mayne, at her house in Queen's Gate, South Kensington, on June 30th. There was a good attendance. The Vicar of S. Peter's, Cranly Gardens, took the chair, and amongst the speakers were the Rev. C. B. Mirrlees and Mrs. Zahel.

Church Schools in North Queensland.

The following particulars should be known by all churchmen. There are four church schools in the Diocese of North Queensland, one for boys, three for girls. They are:

All Souls, Charters Towers, for boys, with 75 boarders.

S. Gabriel's, Charters Towers, for girls, with 25 girls.

S. Anne's, Townsville, for girls, with 150 girls (60 boarders).

S. Mary's, Herberton, for girls, with 100 boarders.

To S. Mary's is attached a preparatory school for small boys who may go on to All Souls.

In the establishment of these schools the sum of about £28,000 has been spent, and of this about £22,000 has been raised, partly in England but the greater part in Australia. Let us relieve the Bishop of anxiety and help the masters and mistresses, the boys and girls, by removing that debt of £600. It means a regular donation of the interest which has to be paid.

Christ Church, Darwin.

The chief event of importance here since the last issue of "The Carpentarian" has been the visit of the Bishop. His Lordship arrived on Sunday afternoon, July 17th, and such is the nature of the boat service here that he was unable to leave until Sunday, August 14th. The Bishop stayed, by the kind invitation of the Administrator, at Government House.

A reception was held at the Rectory to welcome the Bishop, when a large number of Church people were present to meet His Lordship and hear of his experiences in England during his visit there for the Lambeth Conference.

The Bishop gave confirmation on Sunday night, July 24th, to twenty candidates, a record number for Darwin. There was a very large congregation, a great number being unable to get into the church, who, however, owing to the mildness of the climate and the many open French doors, were able to take part in the service. The preparation of the candidates had concluded the previous evening with an address by the Bishop, after a day of intercession, which was very well attended. Each of the candidates has been provided with a confirmation Godparent, according to the Third Rubric after the Catechism in the Prayer Book. It is hoped that by this means in years to come the number of lapsed communicants will be greatly lessened and that church people here will learn to have a greater sense of responsibility for the younger members of the Church.

Owing to our poor means of communication, the Bishop was unable to go down the line to Pine Creek during his stay.

The Ladies' Working Guild has taken in hand the task of beautifying the sanctuary. Some difference has already been made, but it is hoped that with the proceeds of a Moonlight Fete in the Rectory grounds in October, much more will be able to be done. The Guild also hopes to run a stall for Missions, which is to be more or less of a permanency, open only while boats are in port for the sale of aboriginal curios to through passengers to and from Singapore and the East.

We are hoping to see the Bishop again in November or December on his way overland from the Roper River. Confirmation classes are again being held, and it is hoped there will be another fifteen or twenty candidates ready to receive confirmation when the Bishop comes through.

The Truth of Christianity.

BY LIEUT.-COL. TURTON.

London: Wells, Gardiner, Darton Ltd.
 515 pp. Price in Australia, 3/-.

We welcome a new edition, the ninth, of this popular manual, and if our notice of it is late, that is only because our copy from the publishers did not reach us sooner. It has become a text book, and we have an idea that most of the many thousands of copies sold have been studied by theological students, of more than one denomination; for that reason the reduced price, the lowness of which in these days we cannot explain, is a recommendation. This manual of Apologetics repeats fairly and concisely all the arguments for and against Christian Evidences, and is for its purpose excellent. The author has not grasped the standpoint of modern critics who are Christians; that is not to be wondered at, for since this work was planned and first published, the centre of interest and the centre of attack have shifted; the hostile German criticism of the nineteenth century has now been ignominiously routed, and all its positions abandoned.

Quite recent research has brought new problems to light; since the present century began, the study of the holy books for instance is affected and their interpretation influenced by discoveries of archaeologists by knowledge gained from the papyri and ostraka, by the study of the mystery cults and the apocalyptic literature, and by the progress of psychology. A preacher will therefore fail to convince his hearers by using the arguments of this book, but they are valuable as showing that all the arguments against Christianity which have become popular have been effectively answered. The most useful part is the third (the fourth of older editions) occupying more than half the volume. We wish for a new book dealing in the same popular manner with the assertions of such as Winckler, Schmiedel, Carpenter.

PAROCHIAL STATISTICS.

† Some adults and children not enrolled in Schools are receiving regular instruction.

+ Vacant: the Bishop of Carpentaria has ministered as far as possible.

* Including aboriginals and aliens.

PAROCHIAL FINANCES

(To the nearest pound sterling)

F. W. SLADE, Hon. Diocesan Secretary.

F. W. SLADE, Hon. Diocesan Secretary.

1921.

Diocese of Carpentaria.

Bishop:

RT. REV. HENRY NEWTON, D.D.
Thursday Island, Queensland.

Administrator:

REV. F. W. SLADE, B.A.

Sub-Dean:

REV. F. W. SLADE, B.A.

Diocesan Secretary:

REV. F. W. SLADE, B.A., Thursday Island.

Commissaries:

REV. CHANCELLOR PONSONBY, M.A., The Rectory, Devonport, England.
REV. J. JONES, M.A., 242 Pitt Street, Sydney.
REV. W. P. GLOVER, Th.L., Warwick, Q.
REV. J. W. ASHTON, M.A., St. Kilda, Melbourne, V.
REV. C. R. NIBBLEES, Springhill, Maesmore, Gloucester, England.

Clergy:

REV. B. S. COLE, Cooktown.
REV. C. W. LIGHT, Darwin.
REV. F. W. SLADE, B.A., Thursday Island.
REV. E. TAFES, Mossman.
REV. HAROLD THOMPSON, Normanton.

Honorary Lay Readers:

MR. H. F. L. FINNISS, Darwin
MR. D. A. ROBERTS, Darwin.

Diocesan Council:

REV. F. W. SLADE, B.A. | MR. GEO. CLARK,
REV. J. J. E. DONE, | MR. GILSON FOXTON.
REV. G. A. LUSCOMBE, | MR. A. SULLIVAN.

Honorary Legal Adviser:

HIS HONOUR JUDGE MACNAUGHTON.

Aboriginal Mission, Mitchell River:

MR. J. W. CHAPMAN. | Miss CRUTCH.
REV. H. MATTHEWS, J.P. | Mrs. MATTHEWS.
(Supt.) | Miss F. SMITH.
MR. E. C. TONKIN.
J. Geibo, T. Solomon, J. Savo.

Roper River Mission:

MR. DYER. | Miss CROSS.
REV. R. D. JOYNT. | Mrs. DYER.
REV. H. E. D. WARREN | Mrs. FORBES.
(Supt.) |
MR. WALTER FORBES.
MR. H. L. PERRIMAN.

Torres Straits Mission:

REV. J. J. E. DONE. | *REV. JOSEPH LUI.
REV. G. A. LUSCOMBE. | *REV. POEY PASSI.
REV. W. H. MACFARLANE, | *Mrs. LUSCOMBE.
(Th.L.) | †HARRY CAPTAIN.
†BANNI.
* Native Deacons.
†Native Teacher. | †Native Lay Missionary.
DEACONESS HATTON, Thursday Island.

The Diocese.

The See was founded in 1900, and consists of such part of Queensland as is bounded by the sea on the north and east, by the Northern Territory on the west, and by a line drawn from lat. S. 19deg. 30min. on the western boundary of Queensland due east to par. 144deg. E. and thence N. to lat. S. 16deg. 40min. and thence east to the sea, together with the whole of the Northern Territory, comprising an area of not less than 620,000 square miles. The population, which is very widely scattered over this immense area, consists of about 10,000 whites, 5,000 Japanese, Chinese, and other aliens, and 35,000 aboriginals. The white population is mainly mining and pastoral. The See town is Thursday Island, a pearling centre north of Cape York.

Finance.

The Diocese has no endowments beyond the Bishop's income of £395 per annum. Every parish needs a grant from central funds which come from subscriptions to the Diocese, and grants from English Societies.

Missions.

Missions are carried on amongst the Japanese at Thursday Island; the South Sea Islanders; the aboriginals on the Mitchell and Roper Rivers; and among the Islanders of the Torres Straits.

Special Offertories.

On Easter Day the offertories are given to the Clergyman of the Parish, and on Good Friday to the Australian Board of Missions.

The "Church Standard."

Posted to any Address for 6s. 6d. per Annum.

The CHURCH STANDARD holds the unique position of being the only independent weekly paper published in the interests of the Church of England in Australasia.

Published every Friday Morning.

Appeals to all Members of the Church of England, Members of the C.E.M.S., Churchwardens, Sidesmen and Parochial Councillors, Sunday School Teachers, Lay Readers, Catechists, and Clergy.

Specimen Copies on application to

THE CHURCH PUBLISHING CO. LTD.,
ROYAL INSURANCE BUILDINGS, 16 SPRING STREET, SYDNEY.

St. Margaret's, Brisbane.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND HIGH SCHOOL FOR GIRLS

Under the management of the Sisters of the Society of the Sacred Advent

Pupils prepared for examinations of the University of Queensland, Public Service and Associated Board R.A.

There are two Boarding Houses beautifully situated in extensive grounds overlooking the Brisbane River

BOARDERS RECEIVED FROM THE AGE OF EIGHT

FOR PROSPECTUS APPLY SISTER IN-CHARGE

St. Catharine's, Stanthorpe.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND HIGH SCHOOL FOR GIRLS

Under the management of the Sisters of the Society of the Sacred Advent

Pupils prepared for examinations of the University of Queensland, and Associated Board R.A.

Additional House secured

Increased Accommodation for Boarders

FOR PROSPECTUS APPLY SISTER-IN-CHARGE

Church of England Girls' Schools

UNDER THE MANAGEMENT OF THE
SISTERS OF THE SACRED ADVENT.

S. ANNE'S, TOWNSVILLE, Quarterly Fees for Boarders £10 10s.

S. MARY'S, HERBERTON " " " £15 15s.

Pupils prepared for Queensland University and Associated Board R.A. Examinations.
Commercial Subjects taught. Open-air sleeping accommodation if required.

In connection with S. Mary's, Herberton, there is a separate House for Boys under nine years of age. Quarterly Fees, £12 10s.

Diocese of Carpentaria.

INTERCESSION PAPER

Oct., Nov., Dec., 1921.

THANKSGIVINGS.

Let us give thanks :

1. For the work of Archbishop Donaldson in the Province of Queensland.
2. For the life and work of Cecil Druitt, Bishop.
3. For the election of the Metropolitan of Queensland, and of the Bishop of Grafton.
4. For the Church Schools in North Queensland.
5. For Confirmations in the Islands, Thursday Island, Darwin, Normanton and Croydon.

We thank Thee and praise Thee, O Lord.

INTERCESSIONS.

Let us pray :

1. For the help and guidance of the Holy Spirit for the newly elected Metropolitan of Queensland, and for the Bishop of Grafton.
2. For the work of G. A. St. Clair Donaldson, Bishop of Salisbury.
3. For the election of a Bishop for New Guinea.
4. For the blessing of God upon the Church Schools in North Queensland.
5. For the Community of the Ascension.
6. For all who have been confirmed in the Diocese of Carpentaria.
7. For the Missionaries and their work on the Roper River and on Groote Island.

We beseech Thee to hear us, good Lord.

3.05
LA

UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS LIBRARY

125 1922

The Carpenterian

FOR THE DIOCESE OF CARPENTARIA, NORTH AUSTRALIA.

Vol. XXII.—No. 85.]

THURSDAY ISLAND, JANUARY 2, 1922.

[PRICE 2/6 A YEAR.

PUBLISHED ON THE FIRST DAY OF EACH QUARTER.

POST FREE.]

NOTICE.

All communication to be addressed to the Editor of The Carpenterian, Bishop's House, Thursday Island, to whom subscriptions may be sent. Subscription, 2/6 per annum, post free.

The address of the Secretary for the Carpenterian Association in England is Miss Theodora Searth, Bearsted, Kent, England.

NOTICE TO CONTRIBUTORS.

All contributions of Parish News, etc., must reach the Editor before the last day of February, May, August, and November in each year.

The Bishop's Movements.

I left Brisbane on Saturday, September 24th, for Lismore, N.S.W., and went on to Sydney, via Tenterfield, on the following Tuesday, arriving in Sydney in time for the first of the Bishop's meetings on Wednesday afternoon, Sept. 28th. The week was a very busy one with meetings at Bishops Court morning and afternoon. Then came General Synod from October 4th to October 12th, with sessions on some days morning, afternoon, and evening. I had to leave on Wednesday, October 12th, before the business was finished, as I could not be sure of boats, and there were things to be done in and about Brisbane. I left Brisbane by the Gladstone mail on October 21st, caught the Bingera there on Saturday, transhipped to the Kuranda in Townsville on the following Monday, and arrived at Port Douglas on Tuesday, October 25th. The week was spent in the Mossman—Port Douglas parish, and I returned to Cairns by the Kuranda on Thursday, November 3. There I was fortunate enough to catch the Changsia the same day for Thursday Island. We had a good quick trip, and I was home on the Saturday afternoon. The four days I was on the Island were very busy days, and I left for Darwin by the Marella on November 10th. We arrived there early on Sunday morning, but had to wait for the doctor, and so did not get ashore until just before morning service. During my stay in the Territory I was able to visit Pine Creek, but only for a day. I returned to Thursday Island by the Marella.

Resignation of the Bishop.

The second bishop of Carpentaria, the Right Reverend Henry Newton, D.D., has sent his resignation of the See to the Metropolitan of the Province of Queensland, to take effect on January 24th, 1921, on his acceptance of the See of New Guinea, to which he has been elected by the Bishops of Australia.

The present bishop has occupied the See of Carpentaria for a little over six years. He was consecrated on St. Matthew's Day, September 21st, 1915, in St. John's Cathedral, Brisbane, by the Archbishop of Brisbane, assisted by the Bishops of New Guinea, North Queensland, and Bishop Stone-Wigg. On the same day the Right Reverend H. F. Le Fanu was consecrated Co-adjutor to the Archbishop of Brisbane.

Letter from the Bishop.

My dear People,—

The time has come for me to wish you good-bye, as I have accepted translation to New Guinea. I am, for many reasons, sorry to resign the See of Carpentaria. I have been very happy amongst you for more than six years, and I think I have made many friends. There are, I believe, interesting developments in the work of the Church in the Diocese, and especially in the Missionary work. It has been a great pleasure to get to visit the outback people, and to minister to them, and one of my greatest regrets is that those visits must come to an end. It has been a joy to see how the work of the Torres Straits Mission has prospered, the Mitchell River Mission has developed, and to know that the extension of the Roper River Mission to Groote Island has been taken in hand. I wish I could leave them all free of debt, so that progress would be unhampered by the need for economy. If only the church-people of Australia could be made to realize what wonderful work the missionaries in the Diocese of Carpentaria are doing, how unselfish and self-sacrificing they are, and how God has blessed their work, what a power to uplift is the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ, then not only would all that is needed to carry on the work be supplied, but also it would be possible to extend that work. It has been proved that the aborigines can be raised to a high level of spiritual life and of economic value.

To the clergy of the diocese, and to the members on the staffs of the various missions I would offer my thanks for all the loyal help and devotion I have received from them. Seldom has a bishop had a more loyal and devoted staff, and what has been done is due almost entirely to them. It is a wrench to have to part from them in active work. I want also to thank the laity of the diocese for all the work that they have done, and for the many kindnesses I have received from them personally. I have had dreams and plans for developing the work of the church amongst the people of our own race and colour, and amongst the aborigines and other races in the diocese. The war, and the depression and difficulties following the war have made it impossible to attempt to carry these out, and now the course of the future must be decided by another. We have had to be content to carry on and do the best we could under difficulties. We, bishop and clergy, could not have done so much but for the loyal help of the laity, and I believe the laity of the diocese are realizing more fully their duties and responsibilities.

When the Bishop of New Guinea was elected Archbishop of Brisbane, and Metropolitan of Queensland in September last, at once all those who know most of New Guinea and of me said I ought to go to New Guinea. I could not refuse to listen to the advice of those who had a right to say what is best for the Church and as I am freer than most to go wherever and do whatever it is thought right for me to do, I ought to go and do it, and so when other openings were closed I accepted.

I go back to where I began work as a missionary 22 years ago, and where I worked for 16 years. It will be in many ways difficult work, and I am sure that I may depend on the prayers of the Church in the Diocese of Carpentaria for the blessing and the guidance of God upon the work of the New Guinea Mission.

May God Almighty bless you all in all things and at all times.

I am,

Yours affectionately in Christ Jesus our Lord.

HENRY, Bishop of Carpentaria.

The Bishop-Elect of Carpentaria.

As we go to press the news is received that the Reverend Stephen Harris Davies has accepted the offer of the Bishopric of Carpentaria made to him by the Bishops of Queensland. The appointment is most thankworthy and hopeful. Mr. Davies was formerly Head of the Bush Brotherhood at Charleville, where he did splendid work in the great area of country which the Brotherhood serves. We understand that he intends to leave England early in the New Year, and it is hoped that he will be consecrated in Brisbane on March 25th. We invite our readers to pray for God's richest blessing upon him in preparing himself for his new office.

Mossman and Port Douglas.

The bishop arrived in the parish on Tuesday, October 25th, and spent a week in Mossman and Port Douglas. The sugar season, which has been a very successful one in every way, was just coming to an end, and the floating population, which is large for the harvesting, was rapidly leaving the district. On the festival of S.S. Simon and Jude the bishop celebrated the Holy Communion at S. David's, Mossman, confirmed one candidate, and preached at Evensong, and on the following Sunday he again celebrated the Holy Communion, and preached at Mattins and Evensong. There were large congregations at all the Sunday services. On the Saturday, Mr. and Mrs. Taffs gave an at home at the Rectory to enable the bishop to meet the parishioners.

A little more work has been done to the Stone Church, and some of the pillars are rising. There is a sum of about £80 in hand, and it is hoped that another £80 will be raised by a parochial effort early next year, so that during 1922 a good deal more may be done. It is slow and tedious work, but the result will be worth patience and perseverance. Perhaps when the building has more shape the Church people in Mossman will take more interest and pride in the building.

The bishop returned to Port Douglas on Monday, October 31st. He preached that night at Evensong, and celebrated the Holy Communion on All Saints' Day. The ladies arranged for a very successful at home in the School of Arts, Port Douglas, to give the bishop an opportunity of meeting the people. It is impossible for him to get to see all when visiting the parish.

Some of the ladies have been busy getting together some funds for the painting of the church, and a tender for the work has been accepted. They do not intend to rest on their oars, but are already doing something for the beautifying of the altar.

Missions.

The Rev. J. J. E. and Mrs. Done, with their children, are to be away for three months' furlough early this year. Mr. MacFarlane and Mr. Schomberg will do what they can to provide the people of the Western Islands with the Sacraments during the absence of Mr. Done. May their furlough be a time of physical and spiritual refreshment to Mr. and Mrs. Done. Travelling at sea constantly with the anxieties of work on seven islands is a severe tax on any man, and Mrs. Done does not see much of her husband when he is "at home."

Mr. Warren, of the Roper River Mission, has begun to put up the buildings on Groote Island, and Mr. Dyer with Mr. Perrimon have been there for some weeks getting things ready for the new station there.

Mr. Warren came across from Groote Island to Thursday Island at the end of October for stores, and also to take the Bishop to the Mission. He had a wonderful trip across the Gulf, doing the trip in less than three days.

The Bishop intended going to the Roper River Mission in November, to visit the new site at Groote Island, and to ordain Mr. Joynt priest at the Roper River Mission Station. It would have been specially appropriate that Mr. Joynt should receive Priest's Orders amongst the people for whose spiritual welfare he has given 13 years' work, and that Mr. Warren should be able to take part in the service. But it was not to be. It was very important that the Bishop should get back to Thursday Island early in December, as he is to leave for New Guinea early in January. The plan was for Mr. Warren to take the Bishop across in the "Holly" to call at Groote Island, and at the Roper River Mission Station, ordain Mr. Joynt there, and then ride the 200 miles to the head of the railway line from Darwin. But the trains from Darwin are fortnightly, and when the Rector of Darwin wired the dates as November 24th and December 8th, it was obvious those would not do. The Bishop would not have time to get to Katherine by November 24th and December 8th would mean missing the steamer for Thursday Island at Darwin. Wires were sent, enquiring the cost of a special train about December 4th, but when the answer was £131!—the distance is 200 miles—that was out of the question. The Bishop was prepared to spend £50 for the pleasure of visiting the Roper. Mr. Warren suggested bringing the Bishop back in the "Holly," leaving out Darwin, either to the Mitchell or to Thursday Island. That would mean travelling in the Gulf, late in December, when Mr. Warren went back, and the Bishop thought the risk too great. So it had to be decided that Mr. Warren go across as quickly as possible, and send Mr. Joynt to Darwin to meet the Bishop. As there would be no delays, he might catch the train on November 24th, which he did by forced marches. The Administrator of the Northern Territory kindly arranged for fresh horses to be waiting for Mr. Joynt at Mataranka, and Mr. Earle the manager of Elsey Downs also lent him a fresh horse. This made it possible to get to Katherine the day before the train left.

Mr. J. W. Chapman, of the Mitchell River Mission, returned from furlough to Thursday Island by the Changsha on Saturday, November 5th. Mrs. Trellogen arrived by the same boat to join the staff of the Mitchell River Mission to take the place of Miss Crutch, who had to resign owing to ill-health. The Francis Pritt was waiting in Thursday Island, and Mr. Chapman and Mrs. Trellogen were able to get away from Thursday Island on November 9th.

The "Francis Pritt" made her last trip before the wet at the end of November for stores for the wet season. The Mitchell will be cut off from outside communication till April next. The members of the staff may get a mail now and again overland from Normanton, if somebody happens to be coming that way, but it is doubtful.

The Right Reverend Gerald Sharp, Archbishop of Brisbane, was bishop of New Guinea for more than eleven years. He was consecrated in St. John's Cathedral, Brisbane, on St. Mark's Day, 1910. He was very disappointed when the doctors told him it would be a risky experiment for him to return to New Guinea. He would not have allowed himself to be nominated for Brisbane but for the opinion of the doctors. There has been great progress and development of the Mission during the eleven years of the Episcopate of the second Bishop of New Guinea.

Every Churchman should get and study the Report of the Australian Board of Missions, and the Report of the Church Missionary Society of Australia for the year 1920, which have lately been published.

On the staff of the New Guinea Mission there are 13 priests, two being Papuans, 5 Papuan deacons, 4 laymen, 16 ladies, 15 South Sea Islanders, 35 Papuan Mission Teachers, 19 Papuan Lay Readers, and 6 Papuan Pupil Teachers.

On the staff of the Melanesian Mission there are 24 priests, of whom nine are Melanesians, 7 deacons, of whom 6 are Melanesians, 4 laymen, 15 ladies, besides 641 Melanesian Lay workers.

So the two largest Missions of the Church in the Pacific are largely manned by native Christians.

The Australian Board of Missions is wholly or partly responsible for Mission Work in New Guinea, Melanesia, Torres Straits, Mitchell River, Yarrabah, Forrest River, China and Japan—and is wholly or partly responsible for the support of the Bishops. 44 priests (11 being native Christians), 13 deacons (12 being native Christian), 18 laymen, 52 ladies, and 722 native workers.

Besides the salaries and keep of these Missionaries, there are heavy travelling expenses, furloughs, schools, boats of various sizes, and buildings to be provided. The total income of the Board for 1920 from all sources was just over £37,000, and out of that organizing expenses had to be paid. So evidently the Church in Australia is not doing her share in work for which she is especially responsible. And great as is the work being done, there are people asking for light to whom it has to be denied, because the Church cannot adequately maintain existing work.

A copy of the report of the Australian Board of Missions for 1920 from which the above statistics are taken, can be obtained from the A.B.M. office, 242 Pitt Street, Sydney, price sixpence. Stamps can be sent as payment.

Ordination of the Rev. R. D. Joynt.

The Reverend Reginald Desmond Joynt, a member of the staff of the Roper River Mission, was ordained priest by the Bishop of Carpentaria in Christ Church, Darwin, on the second Sunday in Advent, December 4th, 1921. Mr. Joynt arrived in Darwin on November 25th by train from Katherine having ridden over 200 miles to the railhead in less than a week.

There was a daily celebration of the Holy Communion during the week preceding the ordination, as well as other services every day, and the Bishop gave addresses on the questions in the Examination of Candidates in the service for the ordination of Priests, in the Church Saturday, December 3rd, was kept as a day of Intercession when there was continuous prayer from 7 o'clock in the morning till 8 o'clock at night for God's blessing on the ordination, and for other matters parochial, diocesan, and missionary.

SUBSCRIPTIONS RECEIVED.

Mrs. F. S. Jones 3/-, Mrs. Kirk, Mrs. Burnett, Miss E. M. Neame, Miss Davidson, Rev. G. A. Luscombe, Mrs. Allan, each 2/6; Rev. W. M. Wilkinson 10/-; per Mrs. Greig, Croydon—Miss Pass, Mrs. Greig, Mrs. Patteu, Mrs. Lee, Mrs. Shield, Mrs. Ogilvie, Mrs. Willocks, Mrs. Aplin, Mrs. Sabine, Mrs. Thomas, Mrs. Rains, each 2/6; per Rev. E. Taffs—Mrs. Crees, Miss Tunnie, each 2/6; per Mrs. Greig—Mrs. Ganly 2/6; per Rev. C. W. Light—Rev. C. W. Light 5/-, H. Iliffe 10/-; per Miss F. Byrnes—Cooktown subscribers, 12/6; per Rev. E. Taffs—Mrs. Chantry, 3/-; Rev. R. D. Joynt, 2/6.

Roper River Mission.

A RIDE OF 250 MILES FOR ORDINATION.

The following contains an interesting account of Mr. Joynt's trip from the Roper River Mission Station to the head of the line from Darwin. It may seem to many in better climates that 32 miles a day is not very much to travel by horse, even if it means every day for eight days. But conditions in the North in November are not the same as in other parts of Australia. Horses are grass-fed and soft, even the grass does not give the staying power which it does further south; the heavy sweltering heat at the time of the thunderstorms is very distressing to man and beast; while heavy thunderstorms may mean boggy tracks, and very slow travelling; then horses may stray at night or the pack-horses leave the track when travelling, which means a loss of time. Under the best conditions, 25 miles a day is a good stage in the far north for continuous travelling. One can double that, but it will probably mean killing the horses.

Since the arrival of the "Holly" at the Roper in May last, we have been preparing for Groote Eylandt, making every effort to occupy it, and have representatives of the Gospel on the Island. Sickness and death hindered us, but at last the party was able to leave for the Island, and after a thorough search and examination to decide on a site about two miles up a creek, the "Emerald," on the western side of the island. A petty and one house was built, and ground prepared for gardens. The party arrived back at the Roper in September, and soon afterwards the "Holly" left for Thursday Island for stores and to bring the Bishop over. On the way, Mr. Warren called at Groote Eylandt to leave Mr. Dyer and Mr. Perriman there to carry on while he was away. The plan was for Mr. Warren to call at Groote Eylandt on his return, pick up the two missionaries, come on to the Roper, and, after the Bishop's departure for Darwin, for the "Holly" to return to Groote Eylandt with three of the staff, and remain there during the wet season.

Meantime we at the Roper were preparing in accordance with the plan. There was a full programme for the bishop, a baptism, a confirmation, a wedding, and an ordination. On Friday nights special hymns were taught the children, the instruction for baptism and confirmation was nearing completion. One of the staff had composed two verses of welcome to the bishop. I was drilling the children for a fitting reception of the bishop, when the "Holly" should arrive, when we got a wire from Mr. Warren to say that the bishop's movements were uncertain. We were disappointed, but we hoped for the best. We knew the bishop would come if he could possibly do so, and we continued our preparations.

On Tuesday, November 15th, at 10 p.m., the "Holly" arrived sooner than we expected her. Most of us were asleep. I jumped up and rushed down to the jetty in my pyjamas to welcome the party. Imagine my disappointment when Mr. Warren called out, "No Bishop."

We soon learnt the reason of it, and that I was to do what at first seemed impossible, ride to Katherine, catch the train on the 24th to meet the bishop in Darwin, so as to be ordained to the Priesthood there in Christ Church.

We could only muster three horses in the time fit for the journey, and I left at 10 a.m. the next morning, with a black-boy and one pack-horse. I had before me an average of about 32 miles a day if I were to be sure of the train. Day and night we travelled, through thunder and lightning and rain, mud and scrub. Sometimes the boy took me a short cut, they never, it seemed to me, saved time, and they were always through rough country.

One horse got so puffy that I was afraid I should have to leave the packs, and just carry a small swag on my own horse, but we managed to push on to Elsey Station, as we had a cool day, after a thunderstorm. By the kindness of the manager, I was able to leave one horse at Elsey and get a fresh one to go on with. At Mataranka I was able to get fresh horses, which made all the difference on the last 90 miles. We arrived at Maranboy in good time, and on the last two stages from there to Katherine I travelled in company with the mailman. We arrived at Katherine at 4.30 p.m. on Wednesday, November 23rd. I was able to breathe freely. We were in time for the train, and all our hard days and nights, sometimes tuckerless, as we would not "pull off" for fear of the horses straying and so losing time, were not in vain.

I started from the Roper with some cooked damper and tinned meats. We did not cook anything on the way, getting to camp late at night, and starting at daylight in the morning, our damper was soon very dry, and covered with mildew. My blackboy was very good; he agreed with me to sink our personal feelings and appetites until the winning post was passed, and then to make up for lost time, which we did. Again and again we tried to get ahead of our schedule, but so sure as we managed it one day we lost the next. Once we got over our distance by going on well into the night, but our horses strayed back to the water we had passed, and we lost time looking for them the next morning. Once we had a frightful storm, with thunder and lightning which terrified the horses.

It was a pleasure to meet the bishop at Pine Creek, on the way to Darwin. We had a service there on Thursday night, a celebration of Holy Communion the next morning, and arrived in Darwin on Friday, November 25th, in good time. "Praise God from Whom all blessings flow!"

R. D. JOYNT.

Personal Notes.

The Right Reverend G. A. St. Clair Donaldson left Brisbane for England on November 2nd. He travelled overland to Adelaide to catch the "Narkunda" there. He hoped to be in England early in December, and arrangements were made for his enthronement in Salisbury Cathedral on the feast of St. Thomas, December 21st.

The Church people in Brisbane gave the Archbishop a great send-off in the Exhibition Hall on the night of October 28th, 1921. It was the feast of S.S. Simon and Jude, on which festival the Archbishop was consecrated in St. Paul's Cathedral, London, seventeen years ago.

There were many farewell functions to show the love and respect the Archbishop had gained. One of the most important was an "at home," given by the citizens of Brisbane in the University Grounds on Saturday, October 29th.

The Right Reverend Gerald Sharp, D.D., was enthroned as Archbishop of Brisbane on November 16th in the Cathedral Church of St. John. The sermon at the enthronement was preached by the Bishop of Goulburn.

The Right Reverend J. W. Ashton was consecrated bishop for the See of Grafton in the Cathedral Church of St. Andrew, Sydney, on the Feast of St. Andrew, November 30th, 1921.

The Reverend G. A. Luscombe was engaged in doing deputation work for the Australian Board of Missions in Victoria during October and November.

The Reverend F. W. Slade, Sub-dean of the Cathedral, Thursday Island, and vicar of the Cathedral parish has been appointed vicar-general of the diocese of Carpentaria during the voidance of the See by the Metropolitan of the Province of Queensland, the most Reverend the Archbishop of Brisbane.

When a See becomes vacant owing to the death or resignation of the bishop or from other causes, the Metropolitan of the Province becomes administrator of the See, ex-officio—and he usually appoints a priest to act for him as his vicar-general.

The Rev. J. B. Drabble, some time Rector of Darwin, returned from England early this year, and is working in the diocese of Willochra.

The Venerable the Archdeacon of Willochra—the Rev. E. J. Nash, M.A.,—is at present in England, and has kindly undertaken to speak and preach for the Carpentarian Association in England on behalf of the diocese of Carpentaria. The Archdeacon's knowledge of the diocese and of its needs is very great and up-to-date, and his interest in the diocese very sincere. We are grateful to him for this help, and we know he will enjoy speaking about Thursday Island, the Mitchell River Mission, and the Torres Straits. One of his greatest joys when he was subdean of the Cathedral, was to take visitors to Thursday Island over the Cathedral, explain the interesting memories preserved there, and the story of the "Quetta."

The Rev. J. Jones, Chairman of the Australian Board of Missions, and some time Subdean of the Cathedral, Thursday Island, has been appointed Vicar of All Saints, St. Kilda, Melbourne, in succession to the Right Rev. J. W. Ashton, who has been consecrated to be Bishop of Grafton.

The Community of the Ascension.

Three priests were professed as the first members of the Community of the Ascension on the Feast of St. Michael and All Angels, September 29th, 1921. Father Jeyes, of the Community of the Resurrection, Mirfield, England, has come out to Australia for a time to give the new community the benefit of his advice and experience. The community has its home for the present, at Old Bishopthorpe, near Goulburn. The first three members of the Community of the Ascension are the Rev. E. C. Kempe, the Rev. S. Homersham, and the Rev. R. M. Kelly.

It is to be hoped that others will find a vocation and help to keep before the Church in Australia the supreme importance of spiritual things, by the abandonment of material blessings.

The Carpenterian

FOR THE DIOCESE OF CARPENTARIA.
NORTH AUSTRALIA.

Vol. XXII., No. 85. Thursday Island, Jan. 2, 1922

The Legal Nexus.

The question which aroused most interest and produced the keenest debates in General Synod, 1921, was without doubt the question of the Legal Nexus. When it was being debated the galleries were full, and at times the interest of visitors manifested itself in applause, faint yet noticeable, and the President had to say that the galleries would have to be closed if visitors did not restrain themselves. Probably the debate was the most educative one ever held in General Synod.

It is a little unfortunate that, in discussing the question in the Press, and in ordinary every day life people talk of the "Nexus" question. It is a bad habit we have got into, and it leads to slovenly thinking, to cut down phrases and expressions and titles of subject to something short and convenient. The Nexus is the connection between the various branches of the Church Catholic, and in the present particular between the various branches of the Anglican Communion, and when people write and talk of breaking the Nexus, there is some excuse for pressmen and others who have not thought out the question to translate that into the convenient expression, and the catchy head line, "Cutting the Painter." And as that expression has a political signification, it tends to confuse the issue.

The Nexus, which binds together the various parts of the Anglican Communion is Spiritual. It is the life which each part receives in common because of its union with our Blessed Lord and it finds its expression in loyalty to the common Lord, in the common faith and sacraments and order. There cannot be a breaking of that Nexus, which would be schism, except by the acceptance by one part or another of some heretical teaching, or by some rejection of what is fundamental in faith or order. And this spiritual life, this nexus, is independent altogether of the accidentals such as forms and ceremonies which express the life, and may be different in different times, under different conditions, and for different peoples.

But there is a Legal Nexus, in Acts of Parliament and trust deeds, which confines the expression of spiritual life to particular methods. In the early days of the Church in Australia, our fathers rightly accepted the methods of the church in England as the expression of spiritual life, and we hold our property under trusts so defined, and can only settle matters in non-essentials in accordance with what is decided by the Church in England, living under different conditions. We cannot alter the prayer-book; we cannot add or take away rites and ceremonies; we cannot adapt the Catholic Faith and Sacraments we have received so that these may have their effective influence in moulding the character and shaping the destiny of this new race sprung from the old stock, which is having its definite character formed by the conditions under which we live in the Southern Seas. There is an Australian nation with its own peculiar gifts and outlook. We inherit the common tradition of our race, the love of liberty, the ideals of our fathers, and it is such things as these with the outward expression of a common language and loyalty to the throne which binds the Empire into one. In the political world we have recognised that giving to the dominions within the Empire the right to order their own life has not weakened the tie between the Motherland and her children, and we may well believe that in spiritual life we should have the same liberty to order the externals, the expression of life in the way best suited to our conditions and needs. The exercise of this right and duty has not destroyed the spiritual nexus between the Church in England, the Church in Canada, and the Church in South Africa. Even a greater change has not broken the Spiritual nexus between the Church in England and the Dominions with the Church in the United States of America. The unity of the Spiritual life, the reality of the Spiritual nexus was manifested when the Bishops of the Anglican Communion from all parts of the world, England, Scotland, Ireland, and the Dominions, America, and the Mission Field assembled at the Lambeth Conference, and knelt together to receive the Holy Communion in Westminster Abbey and in St. Paul's.

One reason why the doctrine, sacraments, and discipline of the Christian Church may rightly be called Catholic, is that they are adaptable to perfect the various gifts of the various sections of the human race as of individual members of the race. The very Catholicity demands variety of expression, adaptability to circumstances. We look not for a barren uniformity of expressing life and character, but the perfecting of each gift for the glory and beauty of the whole. It is a matter of life not of mechanics. The fullness of meaning of the Catholic Faith can only be manifested when it has received expression from the various minds of the human race, and the glory of the whole when it has polished all the jewels to be set in the Crown of our Lord. And the breaking of the Legal Nexus has a real bearing and connection with Reunion. The Church must be free to approach other bodies of Christians unhampered by bonds which in non-essentials tie her to the past, and to other conditions of life.

The severing of the Legal Nexus is but the application in the twentieth century of the root principle of the Reformation in the sixteenth century, and the conditions are closely parallel. When the break-up of the Roman Empire came with the breaking through the barriers of Roman civilization by the Huns and Goths, the Papacy was the divinely appointed means by which the church in the west of Europe was saved, and the conquerors conquered, and during those periods of unrest before the nations of modern Europe were born it was the power of the Papacy which protected the weak and saved the Church. But when the nations of modern Europe were born, and national feelings demanded expression in religion, the power of the Papacy, which was now a hindrance, the legal nexus between Rome and the National Churches, had to be broken. In England the essential principle was asserted when it was decided by Church and Parliament that the Bishop of Rome had no authority over the Church of England, and this need have entailed no breach of the Spiritual connection between Rome and Canterbury had not Rome insisted on the recognition of Papal Power as a condition of Communion. To have accepted that would have been false to the Catholic organization of the Church; it would have savoured of heresy.

In the growth of the British Empire during the latter centuries it was essential that the Church in the Dominions in their earlier stages should be closely tied to the Church in England. But in time when nations were born, and the Church became strong enough to stand alone, to manage her own affairs, to order her own life, to influence the development of new nations, it becomes necessary for the legal nexus to be broken and the Church in any particular nation to become free. The daughter is grown up and must be free to be mistress in her own house. Australia is a nation, the Church must be free in all non-essentials so to order her life that she may be able to shape the destiny of the nation. Her work in that particular is difficult in these modern days under the best conditions, it is impossible if her hands are tied, if she is handicapped with a burden neither we nor our fathers were able to bear.

Meeting of the Diocesan Council.

An important meeting of the Diocesan Council was held at Bishop's House, Thursday Island, on Wednesday, November 9th. The Bishop was in the chair, and there were present, the Subdean of the Cathedral, the Rev. J. J. E. Done and Dr. Vernon. The Rev. W. H. MacFarlane was elected a member of the Council in the place of the Rev. G. A. Luscombe. It was decided to postpone all ordinary business till the next meeting. The Bishop announced that he had sent his resignation of the See to the Metropolitan of the Province as he had accepted translation to the See of New Guinea, and that the Metropolitan had appointed the Subdean, the Rev. F. W. Slade as Vicar-General to administer during the voidance of the See. He explained the procedure in the election of a Bishop for the See of Carpentaria as fixed by a Determination of General Synod, which gives the right of election to the Bishops of the Province of Queensland, until such time as there shall be a Synod of the Diocese of Carpentaria, after such consultation as may be possible with the clergy and laity of the Diocese. The Bishop gave it as his opinion that the Diocesan Council was the only body that represented the clergy and laity of the diocese, as it is elected by the Diocesan Conference, and the Metropolitan had evidently agreed to that as he had asked the Subdean to obtain the views of the Diocesan Council so that the Bishops could proceed to election without delay. It was decided on the suggestion of the Bishop, that the Rev. H. E. Warren of the Roper River Mission, the Rev. J. W. Schomberg, of the Torres Straits Mission, and Mr. J. W. Chapman of the Mitchell River Mission all of whom were in Thursday Island, be asked to attend the meeting of the Council to strengthen whatever opinion the Council came to. After some discussion it was decided that it was not advisable for the Council to suggest names to the bishops of the Province, but rather to express an opinion as to the qualifications needed in one to be elected Bishop of Carpentaria. Eventually it was decided to inform the Metropolitan, that in the opinion of the Diocesan Council, any one elected to be Bishop of Carpentaria should have had Australian bush experience such as would be gained as head of a Bush Brotherhood.

It was then proposed and carried that the parochial Councils in the diocese be informed of the decision of the Diocesan Council, and asked if they concurred, that this should be done by telegraph, and answers asked for by Monday, November 14th, and that as soon as the Diocesan Secretary had received word from the parochial Councils he should communicate with the Metropolitan.

The Rev. G. A. Luscombe, Clement Bellamy, Esq., and S. C. Donaldson, Esq., were the representatives for the Diocese of Carpentaria at General Synod. Mr. Bellamy is the Treasurer of the Australian Board of Missions, and Mr. Donaldson an enthusiastic worker for Missions, and a member of one of the Committees of A.B.M. It was appropriate that laymen interested in Missions should represent a Missionary Diocese.

General Synod.

The proceedings of General Synod, 1921, began with a corporate Communion in the Cathedral Church of S. Andrew, Sydney, at 10.30 a.m. on Tuesday, October 4th. The Primate was the celebrant, and the sermon was preached by the Most Reverend the Archbishop of Perth. All the bishops of Australia were present with their Chaplains, and a large number of the clerical and lay representatives. The Sydney Cathedral does not lend itself to such a function. It is difficult in the cramped space and the low chancel to have the dignified setting for important functions such as a Synod service, and dignity is not a thing to be despised.

The Synod met for its first session at 4 p.m. in the Chapter House, when the Primate delivered his address. The body of the Chapter House was filled with representatives, and the galleries were filled then and on many other times by the general public who followed the debates with keen interest. The only vacancies on the dais where the House of Bishops sat, were Melbourne and Grafton, both of which sees were vacant at the time of the meeting of General Synod.

There was a very full business paper, which grew as more and more notices of motion were given, and it was soon apparent that there was no hope of dealing satisfactorily with every part of the agenda, even though members had come prepared to work. Representatives from the distant dioceses, insisted first that meetings should be earlier than four in the afternoon, and, later on, that meetings should be held in the mornings as well as the afternoon, and they nearly carried a motion that Synod should sit on the Saturday morning. It was only consideration for the Primate, who had a very strenuous time, that defeated the motion, and the Secretaries had to plead that they could not get the printing of the daily agenda done to keep up with strenuous desires to use all available time, and more than once the President had to warn members, that they had better be careful to keep their agenda papers, as fresh ones might not be forthcoming the next day.

The representatives from distant dioceses claimed that some of them had come some two or three thousand miles to do business, and they were not prepared to waste time. The plea carried weight, and the earnest desire to do work was excellent.

At the same time they were not unreasonable as they agreed that contentious business should not be taken before 4 p.m. each day, which would enable Sydney folk to be present when it came on, while much formal business could be cleared out of the way in a smaller house. There was a noticeable determination that the Sydney diocese should not have too much influence, and a suspicion that some felt it had been considered too much in times gone by. The more important subjects on the agenda paper were those dealing with the Legal Nexus, the Reunion, the Ministry of Women, and other matters arising out of the report of the Lambeth Conference. The debate on the Legal Nexus was long and keenly contested, the chief opposition came from representatives of the Sydney Diocese, and a few of the older clergy and laity of the other dioceses. The Bishop of Bathurst, who was in charge of the subject, introduced it in a masterly speech, which took two hours and 45 minutes to deliver. The debate was begun on the evening of Wednesday, October 5th, and was continued on Thursday and Friday, on the second reading of a Determination brought forward by the General Synod Committee appointed to consider the question. When the vote was taken late on Friday night, it was found that all the bishops voted for the principle of the freedom of the Church in Australia, and they were supported by a majority of both clerical and lay representatives, the voting being: Bishops, 20, 0; Clergy, 55, 19; Laity, 48, 13. There was a scene of great excitement when the results were made known. Later on the Bishop of Bathurst announced that it had been decided not to continue with the Determination. As the principle was asserted by so overwhelming a majority, it was felt that it would be better to refer the matter to the Diocesan Synods and have a committee of General Synod to collate the suggestion received from the Diocesan Synods and after Conference to draw up a new Determination. This would also meet some of the objections of those who had voted against the principle. It is of great importance that on such a matter there should be general agreement, and the procedure would not take much longer.

It was a fine thing that Synod was willing to put aside the excitement of debate on such a question as the Legal Nexus, to listen to speeches on Missions, of the duty of the Church with regard to them, by the Archbishop of Brisbane, the Bishops of New Guinea and Gippsland, and Mr. C. R. Walsh.

A definite advance in dealing with Reunion was made in the election of a committee to work with Provincial Committees on the subject, and lines laid down on which discussion of the problems with representatives of other bodies of Christians could be carried on. The Lambeth suggestions were accepted, and the feeling of Synod was against free interchange of pulpits. The conditions of such interchange laid down at Lambeth were emphasised, and also the danger of hasty, ill-considered action.

There was a long debate on the Lambeth Proposals with regard to the ministry of women, but the subject had to be adjourned. There was not time for full consideration of a matter of such grave importance.

Determinations were passed accepting the representation of the dioceses in General Synod as fixed by rules passed in 1916 as such rules were almost certainly unconstitutional, allowing the Diocese of the North West to be included in the Province of West Australia, and dealing with other matters of less importance, but simplifying procedure of Synod.

There were resolutions passed dealing with matters of importance, and one wishing the Bishop Elect of Salisbury Godspeed in his new work, and expressing regret at the loss the Australian Church will suffer by his departure from Brisbane. Another congratulating the Bishop of New Guinea on his translation to Brisbane, gave the Bishop of New Guinea an opportunity of saying how little he would have considered leaving New Guinea but for the strong opinion of the doctors that he ought not to return.

The most striking speeches in the debates were made by the Bishop of Bathurst, the Archbishop of Perth, the Archbishop of Brisbane, and Mr. Justice Harvey. The plea of the Archbishop of Brisbane that various schools of thought have a right not merely to be tolerated but to be recognised in the Church was warmly applauded.

The hospitality of the Sydney parishes was lavish. Every day the members of Synod were entertained at tea in the Waratah Rooms. It is no wonder if, on the first night, the great crowd of hungry Synodsmen waiting to be fed, almost disorganised arrangements. It is a wonder how those responsible managed so well after their first experience of doing the apparently impossible. The Archbishop of Brisbane very graciously, and with much humour, thanked our hostesses for all they had done.

Synod came to an end on Wednesday, October 12th, with a short service of thanksgiving in the Cathedral, about 11 p.m., when the members were dismissed with the Primate's blessing. By this many representatives had left Sydney, and much business had to be left undone. What was done will be of very great importance to the Church in Australia.

The New Bishop of Grafton.

The Right Reverend J. W. Ashton, who was consecrated to be the second bishop of Grafton, on S. Andrew's Day, in S. Andrew's Cathedral, Sydney, was an exhibitioner of Hertford College, Oxford, and took first class Honors in the Mathematical School. He worked for some years in the diocese of Brisbane, as Rector of Bundaberg, and afterwards as Rector of S. Andrew's, South Brisbane. He returned to England where he was for a short time engaged in organizing work in connection with Sunday Schools, coming back to his old parish, S. Andrew's, South Brisbane, where he remained until his appointment to the important Melbourne parish, All Saints, S. Kilda. So the new bishop has had a good deal of experience in Australian Church life. He has been connected with the diocese of Carpentaria for many years as he was commissary for the first and second bishops of the diocese. We owe him a big debt of gratitude for finding our present subdean for us, when Archdeacon Nash left Thursday Island for Laura. Mrs. Ashton, who was Miss Anderson, is the daughter of the late Under-Secretary for Education in Queensland.

The election of the present Archbishop of Brisbane is the first under the new method of election, which was agreed to by the Brisbane Synod, when Queensland became a Province, their Bishop an Archbishop and Metropolitan of Queensland. The method of election is unique, and it worked so well on this occasion, that it is worth while giving an account of it. Other Provinces with their Metropolitan Sees might consider the advisability of adopting it.

There are two things to be considered, the Archbishop is the diocesan bishop of the Metropolitan See; he is also Metropolitan of the

GLENNIE MEMORIAL SCHOOL, TOOWOOMBA

Principal: MISS LAWRENCE.

*Church of England School for Girls, Toowoomba.GLENNIE PREPARATORY SCHOOL, TOOWOOMBA

Principal: MISS SUTTON.

Under control of the Brisbane Diocesan Council.

Patron: His Grace the Archbishop of Brisbane.

THE GLENNIE MEMORIAL SCHOOL gives Education up to Senior and Matriculation standard. Specialities: Music, Singing and Art.
 THE PREPARATORY SCHOOL receives pupils up to 13 years of age, and prepares candidates for the State Scholarship Examination.

Reduction for Sisters.

Fees for both Schools on application.

Province, and so there are two sets of rights to be balanced, the rights of the Diocese and the rights of the Province. An individual may be suited for either duty, he has to satisfy both parties. The Province can hardly be expected to accept whoever is chosen by the diocese, without some real voice in the choice, something more than the confirmation by the Bishops which is required for every diocesan, nor on the other hand can the diocese be expected to accept a bishop chosen by the Province. One way out of the difficulty would be to have a moveable Metropolitan See, allow the dioceses to elect their bishops in their own way, and then for the Province to decide on which of the Bishops should be Archbishop and Metropolitan. As a matter of fact, that is the present arrangement for the Primacy.

The Archbishop of Sydney is not ipso facto Primate of Australia. When the See of Sydney—or whatever may be the Primatial See—becomes vacant it is filled irrespective of the Primacy, and then the Bishops of Australia elect their Primate, their choice being limited to the occupants of the Sees of Sydney, Melbourne, and Brisbane. Perth is not included as it is so far from the preponderating weight of population.

There are objections to a moveable Primatial or Metropolitan See, but if a particular diocese wishes to be Primatial or Metropolitan, then it is obviously fair it should surrender some of its own private rights and claims. The problem is to decide how the different rights may be duly recognised.

The election committee for the Archbishopric of Brisbane is made up of six clergy in Priest's orders of the diocese of Brisbane, and six laymen; both these bodies are elected by the Brisbane Synod, and the bishops of the Province of Queensland are members of the Committee, the senior bishop being chairman. This provides for the interests of both Diocese and Province. Further, only the priests may nominate a person to be elected bishop of the diocese, which guards the rights of the diocese very carefully. On the other hand, no one is duly elected unless he have a majority of the three Orders on the Committee, which prevents the bishops being placed in a false position by having to accept or reject one already elected by the diocese. The fact that the bishops are members of the Committee sitting and discussing the matter with them, makes for harmony. They know the wishes of the diocese at first hand, and are able to keep the claims of the Province before the Diocesan Representatives.

Of course, the successful working of any method of election depends largely on the spirit in which it is worked. And the wonderful success of the first use of the method in Queensland is not due simply to its justice in recognising different claims and rights and its bringing all representative to meet and pray and discuss together.

It is due to the wonderful spirit of unity in the Province, which was the impress made on the Province by Archbishop Donaldson, and perhaps still more to the way in which he impressed the duty of the sinking of all sectional and party feeling by his call to prayer in his own diocese and the Province, some weeks before the date of the election. The holding of a day of Prayer and Intercession in the Cathedral on the day preceding the election was the culminating act of a long period of preparation. All this prepared the committee as nothing else could have done, and the committee met in an atmosphere of prayer, and with a real sense of responsibility. On the day of the election all the members were present at a celebration of Holy Communion in St. Luke's Church, at 8 a.m., when the Bishop of New Guinea was the celebrant, and Mattins and Evensong were said in the church. A room at St. Luke's was provided for the meetings, and meals were served in the basement and so, after prayerful consideration which took up the whole day in four sessions, the decision was come to about 10 p.m. A word of thanks and appreciation is due to the six Brisbane laymen, some of them now holding important positions in the business world, who arranged to be absolutely free for the whole day that they might devote themselves wholeheartedly to a duty they showed they realized to be one of supreme importance. While the Church can command such devotion and high sense of duty she need have no doubt of the reality of her influence in the world.

Christ Church, Darwin.

The Ladies' Guild held a small sale of work on the night of October 18th, in the Rectory Grounds, the proceeds, which amounted to £65 are to be devoted to reducing the debts of the parish, and to beautifying the Church.

The Rector of Darwin has been busy preparing a class of candidates for Confirmation, the second during the year, and he presented five candidates to the Bishop for Confirmation on Tuesday, December 6th. Sunday, December 4th, was an important day in the history of the Darwin parish, as on that day the first ordination held in Darwin took place, the Rev. R. D. Joynt being admitted to priest's orders by the Bishop of Carpentaria. There was a large congregation, the service was beautifully reverent, conducted with dignity and without fuss. The Rector of Darwin presented the candidate and took part in the act of ordination. The sermon was preached by the Bishop, and there were 24 communicants.

Mr. Joynt celebrated the Holy Communion on Monday morning, and left for the Roper again on Wednesday, December 7th.

In spite of other attractions and engagements a large number of parishioners came to the Rectory on the night of Monday, December 5th, to a social gathering for the opportunity of wishing good-bye to the Bishop. The Administrator of the Northern Territory, F. C. Urquhart, Esq., who was in the chair, spoke of the high appreciation in which the Bishop is held by the people for his devotion to his work. He referred to the long journeys the bishop had made to outside places, and of his 16 years work in New Guinea, followed by six years in the North of Australia, and he wondered if ever one who had worked for 22 years in the Tropics had been willing as a matter of simple duty to accept a change which meant more work in such a climate as New Guinea. Mr. Barnes and Mr. Millican, the wardens, also expressed on behalf of the people their appreciation of all the Bishop had done for Darwin. Refreshments had been provided by the ladies of the parish, and when justice had been done them, the evening came to an end.

The Parishes.THURSDAY ISLAND.

All Souls' Day was observed by a requiem and a dirge after evensong, as has been done here for some years past. As our church is a memorial church, and All Souls its dedication, this duty, is the more important here, and we hope that the day will be more widely observed each year, to commemorate our departed friends and to strengthen our hope of meeting them again in a happier world.

Bishop's House has had as guests this year missionaries and their families to the number of thirty persons, for an average of thirty days each. Recent visitors have included the Rev. H. E. de M. Warren, who navigated his own ship on an adventurous voyage from Roper River and remained with us three weeks; he reached his home safely, and duly, on the 16th November.

On October 28th the opportunity was seized of holding a concert in aid of our building funds, through a generous offer made by H.M.S. Fantome, and the entertainment was in every way a pronounced success. The large audience appeared well pleased with the efforts of the artists, who were both meritorious and popular; it was a pleasure to have such a good concert. The programme was very full and varied, and was performed without a hitch. Our best thanks are tendered to the Fantome's ranks and ratings for their goodwill and voluntary work, and to our friends who reside here, who helped in large measure.

The local response to the appeal for funds from St. Martin's Hospital, Brisbane, the Church of England War Memorial for Queensland, was something to be thankful for, and it shows what good-hearted people are in the town. We telegraphed £30 to the hospital on the morning after St. Martin's Day (Armistice Day). We are grateful to the collectors and to all the kind donors.

The G.F.S. annual sale of work for missions was held in the parish institute on the 24th November, and was unusually successful; the Australian Board of Missions will benefit to the extent of about £25. This year the function was made more interesting and attractive by an entertainment provided by a chorus of the little girls, with some bigger ones to help, who had been well trained by Miss May. Her work produced a pretty concert, which was much enjoyed by the large audience, the choral songs and recitations, duet, rhythmic drill, morris dance, all being equally effective. All the workers of the evening displayed the harmonious and willing spirit which is such a pleasing feature of Church work in this parish. The amount of money given in this parish to the missions is exceptionally large, which is a good advertisement for the missions, for our parishioners see them in operation daily.

Mrs. Williams, the Queensland National Bank, kindly entertained the Bishop on his visit to Port Douglas early in October.

1922.

Diocese of Carpentaria.

Bishop :

RT. REV. HENRY NEWTON, D.D.
Thursday Island, Queensland.

Administrator :

REV. F. W. SLADE, B.A.

Sub-Dean :

REV. F. W. SLADE, B.A.

Diocesan Secretary :

REV. F. W. SLADE, B.A., Thursday Island.

Commissaries :

REV. CHANCELLOR PONSOMBY, M.A., The Rectory, Devonport, England.
REV. J. JONES, M.A., All Saints', S. Kilda, Melbourne.
REV. W. P. GLOVER, Th.L., Warwick, Q.
REV. C. B. MIERLEES, Springhill, Maesmore, Gloucester, England.

Clergy :

REV. B. S. COLE, Cooktown.
REV. C. W. LIGHT, Darwin.
REV. F. W. SLADE, B.A., Thursday Island.
REV. E. TAFFS, Mossman.
REV. HAROLD THOMPSON, Normanton.

Honorary Lay Readers :

MR. H. F. L. FINNISS, Darwin.
MR. D. A. ROBERTS, Darwin.

Diocesan Council :

REV. F. W. SLADE, B.A. MR. GEO. CLARK.
REV. J. J. E. DONE. MR. A. SULLIVAN.
REV. W. H. MACFARLANE, DR. VERNON.
Th.L.

Honorary Legal Adviser :

HIS HONOUR JUDGE MACNAUGHTON.

Aboriginal Mission, Mitchell River :

MR. J. W. CHAPMAN. MRS. MATTHEWS.
REV. H. MATTHEWS, J.P. MISS F. SMITH.
(Supt.) MRS. TRELLOGEN.
MR. E. C. TONKIN.
J. Geibo, T. Solomon, J. Savo.

Roper River Mission :

MR. DYER. MR. H. L. PERRIMAN.
REV. R. D. JOYNT. MISS CROSS.
REV. H. E. D. WARREN MRS. DYER.
(Supt.)

Torres Straits Mission :

REV. J. J. E. DONE. REV. J. W. SCHOMBERG.
REV. W. H. MACFARLANE, *REV. JOSEPH LUI.
(Th.L.) *REV. POEY PASSI.
DEACONESS HATTON, Thursday Island.
* Native Deacons.

The Diocese.

The See was founded in 1900, and consists of such part of Queensland as is bounded by the sea on the north and east, by the Northern Territory on the west, and by a line drawn from lat. S. 19deg. 30min. on the western boundary of Queensland due east to par. 144deg. E. and thence N. to lat. S. 16deg. 40min. and thence east to the sea, together with the whole of the Northern Territory, comprising an area of not less than 620,000 square miles. The population, which is very widely scattered over this immense area, consists of about 10,000 whites, 5,000 Japanese, Chinese, and other aliens, and 35,000 aboriginals. The white population is mainly mining and pastoral. The See town is Thursday Island, a pearling centre north of Cape York.

Finance.

The Diocese has no endowments beyond the Bishop's income of £395 per annum. Every parish needs a grant from central funds which come from subscriptions to the Diocese, and grants from English Societies.

Missions.

Missions are carried on amongst the Japanese at Thursday Island; the South Sea Islanders; the aboriginals on the Mitchell and Roper Rivers; and among the Islanders of the Torres Straits.

Special Offertories.

On Easter Day the offertories are given to the Clergyman of the Parish, and on Good Friday to the Australian Board of Missions.

The "Church Standard."

Posted to any Address for 6s. 6d. per Annum.

The CHURCH STANDARD holds the unique position of being the only independent weekly paper published in the interests of the Church of England in Australasia.

Published every Friday Morning.

Appeals to all Members of the Church of England, Members of the C.E.M.S., Churchwardens, Sidesmen and Parochial Councillors, Sunday School Teachers, Lay Readers, Catechists, and Clergy.

Specimen Copies on application to

THE CHURCH PUBLISHING CO. LTD.,

ROYAL INSURANCE BUILDINGS, 16 SPRING STREET, SYDNEY.

St. Margaret's, Brisbane.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND HIGH SCHOOL FOR GIRLS

Under the management of the Sisters of the Society of the Sacred Advent

Pupils prepared for examinations of the University of Queensland, Public Service and Associated Board R.A.

There are two Boarding Houses beautifully situated in extensive grounds overlooking the Brisbane River

BOARDERS RECEIVED FROM THE AGE OF EIGHT

FOR PROSPECTUS APPLY SISTER-IN-CHARGE

St. Catharine's, Stanthorpe.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND HIGH SCHOOL FOR GIRLS

Under the management of the Sisters of the Society of the Sacred Advent

Pupils prepared for examinations of the University of Queensland, and Associated Board R.A.

Additional House secured

Increased Accommodation for Boarders

FOR PROSPECTUS APPLY SISTER-IN-CHARGE

Church of England Girls' Schools

UNDER THE MANAGEMENT OF THE
SISTERS OF THE SACRED ADVENT.

S. ANNE'S, TOWNSVILLE, Quarterly Fees for Boarders	£10	10s.
S. MARY'S, HERBERTON	£15	15s.

Pupils prepared for Queensland University and Associated Board R.A. Examinations.
Commercial Subjects taught. Open-air sleeping accommodation if required.

In connection with S. Mary's, Herberton, there is a separate House for Boys under nine years of age. Quarterly Fees, £12 10s.

The Carpenterian

FOR THE DIOCESE OF CARPENTARIA, NORTH AUSTRALIA.

Vol. XXII.—No. 86.]

THURSDAY ISLAND, APRIL 1, 1922.

[PRICE 2/6 A YEAR.

PUBLISHED ON THE FIRST DAY OF EACH QUARTER.

POST FREE.]

NOTICE.

All communications to be addressed to the Editor of The Carpenterian, Bishop's House, Thursday Island, to whom subscriptions may be sent. Subscription, 2/6 per annum, post free.

The address of the Secretary for the Carpenterian Association in England is Miss Theodora Scarth, Bearsted, Kent, England.

NOTICE TO CONTRIBUTORS.

All contributions of Parish News, etc., must reach the Editor before the last day of February, May, August, and November in each year.

Letter from the Bishop.

My dear friends,

I find that I am in time to get a letter into this quarter's Carpenterian, so I am taking the opportunity of sending you greetings. Those of you who live in the Diocese I hope to see personally at the earliest possible opportunity, as it is my intention to pay a hurried visit round the Diocese soon after my enthronement; this visit will only be to the larger centres—but I feel that I must get a first-hand impression of the work being done before making any plans. This flying visit will also enable me to get some estimate of the needs of the future.

Some of our English friends I have had the pleasure of seeing; many of them who know Thursday Island send greetings through me to their various friends still in the Diocese, assuring them of their continued interest and support.

Why I was chosen for this great work I do not see yet; all that I know is that these words were continually in my mind at my consecration, "Ye have not chosen Me, but I have chosen you," meaning for me that God knew that I had something to give to you in the Diocese. What that something is I pray that He will shew me in His own good time; further, that there may be something that you in the Diocese have to give to me, helping me one step higher in the spiritual life. I hope that you will pray for me as I do for you, that on neither side will anything be kept back that God wishes us to impart to the other.

I must tell you that some of the best information I received about my future place of life was at a picture show in Melbourne, where F. Hurley was shewing a most excellent series of pictures on the Torres Straits and New Guinea.

As a close I ask you again to pray. Those old friends of mine in the Charleville Brotherhood District who were praying for me, knowing that my future sphere of work was quite uncertain, have had their prayers answered in a way that neither I nor they ever dreamt of; as their prayers were answered, so will yours be also.

STEPHEN,
Bishop.

The Consecration of the third Bishop of Carpentaria.

On Lady Day in March, the Feast of the Annunciation, the Rev. Stephen Harris Davies was consecrated Bishop of Carpentaria in S. John's Cathedral, Brisbane. The consecrating prelates were the Most Reverend Gerald Sharp (Lord Archbishop of Brisbane), the Rt. Rev. Philip Crick (Lord Bishop of Rockhampton), the Rt. Rev. George Dowglass Halford (formerly Bishop of Rockhampton), and the Rt. Rev. Henry Frewen Le Fanu (Coadjutor-Bishop of Brisbane). There were nearly 50 clergymen in the choir, including the Rev. F. N. Eldershaw, the Rev. C. Nommensen, and other members of the Charleville Bush Brotherhood. The Archbishop was attended by the Worshipful Chancellor of the Diocese (Mr Percy Hart), and Mr Gordon E. Gall (Diocesan Registrar), and by the Rev. P. C. Shaw (formerly of New Guinea) and the Rev. W. H. W. Stevenson (of S. John's College), who were the Archbishop's Chaplains. The Bishop-elect was attended by the Rev. John Done (of Torres Straits), and the Rev. Ivor Skelton (who is joining the Diocese of Carpentaria). Mr E. R. Crouch was present as Notary Public. The choir and clergy and the Bishop-elect having taken their places, the Archbishop's procession entered the Cathedral and proceeded to the Sanctuary. The service followed the Prayer Book—Mattins having been said at an earlier hour.

The Archbishop was the Celebrant, the Bishop of Rockhampton Gospeller, and Bishop Le Fanu Epistoler; all the Bishops wore copes and mitres.

After the Creed, Bishop Halford went to the pulpit for the sermon. The Bishop-elect then came from his place in the nave to the Archbishop seated in his chair before the altar. The Bishop-elect was presented by the Bishop of Rockhampton and Bishop Le Fanu. The Chancellor then read the certificate of confirmation of the election—signed by the Archbishop—and the Registrar administered the oaths of allegiance to the Sovereign and of canonical obedience to the Metropolitan, which were duly taken by the Bishop-elect. The Litany was then said by the Sub-Dean (Canon Batty). The Veni Oreator was said in alternate lines by the Archbishop and the congregation. All the Bishops present joined in the laying-on of hands, before which the Bishop-elect, who previously had been in rochet and stole, was vested in cope. After the delivery of the Bible, the Archbishop placed the mitre on the new Bishop's head, and he then proceeded to the Sanctuary taking his place with the other Bishops. At the administration of Holy Communion, the Archbishop gave the Holy Communion to the new Bishop and Bishop Halford, who were the only communicants in the service. At the end of the service, the Archbishop, preceded by the staff-bearer and having on his right hand the new Bishop and followed by the assisting Bishops and officers, left the Cathedral in procession.

The service was notable for being well arranged and not being unduly prolonged, and also for having only such music as the congregation could join. Merbecke was used for the Eucharist, the responses to the Commandments being said—notsung. The hymns were: Introit, "Holy, Holy, Holy"; Offertory, "Thou Whose Almighty Word"; the Communion, "O Saving Victim"; the Ablutions, "Shall we not love Thee, Mother dear."

THE SERMON.

At the Consecration Bishop Halford took for his text part of the Holy Gospel of the Feast: "The angel Gabriel was sent from God."

The preacher linked his remarks to the event of the day, the Annunciation of the Blessed Virgin Mary. He said that they went back in thought to that day, which was surely the greatest since creation. God had then announced in the world the most stupendous revelation of divine love, and the beginning of a new era for the human race. The Bishop went on to speak of how God had chosen Gabriel from among a great host to bring His message to the Blessed Mary, who, by the power of the Almighty, was to bear His Son, Jesus Christ, for man. After asking his congregation to let their thoughts roam over what that message had made possible, the preacher discoursed upon that phase of the subject. "The message of the day is Jesus," he declared at the conclusion of the remarks he made in that direction. "It is Jesus in the world of men, God's gift to men in the world to-day, Jesus whom we may love and serve and suffer and die for."

PRESENT LINKED WITH PAST.

The Bishop proceeded to remark that in the consecration about to take place they saw Saturday linked back to the day about which they had been thinking. 'The event was to be the empowering and sending forth by God of a chosen messenger with a message.

"Does the day bring you a message, my brother?" asked the preacher, speaking directly to the Bishop-elect. "You have been chosen," he went on, "out of the many in the society of the Church for special apostolate by Christ, and He has called you to Himself, as God called Gabriel, as Jesus called out of the number of His disciples Peter, Andrew, James and John. In a few moments you will say that you are persuaded that you are truly called of God Himself to this ministry, according to the will of our Lord Jesus Christ. That is your own security and stay in days when a sense of impotence and futility, and even failure, is pressing sore. You come back to this: 'I did not take this ministry upon myself—God called me. I have not come of myself, God sent me unto you.'"

"Through this solemn sacramental act, God sends you to a definite region. The scene of your labours is among scattered communities, isolated settlers and in islands of the sea. Your work, please God, will not be overwrought with office routine or burdened with detailed administration. It is rather a return to the apostolic ministry of a Paul or Barnabas, and you come to the people to bear Christ to them; to manifest Christ to them, to make them see Jesus and to call them to personal attachment and devotion and obedience to Him, both for His glory and for the highest satisfaction of their own ideals of humanity.

"The personal influence of a Bishop counts for a great deal, and the visit of a Bishop may mean a social event. But first it must mean the coming of Christ to the isolated. You represent and bear the Lord Jesus Christ to your few Priests, living amidst surroundings which so little help to maintain spiritual force and to them your visit must mean a vision and a touch of Christ. And to tiny communities with limited interests and perhaps narrowed vision, your coming is primarily to bear Christ to them. However little they may show it, the inarticulate request is there: 'Sir, we would see Jesus.' They must know that you come from God to them fully absorbed in His trusts and message—the thing trusted to you to do being, like Gabriel, to announce Jesus on earth.

"I have seen in western bush—as you have seen—the influence of the God-fearing man or the holy woman, an influence radiating far and affecting all the district through those who visit that station home. I believe that for you, and most of us, our ministry and our message is more to individual than to the mass. I believe that God sends us to individuals to bring them into touch with Jesus, and try not to give them up until they have surrendered. There you have a new centre, a Nazareth, where Jesus is, or a house of Lydia, or of Jason, of Stephanas, or of Prisca, and Aquilla.

THE NEED OF TO-DAY.

"That was the way the Name of Jesus and the Kingdom spread in the first three centuries. We need a return to just those methods to-day." Bishop Halford concluded: "And a Bishop can create those centres arising round a Christ-possessed individual perhaps better than anyone else."

The Parishes.

THURSDAY ISLAND.

A reception was held in the Parish Institute on the eve of the departure from the Diocese of the second Bishop of Carpentaria, to bid his Lordship farewell. It had become known that the Bishop desired not to receive any parting gift; he will remember the people well without having anything to remind him, and he felt that after the handsome token of appreciation that was given him less than two years previously, it would not be fair to allow the people to be asked for anything further. A programme of music brightened the evening, and farewell speeches were made. The Bishop expressed his personal regret at leaving the Diocese, and explained the necessity of his translation, and his conviction that it was his duty to become Bishop of New Guinea.

The coloured residents of the Island also arranged a farewell meeting in the South Sea Home, to take leave of the Bishop, and managed the function well and with good success. The Islanders expressed their regret at the loss of their Bishop, who had been "good and kind" to them, and had watched their interests, and asked his Lordship to accept a present of beautiful shells, richly carved. The Bishop thanked the people for their good wishes, and explained that they were certain to get another Pastor who would care for them.

The money now held by the Vicar in trust, at the request of the Parochial Council, for repairs and improvements to buildings, will be expended as soon as the season of the year permits.

As usual, offerings of money are invited during Lent from worshippers for the A.B.M., and envelopes are provided in the Church for that purpose; also the children of the Sunday School have their envelopes for the same purpose.

For a number of years, until last month, a blacks' camp lurked in our vicinity (at Hammond Island), and was a constant menace to the health, physical, civic, and spiritual, of the town; but what was far worse, it was known to be a plague spot to its inhabitants, who were certain to degenerate rapidly in such circumstances, as they actually did. In obedience to an order of the Chief Protector of Aborigines, these natives have now been removed to Adam Village, on Moa Island—not "evicted from home," for Hammond Island was never their home; they had wandered to it as a convenient camping ground. The degradation among them was shocking, and the strong terms used in Parliament by the Home Secretary, in answer to a question, are fully justified, as the best friends of the natives are sadly aware. The Government, in removing them to a decent village, where they can have proper protection and full freedom, with reasonable assistance and guidance, has the hearty approval of the Church.

The cry, "Leave the blacks alone," is ignorant folly, when it is not worse, seeing that it is impossible to leave them alone; these poor fellows cannot be unaffected when the march of civilisation surrounds them. The only rational and righteous treatment is to make proper reserves for them where they can live secure, and have a chance to progress instead of lingering in wretchedness, and poisoning the country while dying off.

Our little Cathedral has had the good fortune to secure some old stones from great and ancient Cathedrals in England, which are of much historic interest, and which will be built into the walls of the Church at its completion. Westminster Abbey, Gloucester, Salisbury, Southwark, St. Paul's, Canterbury, have sent each a stone, mostly wrought in Centuries XIII. to XV. The oldest of the relics is a brick, made by the Romans in Britain, at the site of St. Alban's martyrdom, and used afterwards in the old foundation of St. Alban's Abbey.

The Customs Department has performed the difficult feat of excelling itself; the stones above referred to were charged import duty, on the grounds that these relics could be manufactured in Australia!

Requiescat.—Margaret Dunwoodie, December 17th; Gunda Josephine Young, February 13th. Both departed this life in Brisbane, whither they had gone for medical treatment. Miss Dunwoodie will be long missed by many who knew her as a good, true friend. Mrs. Young leaves a husband and young family to mourn their loss. Both were active Churchwomen. Our faith is that they are in sure consolation and rest, and await a joyful resurrection.

NORMANTON.

The Rector, the Rev. Harold Thompson, who gallantly volunteered, and has now fulfilled his promise to the Bishop of Carpentaria, and whose work has been accomplished under the most trying conditions, leaves this month for New Guinea, having volunteered as a Mission Priest there, and carries with him our prayers and best wishes. The vacancy so caused at Normanton will shortly be filled by another competent and self-denying Priest.

Major Armstrong has defrayed the cost of renewing the gas plant at St. Peter's Church, and it is working splendidly. It is quite a treat to have the gas again, after much trouble with lamps. Some repairs have been done also to the fabric and to the organ.

We regret having received no news from the other parishes.

The Missions.

The Diocesan Secretary acknowledges having received a case of goods marked "Torres Straits Mission, c/o Mr. Slade, Thursday Island." It appears to have come as an enclosure to Hodels Ltd., and there is no trace of the sender. Its contents have been distributed, and we are desired to express the thanks of the recipients to the kind donors.

Mr. J. W. Chapman acknowledges with hearty thanks two parcels of literature from unknown friends.

The property known as Mitchelton, between the Edward and Mitchell Rivers, and bounded by the shore of the Gulf of Carpentaria, has been resumed by the Government and proclaimed an Aboriginal Reserve. Particulars are in the Government Gazette, 14/1/22, p. 129.

The ketch "Herald," after six years of active service in the Torres Straits, is to go on the slips this month for overhaul and extensive repairs, which will cost hundreds of pounds. She has proved a very satisfactory ship.

In a place where there is as yet no Mission to the heathen within our borders, visiting traders warned the natives that if a Mission came, they would better run away, or they would be captured and made to work too hard; the same traders complain that Missions make the natives lazy. The real cause of their dislike to the Church is quite well known.

We frequently read in disreputable newspapers—having our attention called to them by indignant Churchmen—most absurd accusations made against Missions. We suppose that kind of lie pays the publishers, as there are always purchasers of what abuses anything respectable. We mention them for the sake of inviting anyone who feels that "there might be something in it" to write to us for the facts, which are convincing.

The news from the neighbouring Diocese of New Guinea is most encouraging, and shows the immense change brought about in the lives of the people by Christianity, which has indeed revolutionised their minds; where they were cannibals thirty years ago, they are now living joyfully, righteous and sober lives; they have become industrious, their health and prosperity have increased beyond words, their villages are kept clean, they have a new spirit in them. It is miraculous. But what seems to an Australian more remarkable still is their intense gratitude for what has wrought the change; they build Churches as a labour of love, and build them well; then they throng them. No wonder they have roused the jealousy of worldlings who visit the country; our national indifference to religion, which brings such unspeakable blessings, is something they cannot understand; they are eager to shew their loving fealty to Him Whom they have come to know.

SUBSCRIPTIONS RECEIVED.—Miss Addison, Veybridge, 10/-; Mr Toulasik, Mrs Woodhead, Mrs MacLeod, Miss Bensted, each 2/6; per the Rev H. Thompson: Mr Kershaw, Mr Villocks, each 2/6; per the Rev C. W. Light: Mrs Davis, 2/6.

Church Schools in the North.

Members of the Church of England who wish to assist religious education in the North should subscribe to schools carried on by their own Church, in preference to the schools of other denominations.

The Roman Catholic Schools are: Mount Carmel, for boys, and numerous Convent Schools for girls.

The Methodist-Presbyterian Schools are: Thornborough, for boys; Blackheath, for girls, both at Charters Towers.

The Church of England Schools are: All Souls', at Charters Towers, for boys; and for girls: S. Anne's, Townsville; S. Mary's, Herberton; S. Gabriel's, Charters Towers. For full particulars of these schools, apply to the Registrar, Diocesan Registry, Townsville.

Children who are members of the Church of England should be sent to one of the schools of the Church of England, and not to schools of other denominations.—The Northern Churchman.

Of course, the above list includes no schools except those in Northern Queensland. Many parents prefer to send their children to Brisbane or further South; and there are many excellent Church of England schools in the cities and larger towns all over Australia to choose from; the Rector of any parish will be glad to obtain information about any of them for enquirers.

Bishop of New Guinea.

We are glad to know that Dr. Newton, who worked so laboriously as our Bishop, reached Dogura in time to be enthronized there as third Bishop of New Guinea, on the day after he ceased to be Bishop of Carpentaria—S. Paul's Day—as he had wished. His lordship had sailed from here on Christmas Eve (of all days in the year) for the purpose of reaching his new Diocese in time for S. Paul's Day, as there is at present no direct route, and it was necessary to travel 4,000 miles out of the way on a voyage to a port less than 400 miles distant. Such tiresome journeys, which are liable to upset all one's plans and waste much time, have frequently fallen to the Bishop's lot during his residence here, and we trust that he will be free from at least that weariness in his new See.

The Bishop had an enthusiastic reception, both at Port Moresby and Samarai, and a touching welcome from his old friends at Dogura. The native Christians had hoped, ever since they knew that Dr. Sharp could not return, that their old friend Dr Newton would return as their Bishop, seeing that he knew and understood them, and could be understood by them. They were very grateful when they learned that he was coming back to them, and on his arrival did all they could to express their welcome greetings. The new Bishop's influence in New Guinea will be greater than any one else's could be, and that reconciles Carpentaria to the loss of him.

A Popular Hobby and our Missions.

Please contribute postage stamps for sale to benefit the Australian Board of Missions, which maintains our Missions in the Pacific Islands, New Guinea, at Yarrabah and the Forrest and Mitchell Rivers, and in the Torres Straits, etc. Unused and used of every country desired. Rare and medium stamps, and old collections, specially solicited. Packets are sold from 5/- to £1, to suit the wishes of purchasers as nearly as possible. Approval books are ready for responsible collectors. If contributions are floated off the adhering paper the cost of forwarding will be reduced and the work of the Department facilitated. Selected specimens of current Australian under 3d. are welcome, provided they are cleaned, sorted, and tied into bundles of 100 for the wholesale market. Torn, cut, pen-marked, and heavily franked are unsaleable.

A.B.M. Stamp Department, Hon. Secretary, Mr. Harry G. Simpson, Thursday Island, Qld.

Mixed Marriages.

(FROM THE PARISH PAPER OF S. JOHN'S, YOUNG N.S.W.)

We want to make it quite clear to our young people exactly what it means when they consent in the case of marrying a Roman Catholic, to be married by a Roman Catholic priest. In the first place they consent to be married as a heathen, or publican might be, i.e., not in the Church before the altar, where every decent Christian has a right to be married, but in the vestry or at the presbytery or anywhere but the right place. Secondly, they consent, if not deliberately, that they are not Christians, that their own clergyman is not a clergyman at all, and that unless they have the blessing of a Roman priest, their marriage is no marriage at all, and that to put it plainly, their children will be illegitimate. Let us be quite clear on the matter. It is not the interchange of blessings between members of different Churches to which we take exception, it is to that complete denial of any lot or status in the Catholic Church to the Church of England, to which they subscribe by consenting to be married by a Roman priest. If the Roman Church accorded to our people who may seek to be married therein, that full status and position which the Church of England accords to all who have been duly baptised, and are not living in sin, who seek a blessing through her, we could take no exception. The Ne Temere decree simply applies a Canon of Trent, which dealt with clandestine marriages between Catholics, to a purpose for which it was never intended. We suggest that all our readers should buy two Roman Catholic Catechisms, one for 1904 and 1905. In the one of the later date, they will see a most significant omission, which is very interesting, in view of what we have written. The motto of the Roman Church, Semper eadem, has sometimes a sinister meaning.

The Carpenterian

FOR THE DIOCESE OF CARPENTARIA,
NORTH AUSTRALIA.

Vol. XXII., No. 86. Thursday Island, April 1, 1922

Passiontide.

There is surely nothing our country so much needs as the revival of a living faith; a faith that is not merely an opinion, but a principle of action, a faith that causes its possessor to make efforts and sacrifices for God's sake.

If we wish this to be widespread, we must strengthen and deepen it in ourselves, and for that purpose perhaps nothing is better than meditation on the Passion of the Redeemer of mankind.

The Christian year is a practical convenience; we know that at Passiontide millions of our brethren are directing their thoughts to the same end, and the Church services at that time are arranged to help the devout searcher after truth who seeks to understand the Sacrifice of the Son of God. As we read and think over the great history of the Passion, each really trying to understand what meaning it holds for him, what difference it makes to him, we learn the true faith.

Most men are in danger of not profiting by their education through neglecting the powers that have been trained in them; they have been taught but have not learned; they have ceased to exercise their mental faculties; therefore, outside the range of their trades, they cannot really think out things for themselves, cannot form true judgments, have never developed their will power, but are content to be "like dumb, driven cattle." They miss a whole world of knowledge and experience, "the mystic heaven and earth within."

We do not want our minds to be a blank, and if there is one impression more than another that should be on our minds so deeply that we never forget, it is the impression made by the Passion. It will not impress itself without our own effort; no preacher, no book, can put it there for us. And an annual effort to keep the impression fixed is one of the best methods, as the long experience of Christendom has proved, of preserving that faith we have mentioned above.

Here is an ancient precept good for us to follow—during Passiontide spend some part of each day in meditating thus:—

Beforehand, make your time-table.
Resolve to keep to it as strictly as possible.
Preferably, choose the same time of each day.

If possible, choose some time in the early morning.

Do not attempt to spend more time in meditating than you can.

Sometimes, ten minutes is enough.

Often, the best place is the open Church.

Keep your thoughts concentrated.

Kneel and pray for enlightenment.

Then read, very slowly, part of one of the Gospels of Holy Week.

And think, What message has this for me?

When you see its meaning, pray for strength to act accordingly.

Frequently during the day, recall the matter.

Such a practice may seem a severe exercise, but it reveals the meaning of the Cross. Those who cannot fulfil it every day might do so once or twice during Passiontide. The whole meaning of the Cross has never yet been grasped by mortals, hence there is no Catholic theory of the Atonement, but each ought to see, even if he cannot explain to others, as much of the meaning as he can.

Think what the Cross teaches about God's love for sinners; God's hatred of sin; His justice and His mercy; His power to make new men of us; the wickedness of sin and its destructive power over its victims; the one way of becoming and remaining free in will and soul.

When anyone knows, and believes personally, the truth of the Atonement, it is not difficult to accept the historic fact of the Resurrection. Then one's life is founded on a firm foundation and delivered from the softening which spoils the intellect of the muddle-headed, the day-dreamers, the meddlers with pseudo-science.

We plead then with all who have not come to a personal decision, to face the question fairly, by the methods indicated above, at this Holy Season; and with all who are convinced believers, to employ the same method to strengthen their faith against assaults. Nothing less than the fulness of the Christian creed, loyally believed and acted on, is good enough to preserve and develop Australia.

In case of non-delivery of The Carpenterian, please advise the Editor, Bishop's House, Thursday Island, Queensland, Australia. Remittances: Subscriptions to The Carpenterian, if from within the Commonwealth, are best made by postal notes; if from other parts of the Empire, by money order: a British postal order is not payable in Australia. Larger sums donated to the diocese are preferably remitted by bank draft: our bankers are the Queensland National Bank Ltd., Thursday Island. The honorary diocesan secretary will be greatly obliged if friends sending money to our bankers will be so good as to send him by post a letter of advice. If this is not done we do not know from whom the money comes. All moneys may be sent to The Carpenterian Association in England, whose honorary secretary is Miss Scarth, Bearsted, Kent.

When our very good friend The Church Standard says that a priest is "not a scholar" it means only that he has not attained a reputation for eminence in certain profound and abstruse studies, and when it says that he is "not a preacher" a similar perversion is to be understood. This is rather worse than the American language of a recent complimentary notice in The Churchman, New York: "he is not a great scholar," which, in English, because of our fondness for litotes, is very nearly an insult. Either proposition if translated into English would require something like this: "He is not distinguished for conspicuous erudition above his compeers," and as that is all it means, to say it at all is unnecessary and misleading.

SHAME. — The Greater Britain Messenger states that the Northern part of Australia is "quite unfit to be the home of white families." "The adult white man can live there, but it is not a land where he can bring up his children." It is high time, as the last Medical Conference in Brisbane said, that this old lie was dead and buried. The facts are that children of wholly European descent brought up in the Northern parts of Australia compare more than favourably with children of the same descent in Australia as a whole; the measurements and other tests taken by medical inspectors in the schools prove that the chest measurement, lung power, heart, eyes, teeth, height, and all the other particulars recorded, are in Northern children above the normal; that these children are more than ordinarily free from adenoids and the like; and that they are more than usually intelligent, with good capacity for work and good powers of endurance. In all pioneering, the wives have a lot to put up with, but that is equally true of any country, and is caused by the roughness of the homes which makes housework laborious; and they do put up with it, with noble and hopeful patience.

Ecclesiastical terms seem to be a recurring puzzle to some ecclesiastics. We read that at a recent enthronization the "pastoral staff" was delivered into the hands of an Archbishop as a symbol of his diocesan jurisdiction, and that later the "crozier" was delivered to his Grace as the symbol of his metropolitanical dignity. But the "pastoral staff" is the "crozier," and it is not a cross, though its name does begin with the letters cro. Its name, like "surgeon" and "deacon," is a queer piece of spelling. It is L. Lat. crocea, Fr. crosse, Eng. crook. A Bishop carries, or has carried before him, his crook or crozier, which is his pastoral staff, when ministering as Bishop and within his own diocese. Similarly an Archbishop, only when ministering as metropolitan, carries a cross known as the metropolitanical cross.

ART FOR ART'S SAKE.—It seems odd to find a Government Report occupied with singing the praises of literature. Yet such a report, "The Teaching of English in England," has just been issued. We are grateful for its enthusiasm and its sound advice. But it so happens that some of us who teach literature have our main interest in philosophy and theology. The theory that a sound education can positively consist in the study of literature treated from the literary point of view, on the principle of "art for art's sake," seems to us entirely objectionable. This theory is widely Biblical Criticism.

We are painfully aware that many devout believers have had their faith in God disturbed by the literary criticism of the Bible; some have given it all up, and are sceptics, having no port to steer for, so that for them all winds are contrary; they have lost confidence.

The danger of that state of mind is greater among isolated persons who have not the voice of the living Church to guide them, and we write with the object of helping them to rest in the Lord.

The Bible has always been the Church's precious treasure, the comfort of countless souls, with a message of good news for the people of every country in every year. The way for every man to use it is stated in the Collect of the Second Sunday in Advent, "Hear, read, mark, learn, inwardly digest." Hear, by really listening instead of slumbering, when it is read, to inform the mind. Read, slowly and reverently, to strengthen the memory. Mark, take notice, use the intellect to understand. Learn, open the heart to receive its teaching. Inwardly digest, recollect what has been learnt, to inspire the will. Without this last, the other processes are not of much use.

And the benefits of it are stated in the same Collect. It gives men patience, the power of holding on, of enduring steadfast, unwavering; it gives comfort, strength to man's spirit; it enables men to grasp and hold a certain hope (not a mere wish), the blessed hope of everlasting life. These are the true riches, of more value than gold or broad acres.

But it is not the rule of faith; it is a canon or fixed standard by which the teaching of the Church must be tested; but our faith is neither in a Church nor in a book, it is in a Person. We believe in God. The faith which is disturbed by what learned men say about the holy books is not well founded. Believe in the living JESUS, whose life is in you inspiring you with an inclination towards righteousness, then literary questions will fall into their proper place.

Many learned doctors have used their genius and knowledge during the last generation to throw light on the circumstances in which the holy books were written, with the object of helping us to understand the Bible better; and we ought to be grateful for their labours. And some hostile German critics have tried to cast discredit on the holy books, with the object of injuring religion; we may be grateful even to them, because the result has been to establish the truth of the Bible more firmly, and to prove all the enemies' theories wrong, so that no instructed person believes them now. But neither devout nor hostile students deal with subjects which affect the faith. If the theories of the critics are right, the faith remains just where it was before.

It was the same when the great Darwin published his theory of evolution (which has been much altered since his day). Many men thought that if evolution was true, religion was wrong. But in fact evolution makes no difference at all to religion. The One True God is the Maker of heaven and earth; science has nothing to say against that. Science tries to find out how heaven and earth have reached their present condition; religion has nothing to say against that. Men had formed their own ideas of creation, which they read into the Bible, and then imagined that the Bible taught those ideas, which are now known to be wrong.

And men have formed their own ideas of the way the holy books were written. We have met a man who thought that God dictated the whole, in English, to Adam, who wrote it with a pen. But that man was a good Christian, faithful and honourable, it was only his knowledge that was faulty. Quite a lot of money is being spent to-day to propagate a theory that the Apostles carried reporters' note-books about with them, which they took out whenever the Lord Jesus began to speak. That is like the idea that the soldiers who guarded the Tomb were armed with rifles. Men of greater learning have published ideas just as silly, like Colenso's hare question. When the professors enquire into these ideas, they are sure to find holes in them, and to put forward theories which will answer, but that makes no difference to the truth and value of the Bible.

Not all men can be professors, and to understand thoroughly the methods by which the holy books were written and preserved requires first a high education and then many years of hard study; people should not mind, then, if they find themselves mistaken, but learn humility. There is a tendency among the unlearned to look for marvels in the Bible, in places where no marvel is intended, e.g., Josh. x. 12, 13, is but a poetical description of a thunderstorm. Look instead for the proof of the greatest marvel in the world—God's constant love for the unworthy—then form what opinion you like about Balaam's ass or Jonah's whale, but don't think you can acquire merit by pugnacity about those creatures.

A young man once confessed to his father that he had, when he was still younger and had still less sense, cut out Jonah from his father's Bible (it was only one leaf), having found out, as he supposed, that it was "not true." The confession arose from a heated discussion on the historicity of that book, and produced another confession—the father, though a regular and devout reader of his Bible, had never missed that Book of Jonah; he had talked a lot about it, but had never read it.

But if not all can be professors, all ought to have intelligent ideas, and we venture to offer the following suggestions:—

1. Get rid of three ideas about books. A book, in the time when Genesis was written, was not a thing that anybody could buy; it was never sold and never published; it was written by a student for his own personal use. And it was not a thing that anybody could read or learn to read; it was in the handwriting of a man who never saw anyone else's handwriting, nor ever used his own except for his private note-book. And it was not finished by the first writer, but might be added to by his disciples who succeeded him in the school of the priests or the school of the prophets or the school of the bards.
2. Avoid imagining that an author invents what he puts into his books. Wm. Shakespeare no more invented the plot of "As You Like It" than John Richard Green invented the statements he put into his "History." The author collects, selects, held, and there are passages in the report which tend in that direction. It holds, for instance, that literature need not, and perhaps should not, be studied in connection with philosophy; and it favours the action of the universities in founding "schools" of literature which qualify for a degree. The theory is acceptable to people who are inclined to give up the search for truth in despair, and to content themselves with a merely æsthetic appreciation of big thoughts and big words without troubling to enquire where they lead. They drop into the pathetic futility of so many of the great renaissance poets of the Elizabethan age and of the modern humanists, men who know all that men do—except what they ought to do—and all that men are—except what they are made for.—S.S.M. Quarterly Paper.

The need of a community or brotherhood to minister to some parts of this Diocese is becoming increasingly pressing; temporary appointments cannot go on for ever. There are places where it is not right to ask a lonely Rector to remain for any long period, where also the organization of a parish cannot be worked, and where no one man can compass the distances. Yet in those places there are souls to be ministered to. In a land where it sometimes takes three days travelling to visit one man, where a round of visits occupies a month instead of an afternoon, where a settler who goes forth to his work and to his labour is absent from home for a month without ever once going off his own property, where a Bishop alone in a Ford undertakes a journey on which the penalty for a breakdown would be death by thirst, where for some of the residents a trip to town is not a weekly nor an annual event, but can be accomplished once only in ten years or so, it is plain that the parochial system needs to be supplemented by mobile ministers. We beg for the prayers of our readers that the means may be found for providing for the souls of isolated bushmen.

Our Diocesan Missions have not much difficulty in constructing temporary buildings, as bush timber and plaited palm leaves are available, and builders practised in the use of them, but we have felt the need of a method of construction which shall be at once "ant-proof, permanent, rapid and inexpensive." The U.M.C.A., according to the last issue of Central Africa we have received, seems to have found such a method by building in Pisé de Terre, and its experiments are interesting to us. We read, "although time was lost, owing to our inexperience, and to the continual breaking down of our improvised shuttering, yet the house complete costs no more than a house of the same dimensions in mud and stick, but it is as permanent as a brick building." And "apart from the small cost and the permanency of Pisé, it should be remembered that except for the few fittings of the actual shuttering, nothing but earth is used, and everything is done by unskilled labour." We are not the first to mention this material as a possible solution of building problems in the Australian bush, but since information is meagre, the experience of our brethren is worth having.

GLENNIE MEMORIAL SCHOOL, TOOWOOMBA

Principal: MISS LAWRENCE.

*Church of England School for Girls, Toowoomba. Under control of the Brisbane Diocesan Council.GLENNIE PREPARATORY SCHOOL, TOOWOOMBA

Principal: MISS SUTTON.

Patron: His Grace the Archbishop of Brisbane.

THE GLENNIE MEMORIAL SCHOOL gives Education up to Senior and Matriculation standard. Specialities: Music, Singing and Art.
 THE PREPARATORY SCHOOL receives pupils up to 13 years of age, and prepares candidates for the State Scholarship Examination.

Reduction for Sisters.

Fees for both Schools on application.

arranges, expresses, but he gets his material where he can. There is no "literary property" except in modes of expression, and in all past ages there was no "literary property" at all.

3. Approach the Bible with an open mind, without any preconceived ideas of magic; read it as you read any other great book, to learn from it; avoid the attitude of the "superior person" who attempts to "criticize" while knowing nothing about real criticism, and try to understand instead. The Church does not teach that the books of the Bible are "inspired"; it does teach that their authors, and multitudes of others, were inspired or moved by the Holy Ghost, yet they were but men.
4. Remember that the Bible was written, preserved, translated and published, not to be a text-book in any of the natural sciences nor in history nor in philosophy, but for quite other purposes, which we have indicated in the fourth paragraph of this article.
5. Consider the literary character of each part. Is it narrative, and if so is it prose or poetry? Is it history, biography, or folk-lore! In any case, why is it in the Bible? If not narrative, is it parable, philosophy or prophecy? And be careful to define each of those terms.

Above all, read with prayer, in humble dependence on Him who is the source of all enlightenment. For, whatever views anyone may have about it, it contains the truth which has in fact been the greatest power in the world in moving men and nations towards righteousness, towards peace, towards heaven.

Arundel Prints.

Our little cathedral is so fortunate as to possess a number of the prints of the Arundel Society, which are becoming rare and are so much sought after and admired. They were obtained through the energy of one of our Mission Priests and the influence of our second Bishop from a friend in England who parted with them as an act of piety for the sake of helping the Church.

The object of the Arundel Society was the preservation of the record, and diffusion of the knowledge, of the most important monuments of painting and sculpture remaining from past times. The primary subject selected for illustration was Italian fresco painting. The society issued chromo-lithographs of the most important frescoes in Italy, as comprising the masterpieces of the greatest and most illustrious Italian painters, who, in that home of art, from Giotto to Raphael, lavished all their genius and thought upon mural decoration. The prints of the society are distinguished by their exquisite delicacy of colouring. Our collection includes the following:—

Andrea del Sarto (1488-1530).—S. Philip Benizzi healing children. This fresco at Florence excels the rest of this artist's works in beauty.

The Procession of the Magi, in the cloister of SS. Annunziata, Florence.

Francesco Francia (1450-1517).—The Marriage of S. Cecilia, one of a series in the Church of S. Cecilia at Bologna; among his best works. Since this was published by the Arundel Society, the originals have, by neglect and ill-usage, fallen into decay.

Pinturicchio (1454-1513), who employed Raphael in the latter's youth. S. Catherine of Alexandria pleading before her Judges. The Virgin in Glory with Two Saints. The Nativity.

Luca Signorelli.—Events in the Life of Moses, a fresco in the Sistine Chapel.

Fra Angelico (1387-1455).—The Madonna and Child with Attendant Saints, from a fresco in S. Mark's, Florence. S. Stephen's Ordination and Distribution of Alms, from a fresco in the Chapel of S. Lawrence in the Vatican. The Presentation in the Temple. The Entombment. Christ and the Disciples at Emmaus. Christ and Mary Magdalene in the Garden. The Transfiguration. The Annunciation. The above six are from frescoes in S. Mark's, Florence, as is the following: The Crucifixion. The original of this is twenty-six feet long. Around the cross are grouped various saints, the heads and founders of religious bodies. In medallions round the border the prophets appear, and S. Dominic and illustrious men of his Order. This artist's frescoes possess an altogether exceptional purity and sweetness, and in their expression of deep religious feeling are perhaps the most beautiful works of art existing.

Bazzi.—Christ Bound to the Column, after a fresco now in the Academy of Fine Arts, Sienna.

Stephan Lothener.—The triptych in the Cathedral at Cologne; centre panel, The Adoration of the Magi, two side panels, S. Ursula and her Virgins, S. Gereon and his Warriors.

Raphael (1483-1520).—Under him, art in Italy reached its highest perfection. His numerous pupils and followers had not the strength nor the transcendental qualities of mind of the master. Christ delivering the keys to S. Peter.

Bernardino Luini (early 16th cent.).—The Marriage of the Virgin. At Saronno. One of a series of four. Life is here painted in its most cheerful splendour, and yet with sincerest feeling.

Pietro Perugino.—The Adoration of the Kings, from a fresco at Cetta della Pieve, near Perugia.

Pacchiarotto.—S. Catherine finding the body of S. Agnes, from a fresco in the Oratory of S. Catherine at Sienan.

Carpaccio.—The Call of S. Matthew, from a picture in the Church of S. Giorgio dei Schiavoni at Venice.

Nicolo da Foligno.—The Madonna and Child with Attendant Saints in the communal palace at Gualdo Tadino.

Lorenzò di Viterbo.—The Betrothal of the Virgin, from a fresco in the Church of S. Maria della Verita at Viterbo.

Benozzo Gozzoli (1424-1500).—The Procession of the Three Kings. Angels Adoring. Two prints, from frescoes in the Chapel of the Ricardi Palace at Florence. These are full of delicate and beautiful fancies. He had a lively sense of the beauty of the material world, and shewed, for the time in which he lived, a very extraordinary skill in the treatment of the accessory parts of his paintings, as the landscapes, the architecture, the birds and animals introduced.

Vittore Pisano.—S. George, in the Church of S. Anastasia at Verona.

Jacopo d'Avanzo.—S. Lucy sentenced to death by the Roman Praetor, from a fresco in the Church of S. Antony at Padua.

Titian (1477-1576).—S. Antony of Padua healing the foot of a Young Man, from the fresco in the Scuola del Santo at Padua.

Pietro Perucino.—The Crucifixion, a triptych at Florence. Perhaps the most admired of all the Arundel prints.

Albert Durer (1471-1528).—The Adoration of the Holy Trinity, from a painting in the Belvedere Palace at Vienna.

Giovanni Bellini.—The Madonna and Child Enthroned, from the altarpiece in the Frare Church at Venice.

These are the more acceptable, since good reproductions of great pictures are rare in the north, and will be appreciated by all who take pleasure in beauty.

DIOCESAN CHURCH MANAGEMENT FUND.

Statement of Receipts and Expenditure for the Year ended 31st December, 1921.

EXPENDITURE.		£	s.	d.	£	s.	d.	RECEIPTS.		£	s.	d.	£	s.	d.
Bishop's House—Maintenance	72	19	5	Balance, 1/1/21	279	9	2
Melanesian Work	47	11	4			Subscriptions to the Diocese	126	2	11
Less Contributions	3	12	0			Emergency Fund	281	7	7
						43	19	4					407	10	6
Administration Fees	25	0	0	Diocesan Fees	3	13	6
Printing	4	14	3	Parish Assessments	12	12	6
Postages, Telegrams, Telephone	21	19	5	Carpentaria Association Donations	280	3	2
Capital of Sustentation Fund	145	0	0			Less S.A.W.M. Grants, £40; "The Carpenterian" £12	52	0	0
General	£67	6	0								228	3	2
Less Refunds	1	9	2			Interest	12	5	8
						66	16	10	W. & E. Hall Trust Grants	300	0	0
"The Carpenterian"...	47	8	8
Less Subscriptions	26	7	0
						21	1	8
Grants to Parishes—Quetta Churchwardens	25	0	0
Darwin	12	0	0
Normanton	16	13	4
Mossman	50	0	0
Cooktown	80	0	0
						183	13	4
Clergy Travelling Expenses	5	0	0
Children's Bursaries	100	0	0
Deaconess Buchanan Memorial Fund—Interest	5	9	11
Balance, 31/12/21	549	0	4
						£1,243	14	6					£1,243	14	6

Statement of Receipts and Expenditure of Special Trusts for the Year ended 31st December, 1921.

EXPENDITURE.				£	s.	d.	£	s.	d.	RECEIPTS.				£	s.	d.	£	s.	d.
Chas. Hall	80	3	2	Balance, 1/1/21	972	1	4
Australian Board of Missions	72	5	9	Deaconess Buchanan Memorial Fund—Interest	5	9	11
Mitchell River Mission—S.P.G.	23	19	6				Natives' Accustomable Dues	4	6	0
S.A.W.M.	10	0	0				O.D.S.P.—Saibai Building Fund	131	2	0
Sundries	165	2	11				C.M.S., for Ketch	810	0	0
							199	2	5	Sundries	42	16	5
O.D.S.P.—Ketch for C.M.S.	810	0	0				Mitchell River Mission	165	2	11
Sundry Trusts	2186	15	9				" " from S.P.G.	23	19	6
Less M.R.M. (above)	165	2	11				" " " S.A.W.M.	10	0	0
							21	12	10								1,183	0	10
							831	12	10	T.S.M.—From S.P.G.	5	0
Mitchell River Cattle	100	0	0	S.A.W.M.	20	0	0
Quetta Churchwardens	15	0	0	Sundries	239	10	4
Torres Straits Mission	284	5	4								259	15	4
Bursaries	60	0	0	Quetta Churchwardens, from S.A.W.M.	10	0	0
Christison Legacy Income, to Clergy Insurance	61	17	6	Australian Board of Missions	73	11	10
Balance, 31/12/21	845	8	0	Christison Legacy Income	41	9	9
							£2,549	15	0								£2,549	15	0

Statement of Assets and Liabilities at 31st December, 1921.

LIABILITIES.				£	s.	d.	£	s.	d.	ASSETS.				£	s.	d.	£	s.	d.
Bursaries	107	0	0	Stocks	175	0	0
Natives' Accustomable Dues	12	6	0	S.D.R.—Mitchell River Cattle	200	0	0
O.D.S.P.—Gertrude Robson Legacy	122	2	0				Bishopric Endowment Fund	9	17	3
Saibai Building Fund	131	2	0
Sundries	14	5	0
							267	11	0	Q.N. Bank—Fixed Deposit A/c...			209	17	3
Christison Legacy Income	28	17	7	Current A/c.			794	1	0
Christison Fund	263	11	9							215	10	1
Deaconess Buchanan Memorial Fund	162	15	7
Torres Straits Mission	2	0	0
Australian Board of Missions	1	6	1
Balance	549	0	4
							£1,394	8	4							£1,394	8	4

Examined and found correct—

24/1/22.

E. J. HENNESSEY, Auditor.

F. W. SLADE, Hon. Diocesan Secretary.

1922.

Diocese of Carpentaria.

Bishop:

RT. REV. STEPHEN HARRIS DAVIES.
Thursday Island, Queensland.

Administrator:

REV. F. W. SLADE, B.A.

Sub-Dean:

REV. F. W. SLADE, B.A.

Diocesan Secretary:

REV. F. W. SLADE, B.A., Thursday Island.

Commissaries:

REV. CHANCELLOR PONSONBY, M.A., The Rectory, Devonport, England.
REV. J. JONES, M.A., All Saints', S. Kilda, Melbourne.
REV. W. P. GLOVER, Th.L., Warwick, Q.
REV. C. B. MIERLEES, Springhill, Maesmore, Gloucester, England.

Clergy:

REV. B. S. COLE, Cooktown.
REV. C. W. LIGHT, Darwin.
REV. F. W. SLADE, B.A., Thursday Island.
REV. E. TAFFS, Mossman.
REV. HAROLD THOMPSON, Normanton.

Honorary Lay Readers:

MR. H. F. L. FINNISS, Darwin.
MR. D. A. ROBERTS, Darwin.

Diocesan Council:

REV. F. W. SLADE, B.A. MR. GEO. OLARK.
REV. J. J. E. DONE. MR. A. SULLIVAN.
REV. W. H. MACFARLANE, Th.L. DR. VERNON.

Honorary Legal Adviser:

HIS HONOUR JUDGE MACNAUGHTON.

Aboriginal Mission, Mitchell River:

MR. J. W. CHAPMAN. MRS. MATTHEWS.
REV. H. MATTHEWS, J.P. Miss F. SMITH.
MR. E. C. TONKIN. (Supt.) MRS. TEELLOGEN.
J. Geibo, T. Solomon, J. Savo.

Roper River Mission:

MR. DYER. MR. H. L. PERRIMAN.
REV. R. D. JOYNT. Miss CROSS.
REV. H. E. D. WARREN (Supt.) MRS. DYER.

Torres Straits Mission:

REV. J. J. E. DONE. REV. J. W. SCHOMBERG.
REV. W. H. MACFARLANE, Th.L. *REV. JOSEPH LUI.
DEACONESS HATTON, Thursday Island. *REV. POEY PASSI.
* Native Deacons.

The Diocese.

The See was founded in 1900, and consists of such part of Queensland as is bounded by the sea on the north and east, by the Northern Territory on the west, and by a line drawn from lat. S. 19deg. 30min. on the western boundary of Queensland due east to par. 144deg. E. and thence N. to lat. S. 16deg. 40min. and thence east to the sea, together with the whole of the Northern Territory, comprising an area of not less than 620,000 square miles. The population, which is very widely scattered over this immense area, consists of about 10,000 whites, 5,000 Japanese, Chinese, and other aliens, and 35,000 aboriginals. The white population is mainly mining and pastoral. The See town is Thursday Island, a pearling centre north of Cape York.

Finance.

The Diocese has no endowments beyond the Bishop's income of £395 per annum. Every parish needs a grant from central funds which come from subscriptions to the Diocese, and grants from English Societies.

Missions.

Missions are carried on amongst the Japanese at Thursday Island; the South Sea Islanders; the aboriginals on the Mitchell and Roper Rivers; and among the Islanders of the Torres Straits.

Special Offertories.

On Easter Day the offertories are given to the Clergyman of the Parish, and on Good Friday to the Australian Board of Missions.

The "Church Standard."

Posted to any Address for 6s. 6d. per Annum.

The CHURCH STANDARD holds the unique position of being the only independent weekly paper published in the interests of the Church of England in Australasia.

Published every Friday Morning.

Appeals to all Members of the Church of England, Members of the C.E.M.S. Clergymen, Sidesmen and Parochial Councillors, Sunday School Teachers, Lay Readers, and Clergy.

Specimen Copies on application to

THE CHURCH PUBLISHING CO. LTD.,

ROYAL INSURANCE BUILDINGS, 16 SPRING STREET, SYDNEY.

St. Margaret's, Brisbane.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND HIGH SCHOOL FOR GIRLS

Under the management of the Sisters of the Society of the Sacred Advent

Pupils prepared for examinations of the University of Queensland, Public Service and Associated Board R.A.

There are two Boarding Houses beautifully situated in extensive grounds overlooking the Brisbane River

BOARDERS RECEIVED FROM THE AGE OF EIGHT

FOR PROSPECTUS APPLY SISTER-IN-CHARGE

St. Catharine's, Stanthorpe.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND HIGH SCHOOL FOR GIRLS

Under the management of the Sisters of the Society of the Sacred Advent

Pupils prepared for examinations of the University of Queensland, and Associated Board R.A.

Additional House secured

Increased Accommodation for Boarders

FOR PROSPECTUS APPLY SISTER-IN-CHARGE

Church of England Girls' Schools

UNDER THE MANAGEMENT OF THE
SISTERS OF THE SACRED ADVENT.

S. ANNE'S, TOWNSVILLE, Quarterly Fees for Boarders £10 10s.
S. MARY'S, HERBERTON " " " £15 15s.

Pupils prepared for Queensland University and Associated Board R.A. Examinations.
Commercial Subjects taught. Open-air sleeping accommodation if required.

In connection with S. Mary's, Herberton, there is a separate House for Boys under nine years of age. Quarterly Fees, £12 10s.

The Carpenterian

FOR THE DIOCESE OF CARPENTARIA, NORTH AUSTRALIA.

Vol. XXII.—No. 87.]

THURSDAY ISLAND, JULY 1, 1922.

[PRICE 2/6 A YEAR.
POST FREE.]

PUBLISHED ON THE FIRST DAY OF EACH QUARTER.

NOTICE.

All communications to be addressed to the Editor of The Carpenterian, Bishop's House, Thursday Island, to whom subscriptions may be sent. Subscription, 2/6 per annum, post free.

The address of the Secretary for the Carpenterian Association in England is Miss Theodora Scarth, Bearsted, Kent, England.

NOTICE TO CONTRIBUTORS.

All contributions of Parish News, etc., must reach the Editor before the last day of February, May, August, and November in each year.

The Bishop's Letter.

The means of communication in the Diocese are not as good as I had imagined that they would be, but slowly I hope to get round to see every one of the clergy. It is not at all easy to make plans, for the overseas boats calling at Thursday Island are very uncertain in their movements—even the agents in the South can never tell you for certain two weeks ahead if their boat will call or not. My movements since my return to Australia have at times been very hurried; and then has come delay, or I suppose one would call it a compulsory holiday, generally in some place that you do not wish to stay in too long.

My first Sunday in Australia was spent in Sydney, where I had the opportunity of meeting some of the members of the S. James' Church congregation at the breakfast they have in their Church Hall after the sung Eucharist. Of course I was asked to say a few words. I only wish that I had known as much about the Diocese then as I do now. After my consecration I had my first delay, no boats going to Thursday Island just at that time; but this enabled me to preach at Holy Trinity Church, Woolloongabba, and then to travel out to Charleville to see old friends there. Here I expected a very strenuous time, but it was good to see again those who had helped so loyally in the past in the various Church schemes that had been launched there. I preached twice in All Saints' Church, talked to the children in the Sunday School, and then to those in the Hostel; but of all that I did that day by far the most trying was standing about having photos taken. Photographers are, as a rule, such fussy people. The reward comes after when you receive the photos. Leaving Charleville, I expected to be able to spend Palm Sunday only in Brisbane, as the boat calling at Thursday Island would not be calling at Brisbane. This meant travelling overland to Sydney, but at the last minute the shipping company changed their mind. I was saved a long train journey to Sydney. Holy Week was spent at Holy Trinity Church, Woolloongabba, helping with the daily services and conducting the Three Hours Service on Good Friday. At this service the Church was full most of the time. What a help this is to both conductor and congregation. Unfortunately Easter Day had to be spent at sea.

My enthronement took place on the first Sunday after Easter, those of the clergy who could do so came in to the service; the islanders from Moa brought in a most welcome gift of fruit—nine bunches of bananas with other fruit. I was glad that the priests who had come in were to stay for a quiet day; it would have been alarming for the two of us who usually stay at the Bishop's House to try to eat up the gift.

The quiet day was a very happy time. I was very impressed with the power of devotion shown by the two native deacons and the two students who were there. I have not been round the islands yet, but from what I saw of these men during their short stay on the Island there seems every hope of the Church work on the islands being done by native-born men in the near future.

The Francis Pritt arrived on May 1st to take me down to the Mitchell River. I see that it took us seven days to get down the Gulf to the landing place for the Missions. One evening we called in at Mapoon, the Mission Station belonging to the Presbyterian Church; this enabled us to compare notes as to methods of work, which has proved very useful to me certainly. As my stay had to be very short, services and conferences had to follow one another in quick succession. On the Sunday afternoon ten candidates were confirmed; there are now a good band of communicants at the Mission. On the Monday there was a quiet day for the staff—there seemed to be an exceptional stillness in the village as all the inhabitants had gone for a day's hunting. On the Tuesday we had a special Rogation-tide service and procession, all the inhabitants of the village taking part in the procession and the chanting of the Litany.

Leaving the Mitchell, I paid a hurried visit to Normanton and Croydon and thence overland to Cairns, so that I might visit Mossman and Cooktown. Unfortunately Normanton, Croydon and district are without a priest. At the time of writing I have heard of no one to go there. The mining in this district is a thing of the past, which means that the population has decreased, only those depending on the cattle industry being left there. I hope to find one or two priests who, while being attached to the North Queensland Brotherhood, will do all their work in this diocese.

At Mossman there was a confirmation. Here there is a concrete Church in process of erection. About one-third of the building is completed. There seems to be no reason why it should not soon be carried on. There is a lack of funds, I am told, but Mossman district is the most prosperous in the diocese at present, being a sugar cane district. From Mossman I journeyed to Cooktown, and after a week's stay here I returned to Cairns, hoping to catch a boat at once for Thursday Island. The boat that the shipping agents told me would be coming up did do so, but did not call at Cairns or Thursday Island. For three weeks I was held up here, knowing that there were many letters waiting on the Island for me to answer. I hope those who expect to receive answers to their letters promptly will remember that our mails are very intermittent.

The Archbishop of Brisbane handed me a cheque on my arrival in Brisbane, which was a gift sent through him to me from the parishes of Thursday Island, Mossman, Darwin and Cooktown. Please accept my warmest thanks for this present. I have handed the cheque to the Sewing Guild at All Saints', Brisbane, who are making me some vestments for use when celebrating the Holy Communion, and a cope. These I shall be using as I travel round the diocese. I hope to be able to show you them when I visit you.

On June 11 this year many Churches in England were, I hope, praying for the work of the Church in this diocese. Now some of these Churches are praying regularly for us as well as doing so on this particular day. A Cathedral and a Church that I know of in England have a very excellent way of helping their people to pray for the Church's work abroad. They have one of their side-chapels set apart for such intercession work. Chester Cathedral is the Cathedral. This I have only been told about and have not seen the chapel myself, but I know that we shall be remembered in this Cathedral, because the Bishop of Chester is one of the members of the Committee of the Carpentarian Association in England, and has promised to ask the Dean of his Cathedral to remember us. The Church is the Parish Church at Higham Ferrers. This Church I have been in. I can still remember how pleased I was when I went into this Church soon after I reached England last year. There I came across the side chapel with maps of the dioceses of the world on the walls and some booklets at the entrance about work abroad. At once I felt at home, for here at any rate was a place that had not forgotten about us down South. Later, when I knew that I was coming out again, I called on the Vicar, who promised to include Carpentaria in their Missionary intercessions on Wednesday and Friday every week. It will not be hard for his band of interceders to find our diocese, as in area it is one of the biggest in the world.

The date June 11 was chosen because it is S. Barnabas' Day, but it is the day that the Diocese of Melanesia has for many years asked for the prayers of the Church, so that our day may be changed in 1923.

There will be many other Churches remembering us on S. Barnabas' Day. I hope in another issue to tell you how many, because I know that here in the diocese it does help if we know that we are not forgotten.

Now, what is it that we do want people to pray for?

First, the most difficult work is amongst the aboriginals on the mainland. As children it seems possible that they may become strong, faithful, and intelligent Christians, but at about the age of 14 there is a marked change; they become dull, and from then on are inclined to return to their old superstitions. How are we to train catechists and deacons to evangelise their own people? Our Mission Stations only touch a few of the aboriginals; there are others called the camp men who live near the Missions; then there are those known as the Myall blacks who are shy and keep away from the Missions; all keep alive the old customs of the Second, the work on the Torres Islands. This is much more hopeful, for here there are two native deacons, both doing very satisfactory work, and there are two students being trained at S. Paul's, Moa Island. These islanders being mostly South Sea islanders, are intelligent and have a power of devotion that I think would surprise many English congregations. A little over fifty years ago they were hunting for heads, now they have Churches on nearly every island.

Third, scattered far apart over the mainland are white men of British birth pioneering the country. The Church at present does not get to many of these. One wonders if they will want the Church when the time comes that priests are found who will travel round them. Then there are little communities of people left on old goldfields. The ministrations of the Church to these people have been very intermittent. A priest has been found who lives amongst them for twelve months and then there is no one for some time. The need is for at least two priests working on Bush Brotherhood lines, possibly attached to a Brotherhood, who will work for five years or more amongst these people.

Enthronization of the Bishop.

The third Bishop of Carpentaria, the Right Reverend Stephen Harris Davies, who was consecrated in Brisbane on Lady Day, arrived at the See town, Thursday Island, in the steamer Eastern, on Friday, the 21st April; it had been necessary for his Lordship to join the ship on Easter Even, such are the difficulties of travel in these regions, but he made his Easter communion the next morning (Saturday). All the priests and deacons of the Torres Straits Mission arrived in town by the end of the week, and took part in the enthronization of the Bishop on Low Sunday, April 23rd.

The service was at ten o'clock, when there was a large congregation of parishioners; the Bishop, attended by the Rev. J. W. Schomberg as chaplain, was received at the west door of the Church by the Administrator and clergy, the administrator having the mandate of the Metropolitan of Queensland to enthrone the Bishop, and after the usual formulas, a procession was formed, and Psalm cxx. was sung; the documents were read at the chancel step; Psalm lxxxix. 20-30 was sung while proceeding to the altar, where the prayers were read; the Bishop was then placed in his chair and invested with the insignia. Holy Communion was then celebrated by the Bishop, with the Rev. J. J. E. Done as deacon, and the Rev. W. H. MacFarlane as sub-deacon, the Revs. Joseph Lui and Poey Passi as servers; preacher, the Sub-Dean. The sermon was from the end of St. Matthew's gospel, on the value of the Apostolic ministry.

The same day, after Evensong, the Bishop preached from the text, "We are able," and the sermon was followed by a procession.

We have mentioned lately that the Government has reserved for aboriginals the property known as Mitchelton, near the mouth of the Mitchell River. The effect of this is to make a continuous reserve from Mapoon Mission southwards to beyond the Mitchell River Mission. The Government have now appointed the superintendent of Mitchell River Mission to be supervisor of the southern portion of the reserve between the two above Missions, that is, between the Mitchell River and the Holroyd River, without salary, until permanent control over the new reserve is established. On the same terms, Mapoon Mission has been asked to supervise the northern portion of the new reserve. Both Missions are very willing to do what they can by means of the new appointments for the protection of the natives.

There is great need for several new Missions on the mainland, but there seems no prospect at present of establishing any. If the increased support asked for by A.B.M. is given—and our earnest wish is that it will be—the Board will be in a position to consider the establishment of new Missions.

(Kindly lent by the Church Standard.)

The Parishes.

THURSDAY ISLAND.

The attendance of worshippers on Easter Day was quite encouraging, as was also the attendance on Good Friday, and we know, in spite of the peculiar difficulties of this parish, that we are on the winning side. The Easter music was heartily sung, and the decorations made the Church look as beautiful and festive as possible.

The parishioners and their friends assembled in the Parish Institute on the evening of the 24th April, to meet the third Bishop of Carpentaria and bid his Lordship welcome to his See. The meeting was largely attended, and was made pleasant by music and refreshments. The Bishop was welcomed by loyal speeches from the Vicar and Wardens, and in reply expressed his pleasure at meeting the people here, and his hopes for the continued progress of the Church.

There was a large number of communicants at the early service on Anzac Day, and at the special service at 9.30 the Church was crowded as usual on this day: the present limited accommodation prevented some from having good seats. When the Church is completed that difficulty will not arise. The solemn observances on this day seem to lose none of their fervour as the years roll on.

The public meeting in the Town Hall in the evening was very largely attended, in spite of the unusual rain, and was probably the best of the Anzac meetings yet held here.

The Easter meeting held in the Parish Institute on the 5th May decided to have a fête for building funds during the first week in October. Preparations are now in full swing, weekly sewing meetings are being held, and "gift evenings" and "coin evenings." It is hoped to raise at least £100 this year for the preservation and improvement of the property.

An interesting photograph has been received from England of a two-light window in the Church of the Holy Cross, Bearstead, Kent, erected to the memory of Albert MacLaren. The figures are two of the early Missionaries who converted Britain to Christianity, and the face of one of them is, according to a custom of which our Church here furnishes two examples, from a portrait of Mr. MacLaren. He died at sea after being one of the founders of the New Guinea Mission. His mortal remains were buried at Cooktown. His memory should ever be honoured in this parish, as he was the first to make an effort for the erection of our Church here.

The nave of the Church has been re-covered with a material which looks well, and may be confidently expected to be permanent. The sheets of iron removed were sorted, and the good ones used to mend the roof of the institute, which now looks quite smart in purple-brown paint. There are still the roofs of the chancel and aisles to be re-covered with permanent material to replace the sheet iron which is wearing out through the action of tropical sea air, and to be fitted with permanent guttering.

Another of them! In a story in the Sydney Mail of April 19th, Thursday Island is described as a "sun-baked tile on the roof of Australia." A truly accurate description of a spot where (1) the temperature is never much over 90 degrees, (2) the rainfall is far greater than in Sydney, (3) the height is but a few feet above sea level. So it is not surprising to read that in these waters a man worked a thirty-ton sailing vessel single-handed for ten years without a mishap!

COOKTOWN.

From a letter: Cooktown is fast becoming one of the outposts of Northern Queensland. It is to be regretted that unless something unforeseen transpires, such as the opening up afresh of the gold mining, we are doomed to become a third-rate village. Get the people on the land! Why did they ever allow such numbers to relinquish their holdings? We want population in Australia, but Australia is not alone in this demand; there may be thousands of acres available round Cooktown, but so there are where better facilities are afforded within easy reach of large markets.

Every boat marks the drift of a number of Churchpeople who go to seek their fortunes elsewhere. Notwithstanding this, we look back over the past year with gratitude and admiration for the loyalty of those who bid us farewell and of those who remain. The burden becomes heavier for those faithful few who remain, but when our finances show only something like a difference of five pounds, compared with the most successful years, we take courage. We are indebted to the Diocesan Administration for the substantial assistance it gives to the parish.

Our Good Friday services were well attended, and the fair sized congregation that remained throughout the Three Hours service was helpful to all. The lantern service, as a preparation for Good Friday on the Wednesday previous, could have been better attended, but one was deeply impressed with its devotional attitude.

Easter Day services throughout were splendid; our communicants' roll is considerably depleted compared with two years ago, but with the exception of half-a-dozen, all seem to have made their Easter Communion.

Anzac Day was another red-letter day in the parish quickly following upon Easter. Here again we had a congregation at the Eucharist that filled the Church. The weather was boisterous and wet; it doubtless spoiled the public procession and prevented a number from attending the celebrations, but the attendance at the evening meeting was substantial. Cooktown is loyal, and its well-filled hall testified to the fact.

We are looking forward to the Bishop's first visit. [Described in the Bishop's letter.—Ed.]

The Missions.

From a report: "Bad trip; wet and seasick; mosquitoes, calms, storms; three times aground on reefs through sudden squalls; outbreak of boils on my right arm." The above was not intended for publication, but was incidental to explain matters in an official report. We mention it because many of our readers do not realise that such conditions are not abnormal, but are part of the daily life of a Missionary. Know ye what it is to be wet through all day and all night? There are hundreds of other men living in the same conditions as the Missionaries, involving the necessity of building your house with your own hands and "out of your own head," and the necessity of undertaking journeys accompanied by the risk of death by thirst, as well as the more commonplace necessities of cooking and washing for yourself and extracting your own teeth. Nobody ever seems to complain, and Missionaries are not likely to have less hardihood than other pioneers. But whoever started the notion that their work consists in telling pretty stories to the dear darkies?

TORRES STRAITS.—Mrs. Done returned from Sydney and rejoined her husband, her two sons with her, early in July. It will be necessary to build a new Church at Saibai as soon as possible; the money for materials has been subscribed by the people; the labour will be given free. Whooping cough has appeared in the islands in a bad form, and has caused several deaths of little children. The people at Moa are trying to contribute a substantial sum towards the cost of the Mission cutter. The attendances of the people at all services continue to be very good indeed.

MITCHELL RIVER.—Miss Smith, a much esteemed member of the staff, started on furlough early in June, and sailed for home from Thursday Island in the coastal steamer. Severe economy will be necessary to reduce the heavy debt, and is being cheerfully practiced; the Bishop of New Guinea continues to send moneys received by him for this purpose. The wild natives in the camps are beginning to take an interest in farming, and are asking the Mission for assistance in making a beginning—one of the most hopeful signs yet vouchsafed to the workers. Mr. E. C. Tonkin, who has been at the Mission for a year and a-half, has had to leave. Tom Solomon, who has been a worker almost from the beginning of the Mission, has departed this life; he was skipper of the ketch for many years, and gave that up some four years ago through advancing age; since then he has been employed at light work. May he rest in peace.

ROPER RIVER.—The new station at Groote Island is gradually getting firmly established. The people here are extremely backward and suspicious and are in a bad way; there are few children, and the women are kept out of sight, but one lady on the staff has been allowed to see some of them. There is good soil, which, with the fisheries, can support a large population. The superintendent made a gallant effort to come to town to greet the new Bishop and to do necessary business and purchase stores, but the fuel for his engine had been 'borrowed,' and he had to depend on sails, which were not equal to the task of locomotion in bad weather. At his third attempt, and after losing his anchors and manufacturing others to replace them, his foremast carried away, and his ship could only limp back home jury rigged. His agents at Thursday Island sent food in a chartered ship.

The Carpentarian

FOR THE DIOCESE OF CARPENTARIA,
NORTH AUSTRALIA.

Vol. XXII., No. 87. Thursday Island, July 1, 1922

Reflections on the Life of S. Boniface.

The study of the lives of the Saints is always helpful, but in reading the life of S. Boniface, who lived A.D. 679-755, one is struck with the similarity that there is in the conditions that he had to face in his Missionary efforts, with those that have to be faced to-day in such a diocese as this. One can go further and see that we use in some ways the same methods, but because of a few very essential differences, the evangelistic work of the Church is not nearly so effective.

S. Boniface began his training in a monastery at Exeter, soon passing from there to the monastery at Nutschell, near Winchester; here he was much trusted, with the result that he was given some very difficult and responsible work to do; but he had always believed that he was meant to do other work—the carrying of the Christian faith to the pagan. In his case this meant to the people of Frisia. Whether any efforts were made to persuade him to stay in England on this occasion is not known. At a later date such efforts were made; after his first visit to the country of Frisia, which was not successful, he was staying at the Abbey at Nutschell when their Abbot died; his fellow monks pressed him to become their Abbot. Now Boniface had only returned to his monastery to wait until the political causes that had caused his first Missionary effort to be unsuccessful to alter; suddenly he had to decide whether he was ever to return to Frisia. We know his decision; he refused to be kept from that which he believed to be his life's work even though his best friends pressed him to do so.

Might not all this be said about a person in Melbourne or Sydney to-day; the same questions have to be answered by them for their own selves that Boniface had to decide for himself; at first the decision whether one is to spend his life in evangelising near one's home or in a foreign country, with friends who can always point out to you the work that needs to be done at home; at a later date comes the offer of a big and responsible work, but at home; should one accept such work rather than risking the possibility of proving oneself a failure in a new work in a strange country? Boniface was quite clear about his decisions, he left England never to return. On arriving at the field of his work he received a letter from Pope Gregory II., in which the Pope could divide the peoples to whom he was to go into three divisions; there were the God-fearing, who were exhorted to help S. Boniface; it was to these that the letter was really sent; then there were those who were only Christian in name; these S. Boniface is to correct, teach, inform, and establish; and last, there were those who had no knowledge of God their Creator, nor had they been baptised. Just the same divisions as one can see to-day.

S. Boniface decided that he had to deal with the lapsed Christian first, not that he restored all to the faith, but many he did. He found that one of the chief causes of Christians lapsing was because of the petty local quarrels in their Churches; there were many abuses which needed correcting; local disputes between Churches prevented these abuses being dealt with. He saw that he had to unite them in some way, and the only way that he could find was by getting them to submit to one spiritual head, in this case the Pope. In writing to his English friends he advises them to do the same, for there were divisions in the Church life; their three, and possibly up to seven, were apparent. He tells his friends that there is no effective way of overcoming this trouble except that which he had travelled, bringing them all into touch with one central organisation, and thus getting a spiritual influence to bear on their problems from a source cut off from their local disputes. S. Boniface saw the necessity of a united Christendom in faith and outward organisation if effective Missionary work was to be done. As he was able to find a court of appeal to which the Christian Churches could come, he was able to bring about a great reformation, and he could speak to his English friends from such experience. One wonders what advice S. Boniface would give to his own country to-day.

It was not only in this unity of organisation, in which he had a great advantage over the Missionary of to-day; when he knew the needs of his district, he can send letters to his friends, asking for helpers; at once religious men and women are sent. There was no lack of support from his home base in this. A multitude of "readers, writers, and men learned and skilled in various arts," came to put themselves under him. He thus had not only numbers, but men and women trained for their spiritual work, who were in a position to make any sacrifice that was necessary for the fulfilment of that work. How different! we call for volunteers when someone is wanted for a special work; we get offers from men and women, but they have not tested their vocation to live the life of a Religious, have gone through no special training for their spiritual work, and in some cases are not prepared to make such work their life work.

We next come to something that we have in common with our saint. He was careful to make sure that the Church was praying for his work, so that we find that his friends, writing to Lul, after the death of Boniface, promise to continue to pray for him (Lul). Cuthbert, Archbishop of Canterbury, could write to say that Synod had determined that it was necessary to continue the arrangement for mutual prayer made in the time of Boniface. Milret, Bishop of Worcester, writes to the same effect; Oinehead, Bishop of Winchester, also assures Lul that the arrangements made by his predecessors, Daniel and Hunfrith, will be maintained. It seems that such intercession and prayer was in no way left to individuals to arrange, but was attended to by the organisation maintained for Church purposes in each Diocese; Synods passed resolutions that such prayers must be continued. We know the need, but with us, Synods are busy discussing money matters, so separate organisations have to be established and much money and energy expended in order to ensure that such intercession is carried on—individual parishes have to be approached instead of a whole diocese.

There are the same disappointments mentioned in his letters as are experienced to-day. He writes to his friends Leoba, Thecla, and Cynehild, describing one such, "some of whom he had felt sure of as sheep, having in the end a place on the right hand of Christ, had turned out to be stinking, butting goats, who must be placed on the left hand." We may not use such picturesque language, but we have the goats. Another method, common to Boniface and ourselves, is the settling of a strong Christian community on the edge of heathen territory; but we make one essential difference in those who form that band. Sturmi, a monk, was sent by his master Boniface to select a suitable site for a monastery—it was to be a place with good water and level ground, which could be cultivated when the forest was cleared. This monastery was to be a centre of spiritual energy from which the pagans were to be evangelised. A site was found, and Sturmi, with seven monks, established their monastery, content to spend the remainder of their days there unless ordered to go elsewhere. We select our sites amongst the aboriginal tribes, but the band of workers is not a community, there is a continual changing of the personnel of the staff; new members would arrive at the monasteries but none would be leaving, there would be no sudden changing of method or rules because the Superior or Abbot or Superintendent died; a community would carry the work on in the same way for generations, but a group of individuals thrown together by chance would always tend to carry out the ideas of the strongest personality amongst themselves. The personality of the individual is controlled in a community by obedience to the rules of the community, therefore there is no cessation of good work as there is in the individualistic work carried on by us when that strong personality dies or moves away. There is the further point: there was apparently no attempt made to introduce a new way of earning a livelihood amongst these heathen peoples, except in so far as they gave up their pagan customs when they accepted the Christian faith. We are trying to turn hunters into farmers and mechanics, and an enormous amount of energy is expended in so doing. At great cost the people are fed in the Mission village in the hope that they will settle down to earn a living for themselves later. The staff at the Mission has always to guard against allowing their time becoming wholly occupied in the material work; as it is, very little time can be spared to teach and explain the faith to those who will not live on the Mission. We are always short of money, yet I can only find one letter in which Boniface asked for material help for those working amongst the pagan. This was addressed to King Peppin, in which he says, "Bread to eat they can obtain, but clothing they cannot find there and must obtain from elsewhere by means of those able and willing to help."

This article is not meant to be a criticism of our efforts in this diocese, but is just a series of reflections that occur to one's mind in reading of St. Boniface and his work. It does seem to be worth while reading and studying the methods used by Missionaries even 1200 years ago, because they were so remarkably successful in their work. There seems to be two features lacking to-day that make our efforts feeble, both of which could be remedied.

First the need of unity in Christendom in faith and organisation. Then in our own part of the Church the need of hundreds of lives consecrated to the work of their Church, men and women who are prepared to renounce all ties which may interfere with them giving themselves to such work. Many would add a third need—money—but S. Boniface did not have to ask for this; and when the time comes that Religious Orders carry on the Missionary work of the Church, the writer believes that the money given at present will suffice. He wonders if the appeal for money may not be overshadowing the greater appeal for lives, and the giving of money an easier sacrifice than the giving of self.

The Canadian Prayer Book.

It is attractive to the eye of any lover of good workmanship in the beautiful art of producing printed books, and pleases by the beauty of its types and format, and by several practical features, such as the provision that any edition of it, large or small, is page for page and line for line, the same as any other edition.

It is not so much a revision of the book with the long title which we call The Prayer Book for short, as an edition of it with a few alterations and a number of additions; it is printed by the Syndics of the Cambridge University Press, and came into use in our Church in Canada last Easter Day, replacing the Prayer Book with which we are familiar.

No one is likely to dislike any of the alterations, and the additions are all to the good; many would prefer a book with far more changes in it, and the very conservative policy of our brethren in Canada should calm the minds of those who fear that any changes that might be made in Australia would be drastic. It is almost certain that when the Australian edition of the Prayer Book comes, it will be on the lines of the Canadian edition.

When it comes! That is what makes us envious of the Dominion; in our country we have tied our hands, getting the Parliaments to bind us not make any alterations, however desirable to meet changing conditions, in the sixteenth century forms we have bound ourselves to use in Church. Some day, no doubt, the progressives will satisfy the conservatives that they have no sinister designs, and persuade them to untie their hands.

Many of our readers take an interest in Prayer Book revision, and a reference to the changes in the Canadian Prayer Book will illustrate what really is meant by that term.

The tables to find Easter are omitted, but there is list of movable feasts for a century.

The Psalter remains unchanged, except that Proper Psalms are provided for twenty-one days in the year, and any one of sixteen selections of Psalms may replace the Psalms of the course on a thirty-first day, and other occasions. This is more conservative, and surely much better, than the English proposals.

The Kalendar has added to it a number of black letter days—S. Chrysostom, S. Patrick, etc., and one red letter day, the Transfiguration, 6th August. There are services for Rogation and Ember Days. A Table of Occurrence is provided—to regulate the service when two holy days come on the same day—and it is noticeable that transferences are to Mondays, instead of to Tuesdays; for instance, S. Barnabas would be commemorated this year on the day after Trinity Sunday, thus making no provision for observing the Eve. Shortened services are permitted after the manner of the discredited "Shortened Services Act" in England.

Some curiosities are apologetic rubrics explaining "hell" in the Apostles' Creed, and the minatory clauses of the Athanasian Creed; and the substitution of "Who" for "Which" everywhere in the beginning of the Lord's Prayer.

Proper anthems instead of Venite are appointed for Christmas Day and some other great days; proper sentences for certain seasons instead of the ordinary sentences at the beginning of Morning and Evening Prayer; a proper preface on the Epiphany; and additional alternative sentences at the beginning of Morning and Evening Prayer and at the offertory.

An alternative form is provided for state prayers, many additional occasional prayers, and optional prayers in the visitation office; petitions for the faithful departed are inserted.

There are some curious rubrics; banns may not be published on holy days other than Sundays; a sermon is "permitted" after Mattins and Evensong—although nothing can interfere with the right of a rector to preach a sermon at any time, except that he may not interrupt the Communion by a sermon unless he puts it just after the Creed; without any authorising rubric he may preach before or after any service, before or after any lesson, etc.; and instruction in the Catechism is recommended to be done in the open Church as "most expedient."

The Order of Confirmation is so greatly altered as to shew that the ideas of the revisers differ widely from those of the Prayer Book, where it is plain that this rite is meant to be administered during or after a regular service. A surprising rubric is one giving permission to add The Grace to the end of the Baptism Office, from which the Prayer Book so carefully omits it for an obvious reason.

The Athanasian Creed is dealt with feebly: it may be used on any day in the year, and no days are prescribed for its use. How much better was Lord Halifax's suggestion to add to the Prayer Book for optional use the ancient office of Prime, which contains this Song of the Faith on Sundays, and which would often be useful before an early celebration when Mattins is to be said at a later hour; in that position it would cause difficulty to no worshipper, and would be used regularly by the devout. The Canadian device merely adds to the difficulties of the clergy.

No alteration (other than those noted above) is made in the Eucharist, except that the summary of the Law may replace the Decalogue under certain conditions, and the Prayer of Oblation and the Thanksgiving may both be said at the one service; but services are provided for nuptial and funeral Eucharists; and the Gospel Anthem is inserted for compulsory use.

Permission is given to baptize privately adults in danger of death; the Bidding Prayer is inserted; there are verbal changes in the Catechism and the Communion; there are a few other alterations which will not make much difference in practice; and at the end are a number of forms for special occasions, as Harvest, Missions, etc., together with forms for family prayer.

While almost everybody will wish that some other changes or additions had been made, and while some may criticise the wording of the new prayers, it is evident that there is no chance of any drastic or reckless proposals being passed by the Canadian Church, and that is the important thing for us in Australia; we need have no fears that the Australian Church would misuse its powers if it assumed them; its leaders have enough wisdom and prudence, as well as enough practical experience, to proceed carefully in any revision.

SUBSCRIPTIONS RECEIVED.—Mr. H. G. Simpson, Mrs. G. H. Clarke, Rev. W. H. MacFarlane, Mrs. Lee, each 2/6; Mrs. Jones, 3/-. Per Rev. J. W. Light: Miss Herbert, 10/-.

With a Mission Priest in Torres Straits.

All round black hovering clouds betoken the presence of the nor'-west monsoon. Our little eight-ton cutter is riding over the waves—waters usually sparkling in opalescent brilliance, but now grey and topped with ominous white caps. The wind is shifting from point to point, and the native skipper, casting weather-wise eyes around, gives the order to take in reefs. Dauan Island, away in the distance, rising up cone-like, becomes lost in the haze. Presently the squall breaks—stinging rain, fierce beating wind that seems determined to hurl us right out of the water. With sails dropped right down now, loose ends flapping, we hurtle through the waters, realising that at any moment a sickening grinding scrunch may announce a "hold-up" on the jagged jaws of the reef. We hope fervently, too, that we shall not be drawn into a waterspout. Just a little way back a ship was caught, and had foundered not so long ago. The rain pelts down remorselessly, running in streams off the semi-naked steersman and the boys in the rigging; it and the leaping waves have long ago poured down below and converted everything into sticky wetness. In the tiny cabin, boots and books, clothing and food, give a demonstration of "pigs in clover," and a capsized hurricane lamp spreads the odour of kerosene through the already close atmosphere. The ship lurches and rocks and heaves. But in a little while there is a lull, the greyness lifts, and once more we are running along under canvas.

Rounding the point of Dauan, with but a few feet to spare between the vessel and great projecting masses of stone, a big canoe comes gliding out to meet us, outriggers lifting and falling on the water's surface like an oscillating seaplane. The visitor by our side looks apprehensively at the great barbarous-looking craft, with its almost naked figures. We recognise one, though, adorned with scarlet calico, in the prow—he of the long ear-lobes and brush of fuzzy hair—he is one of the Churchwardens. They shout in greeting; it is a month since we saw them last. Only a couple of miles away is the coast of Southern New Guinea, and glancing across, we wonder what those great inner depths and mountainous tracts conceal. The head-hunters are not so many miles inland—more than once they have come down suddenly upon this very island. And then, as the eye comes back again to the laughing, joking group in the canoe, now circling gracefully round the cutter, we wonder if it is really true that only half-a-century ago these people were head-hunters too.

Early morning! The village roosters—"man-pow!" the native calls them—have announced daylight, and a white-clad bellringer is calling the people to prayer. The native-built Church, quaint in its obtrusiveness, and yet perfectly in harmony with the surrounding feathery-plumed palms and brown thatched houses, is filling silently. Two points of light—symbol of the greater Light that has come—twinkle on the Altar. A quiet prayer of preparation, then the voices rise in an introit in a strange language; on the 'deacon's step a tall, brown-skinned figure comes presently to read the Gospel. And so the people have a native ministry! The liturgy proceeds, the kneeling figures take their places at the Altar-rail; the Healer of the nations, the Prince of Peace, is here!

From the rock-strewn point, where Chalmers the Trail Blazer (Tamate) once had his home, we discern a launch filled with native police and some white figures, chug-chugging along the coast opposite. She is making for a spot some little distance westwards. There has been a massacre; the hillmen have wiped out a small white prospecting expedition, and a punitive force is exacting retribution. My Churchwarden companion looks at me, and his dusky features seem to convey mingled sadness and reproach. "Oh, those people no got the light yet," he says. I recall those words of that gifted leader of men, Sir William MacGregor: "Years ago I pronounced Mission teaching to be indispensable."

The Change.

(FROM A CORRESPONDENT.)

In the chronicles of a ship visiting the islands of Torres Straits last century, reference is made to the treacherous inhabitants of Darnley. There was reason for caution on the part of the visiting ships no doubt, for more than one massacre had occurred on the island. Revenge for injuries inflicted prompted some of the murders; in other cases there was the love of head-collecting and the necessity for acquiring a skull to make things straight for some departed friend. Then, too, there was virtue in certain parts of the flesh—in the cheeks and the eyes for example.

I was walking the other day round Massacre Bay. The old churchwarden accompanying me was detailing his remembrances of the Zogo House, with its pile of human skulls like a great heap of coconuts. He himself was an ex-zogo man, and his fathers before him were powerful in the making of charms and casting of spells. It is only half a century since the first Missionaries landed close to this very bay. And now the bell from the coral-lime Church round on the point between Medigee and Badog Bays, announcing the hour of prayer to the garden workers, seems as if it had always sounded over the green-clad hills. The hymn of the Incarnation ascends as naturally and as readily from those dusky worshippers as though they had been accustomed to nothing else.

Are those chroniclers amongst the cloud of witnesses, I wonder? Is the veil held asunder that they may look on what the mysteries of God may accomplish?

The Australian Board of Missions notifies us that it expects to receive £177 from this diocese for this year; this is far more than can be expected on a population basis, and we do not know on what basis the estimate is arrived at. A great deal more than the above sum is raised annually in this diocese for Missions, but most of what is raised is spent within the Diocese. The amount given to the A.B.M. last year was about the amount of our self-assessment, which is £75; if all Australia gave in the same proportion, the income of A.B.M. would be multiplied greatly. But we beg the faithful to do what they can towards increasing the amount we receive for A.B.M., which is really in need of largely increased income; no work is more deserving of support.

Acknowledgments.

The Hon. Diocesan Secretary has received the following amounts during the quarter ending June 30th, 1922:—

	£	s	d
S. Andrew's Waterside Mission Grant	40	0	0
Walter and Eliza Hall Trust Grant	125	0	0
Parochial Assessment, Cooktown...	2	2	0
Diocesan Special Fund—Balance from Savings Bank	2	15	10
Forsyth Church Building Fund...	38	7	0
Diocesan Fees: Rev. H. Thompson	10	0	0
Rev. F. W. Slade	10	0	0
Rev. E. Taffs	3	3	0

Natives' Accustomable Dues:

Rev. J. W. Schomberg	1	10	0
Rev. W. H. McFarlane	5	0	0

Donations towards Dinghy Engine 10 10 0

For the Australian Board of Missions:

Thursday Island	...	8	4	4
Saibai	"	1	10	0
Dauan	"	2	2	0
Darnley	"	1	4	0
Moa	"	5	8	0
Badu	"	2	6	0
Mabuiag	"	2	7	0
Stephen	"	1	0	0
Yorke	"	1	1	0
Murray	"	6	0	0
Mossman	...	2	1	0
Cooktown	...	2	2	10

For the Torres Straits Mission:

Contributions, S. Paul's, Moa	34	10	0
Darnley Island	10	19	0
Badu	5	15	0
Adam	1	16	0
Mabuiag	9	18	0
Stephen	2	8	0
Yorke	2	0	0

Donations, Mr J. Fergusson

Thursday Island Girls'

Friendly Society ... 5 0 0

Sales of Native Hymn Books 26 2 0

For the Mitchell River Mission:

Donations, H. S. R. Thornton 2 9 6

Per the Bishop of

New Guinea 56 10 6

We are grateful for a recent bequest to Torres Straits Mission; the executors of the estate of Louise Bancroft, who departed this life on the 11th June, notify that she bequeaths one hundred pounds to the Bishop of Carpentaria, in trust for that Mission. The money will be most useful at this juncture, but an effort will be made to expend it on some permanent work, which will remain as a memorial of the donor's piety.

In our last issue we referred to similar incorrect assertions from another source, and published the facts which refute them. The North is backward and undeveloped and its inhabitants endure the hardships of pioneers, but climatically it is as well suited to white settlers as any other part of the world.

Reduction for Sisters. Fees for both Schools on application.

1922.

Diocese of Carpentaria.

Bishop :

RT. REV. STEPHEN HARRIS DAVIES.
Thursday Island, Queensland.

Administrator :

REV. F. W. SLADE, B.A.

Sub-Dean :

REV. F. W. SLADE, B.A.

Diocesan Secretary :

REV. F. W. SLADE, B.A., Thursday Island.

Commissaries :

REV. J. JONES, M.A., All Saints', S. Kilda, Melbourne.
REV. C. B. MIRRELES, Springhill, Maesmore, Gloucester,
England.
REV. W. J. B. SCOTT, 16 Little Grosvenor Street, London,
W. 1.
REV. CECIL EDWARDS, Holy Trinity Rectory, Woolloom-gatta.

Rectors :

REV. B. S. COLE, Cooktown.
REV. C. W. LIGHT, Darwin.
REV. F. W. SLADE, B.A., Thursday Island.
REV. E. TAFFS, Mossman.

Honorary Lay Readers :

MR. H. F. L. FINNISS, Darwin
HIS HONOUR JUDGE ROBERTS, Darwin.

Diocesan Council :

REV. F. W. SLADE, B.A.	MR. GEO. OLARK.
REV. J. J. E. DONE.	MR. A. SULLIVAN.
REV. W. H. MACFARLANE, Th.L.	DR. VERNON.

Honorary Legal Adviser :

HIS HONOUR JUDGE MACNAUGHTON.

Aboriginal Mission, Mitchell River :

MR. J. W. CHAPMAN.	MRS. MATTHEWS.
REV. H. MATTHEWS, J.P.	MISS F. SMITH.
(Supt.)	MRS. TRELLOGEN.
J. Geibe, J. Savo.

Roper River Mission :

MR. DYER.	MR. H. L. FERRIMAN.
REV. R. D. JOYNT.	MISS CROSS.
REV. H. E. D. WARREN	MRS. DYER.
(Supt.)

Torres Straits Mission :

REV. J. J. E. DONE.	REV. J. W. SCHOMBERG.
REV. W. H. MACFARLANE, [Th.L.]	*REV. JOSEPH LUL.
	*REV. POEY PASSI.
DEACONESS HATTON, Moa.
* Native Deacons.

The Diocese.

The See was founded in 1900, and consists of such part of Queensland as is bounded by the sea on the north and east, by the Northern Territory on the west, and by a line drawn from lat. S. 19deg. 30min. on the western boundary of Queensland due east to par. 144deg. E. and thence N. to lat. S. 16deg. 40min. and thence east to the sea, together with the whole of the Northern Territory, comprising an area of not less than 620,000 square miles. The population, which is very widely scattered over this immense area, consists of about 10,000 whites, 5,000 Japanese, Chinese, and other aliens, and 35,000 aboriginals. The white population is mainly mining and pastoral. The See town is Thursday Island, a pearling centre north of Cape York.

Finance.

The Diocese has no endowments beyond the Bishop's income of £395 per annum. Every parish needs a grant from central funds which come from subscriptions to the Diocese, and grants from English Societies.

Missions.

Missions are carried on amongst the Japanese at Thursday Island; the South Sea Islanders; the aboriginals on the Mitchell and Roper Rivers; and among the Islanders of the Torres Straits.

Special Offertories.

On Easter Day the offertories are given to the Clergyman of the Parish, and on Good Friday to the Australian Board of Missions.

The "Church Standard."

Posted to any Address for 6s. 6d. per Annum.

The CHURCH STANDARD holds the unique position of being the only independent weekly paper published in the interests of the Church of England in Australasia.

Published every Friday Morning.

Appeals to all Members of the Church of England, Members of the C.E.M.S., Churchwardens, Sidesmen and Parochial Councillors, Sunday School Teachers, Lay Readers, Catechists, and Clergy.

Specimen Copies on application to

THE CHURCH PUBLISHING CO. LTD.,

ROYAL INSURANCE BUILDINGS, 16 SPRING STREET, SYDNEY.

St. Margaret's, Brisbane.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND HIGH SCHOOL FOR GIRLS

Under the management of the Sisters of the Society of the Sacred Advent

Pupils prepared for examinations of the University of Queensland, Public Service and Associated Board R.A.

There are two Boarding Houses beautifully situated in extensive grounds overlooking the Brisbane River

BOARDERS RECEIVED FROM THE AGE OF EIGHT

FOR PROSPECTUS APPLY SISTER-IN-CHARGE

St. Catharine's, Stanthorpe.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND HIGH SCHOOL FOR GIRLS

Under the management of the Sisters of the Society of the Sacred Advent

Pupils prepared for examinations of the University of Queensland, and Associated Board R.A.

Additional House secured

Increased Accommodation for Boarders

FOR PROSPECTUS APPLY SISTER-IN-CHARGE

Church of England Girls' Schools

UNDER THE MANAGEMENT OF THE
SISTERS OF THE SACRED ADVENT.

S. ANNE'S, TOWNSVILLE, Quarterly Fees for Boarders	£10	10s.
S. MARY'S, HERBERTON	£15	15s.

Pupils prepared for Queensland University and Associated Board R.A. Examinations.
Commercial Subjects taught. Open-air sleeping accommodation if required.

In connection with S. Mary's, Herberton, there is a separate House for Boys under nine years of age. Quarterly Fees, £12 10s.

The Carpenterian

FOR THE DIOCESE OF CARPENTARIA, NORTH AUSTRALIA.

Vol. XXII.—No. 88.]

THURSDAY ISLAND, OCTOBER 2, 1922.

[PRICE 2/6 A YEAR.

PUBLISHED ON THE FIRST DAY OF EACH QUARTER.

POST FREE.

NOTICE.

All communications to be addressed to the Editor of The Carpenterian, Bishop's House, Thursday Island, to whom subscriptions may be sent. Subscription, 2/6 per annum, post free.

The address of the Secretary for the Carpenterian Association in England is Miss Theodora Scarth, Bearsted, Kent, England.

NOTICE TO CONTRIBUTORS.

All contributions of Parish News, etc., must reach the Editor before the last day of February, May, August, and November in each year.

The Bishop's Movements.

At the beginning of this Quarter a visit was paid to the Islands, only those under the care of Rev. J. Schomberg being visited on this trip; but the visit lasted long enough to introduce the Bishop to Island ways and customs, and to make him look forward to the longer visit that is to be paid to the islands in October, when all the islands will be visited and confirmation given where it is desired. On this occasion the Bishop was only away from Thursday Island for a week, but he managed to get through a great deal of speaking during that time. The "Banzai" was sent in from St. Paul's Moa to collect him, and within a few hours of leaving Thursday Island had landed him safely at St. Paul's, the winds on this occasion being very favourable, very different to the return journey at the end of the week, when the "Banzai" had to drift about for some hours waiting for tide or wind to take her to her desired destination, which was only reached at the hour of 1 a.m., when the Bishop decided to continue his sleep in the limited space in the cabin of the "Banzai" rather than go ashore at such hours.

At St. Paul's a great welcome had been prepared for the Bishop, an arch had been erected on the beach, and the pathway up to the Rectory had been decorated, the villagers were in full force on the beach singing a song of welcome that had been written for the occasion by the native students at the College, speeches were made and after Evensong the village indulged in dancing, the Curfew Bell was rung an hour later to give the villagers time for their dances. It is remarkable how much better the men and boys dance than the women and girls in these island dances, all the dances represent some kind of work performed by the Islanders in their every-day life, such as diving and collecting pearl shell or gardening; the dancers advance in lines about four in each line singing and making the correct steps, each line taking it in turn to be leaders, the arrival of the small boys in the front line, aged under 8 years, was sure to be greeted with laughter as one or more were certain to make a mistake in the step, and collide with their neighbour, also their dress of cocoa-nut palm leaf, which they wear round their waists as a kilt, was generally too long and got trodden upon as they did their steps causing boy or dress to come to grief. The band for these dances is a drum, or when a drum is not available a petrol tin does instead, on this occasion both were in use, the volume of music increasing as the dances proceeded; these dances are very energetic ones, this is perhaps the reason why the men and boys seem to dance them better than the girls, they certainly put more life into their movements and know the steps much better. The Rev. J. Schomberg was due for services at Badu on this week-end, so with the Bishop he set out on the "Banzai" for that island; the course lay round Moa Island, and up the channel between Badu and Moa Islands, this channel is marked in official charts as uncharted being full of rocks and reefs, but "Peter," the captain of the "Banzai," did not seem troubled about taking his boat through, he does it every fortnight with Rev. J. Schomberg on board, and has not hit any reef or rock yet, that these rocks are there is very evident by the way the sea is churned up. Peter was asked how he knew the channel to take, and he replied that he knew this part quite well, for "I walk all over bottom of the sea here," one would get to know the rocks and reefs well if one had been playing hide and seek with sharks around them while collecting pearl shell.

At Badu, Messrs. Walker Bros. entertained the party for the week-end most hospitably; on the Saturday afternoon, the Bishop, with Rev. J. Schomberg, set out set for the village, there was to be a service for the "Heralds of the King" that afternoon, when these Heralds were to present their Lenten gifts, and some new Heralds were to be admitted, but the village had decided that many things were to take place first. As we walked down the beach, the Churchwarden met us to say that the village was not ready yet, and would we wait? Presently he returned and escorted us to the entrance of the village, here an arch had been erected, and the path to the school decorated. We were led down this path followed by the villagers. The procession was well ordered, headed by a drummer, the village beadle saw that the children and adults kept in proper order; he was not at all backward in using his silver knobbed wand of office either here or in Church later on. At the school many speeches were made. Some of these revealed the fact that these islanders had been very anxious as to what kind of a Bishop they were getting. Some had been into Thursday Island and had evidently made a satisfactory report. They had heard that their Bishop was coming from England, and they know that all kinds of people come from there, good and bad. When speeches and singing had finished, this meeting dissolved. It was expected that the villagers would then get ready for the service, but this was not to be. The Churchwarden came to announce that the people had only gone away to get their presents for the Bishop, and that he would bring them along as soon as they were ready. In a very short time a procession was seen approaching up the village, bearing all sorts of presents. These were laid on a mat in front of the Bishop. Necklaces, baskets, eggs, fowls, cocoanuts, etc. More speeches had to be made, but at last the Churchwarden said that the people were ready for service. It was a bright and happy service, 32 Heralds were received into the band at Badu, then the Lenten gifts were presented. The table on which they were laid proved to be far too small, necklaces and baskets were sliding off on the floor. Brisbane A.B.M. office ought to be set up with necklaces for sale for the next twelve months. At this, and the other services some hymns were sung in native language. Later in the evening we had Evensong, followed by a preparation service for Holy Communion. The islands are happy places that do not bother about clocks or daylight saving. The sun is the only recorder of time. The church bell is rung when the Churchwarden has made sure that Priest and people are ready. There is no nerve-racking rush to get in time as in cities governed by whites, with the result that the islander gives himself time to think and to worship. One wonders if this peacefulness comes because the islander is not mad on money getting or pleasure. It is true that his needs are few, that he is satisfied with very little; but he is satisfied and very happy, which is more than many people can say of themselves. Dissatisfaction so often seems to come from the desire of having more than one possesses. The islander has his garden to cultivate, where he grows enough provisions for himself and family. His house is made from materials that he has at hand. The timber is cut in the bush, and the walls are plaited coconut leaves. It is to be hoped that these people never become westernized. On Sunday morning, we had a celebration of Holy Communion, followed later by Mattins. It was at Mattins that the Village Beadle was seen again in the full exercise of his duty. He exercised his office with good judgment, neglecting neither children nor adults who talked or slept. He acts as a good guide to the preacher, for when his activities increased during the sermon, it meant that the preacher had been talking long enough for the congregation were getting tired.

On Sunday afternoon we had to leave the hospitable shores of Badu for the village of Poid. This village is on the island of Moa, but at the opposite end of the island to St. Paul's. At this village we were welcomed by the inhabitants, who include now those whom the Queensland Government very wisely moved from Hammond Island. Hammond Island was far too near to the cosmopolitan population of the See town of the diocese. The influence of some of that population on the islanders was very bad. As we were arriving on Sunday evening, very little could be done by way of welcome. An arch had been erected, and the village was all out to meet us. After very brief greetings a move was made to the church, where evensong was sung, followed by a service of preparation for Holy Communion. The church here is built of cement, but has now become too small. Only with a great deal of squeezing can the congregation get in. If it was the custom of the islanders to have pews or seats, the congregation could not get in. There will be some difficulty in deciding where to start pulling down some of the building in order to enlarge. After service on Sunday evening, the Churchwarden, "Namei," entertained us in the church hut by giving us an account of the last fight that took place on Moa Island. He was only a boy then, so that he was telling us of what took place about 50 years ago. He remembered how the men from Mabuiag landed on the corner of Moa Island and robbed their garden, but some Moa men saw them before they got back to their boats. The alarm was given, and the Mabuiag men were surrounded, and most, if not all, killed. Of course Moa had a great feast that night at which Mabuiag heads would be the chief delicacy. Some time afterwards, men from Badu visited Moa. These men showed the usual signs of friendship, so all spears, etc., were left behind. The Badu men had evidently secured some cutlasses from a Man-of-war, for Namei described them as big knives off a warship. The Moa men were being shown these treasures, and were also given tobacco, when suddenly the Badumen began to show how cutlasses could be used. Heads began to fly off. Moa men ran back for their spears but found that a party from Mabuiag had landed and got in behind them. This was the last fight on the islands but possibly there were no Moa men left of fighting age. Some on Badu still remember the feast that took place after the fight. On Monday, after services and classes, the villagers here gave the Bishop presents, necklaces, baskets, etc. Speeches were made. This opportunity was taken to congratulate the ex-policeman from Hammond Island on his fortunate find of a very good pearl. Since these Hammond Islanders have moved to Poid they have begun pearling. A friend lent them a lugger while their own is being built. This early success is very encouraging to them. From Poid we sailed round to St. Paul's, passing down the uncharted channel again; on this occasion, at high tide, when no rocks could be seen. On our way round Moa Island we went ashore to look at some swamps in the hopes of finding some ducks at home. There were no ducks, but there were hundreds of orchids out in full bloom. With some of these, and a few fish that were speared, we returned to the "Banzai," and sailed on to St. Paul's. At St. Paul's preparations were made for their Harvest Festival. The church had been very beautifully decorated by the boys; no adults or white people had helped in any way. The day started with the Communion Service, then preparations were made for the village feast, large quantities of food being cooked in the special ovens. Food and vegetables are wrapped in banana leaves; this is then put on the hot coals and covered over with more leaves and soil. In the late afternoon, at Evensong, gifts of fruit and vegetables were presented in the church. The sanctuary was quite full. Amongst the vegetables were a large quantity of yams, a vegetable that the islanders will not sell even to their friends in Thursday Island, as it is their main supply of food. These gifts were sent in to the hospital at Thursday Island.

As the Council at St. Paul's had expressed a desire to discuss their land laws with the Bishop, he thought that it would be wise to take a walk over that part of the island in which the gardens were, to see for himself the nature of the soil. There are patches of very good tropical jungle country mixed up with rather barren rocky country. The gardens are all made in the jungle country. This is limited in area, and the question had arisen as to whether a family should be allowed to hold more than five acres of it. A British M.P. declared that three acres with a cow were sufficient in England to support a family. The Bishop thought that five acres of tropical virgin jungle soil should be enough for a family on Moa, for in addition to the garden produce, there were thousands of fish on the reef that only needed hunting for; very rarely does anyone come back empty handed. The laws of inheritance were not very easy to solve; the discussion was carried on to late hours of the night. The day school and college were visited on the next morning. The Bishop then left for Thursday Island on the "Banzai." He had only been in the islands for a week, but that week had been filled in in full.

August 5: The Herald arrived, with Rev. J. Done on board to take the Bishop to Groote Eylandt and the Roper River. A very good start was made on this journey. During the first 24 hours 156 miles were covered. The next day, the wind being lighter, only 139 miles were registered, but by 5 a.m. on the third day the Eylandt was sighted. There was great joy on board when land was seen, for the islander does not like to sail by chart and compass. He very rarely goes out of sight of land amongst his islands. The wind deserted us now, and it took two days to sail round the island, and find the passage into Emerald Creek, on which the C.M.S. have their Mission Station. It was hoped that Rev. H. E. Warren might be here with the Holly, but only Messrs. Dyer and Periman were at home. We stayed with them until late in the evening, giving them an opportunity to write some letters. It was unfortunate that the Holly was not at Groote Eylandt for the Herald could then have returned home, but in other ways it was a good thing, as it gave the island crew an opportunity of seeing the missionary work being carried on on this side of the Gulf, and as the C.M.S. are trying to get an island captain for their boat, there is certainly more chance of their doing so now that some of the islanders have seen their stations. Winds, tides, and charts were not going to treat the Herald crew so well as they had done up to the present, everything that could go wrong seemed to do so from now on. By the Saturday morning we were off the mouth of the Roper River, but to find the right channel into the river was a difficulty. The chart showed that there should be a buoy six miles off the heads from which the course through the sandbanks could be found; but no buoy could be found, and from enquiries made later it was discovered that the Commonwealth Government in the Northern Territory did not bother about such trifling details, travellers must find their way in to the Territory as best they can. On the Saturday afternoon we sailed in closer to the land, sounding as we went, but suddenly we struck shallow water, and before the ship could be brought round she had grounded. Only after some two hours bumping on mud and rocks was the Herald at last got off. As the wind was rising, it was decided to sail to Maria Island, about 15 miles away, where the boat would be protected from the rising wind, and a peaceable Sunday could be spent. Here we found two other Thursday Island boats also sheltering from wind, so that the deck of the Herald was crowded for service. When the wind had abated we made another attempt to find the passage in to the Roper River. This time the boat was anchored six miles off the shore at the spot that we estimated the buoy should be. Rev. J. Done, with two boys, then rowed the dingy ashore, cut some stakes for beacons, and followed the channel back at low tide. Great was their joy when they discovered the broken ends of old beacons, for it showed them that they were following the correct channel through the sandbanks, and it makes one realise that in the "good old days" there was a Government in the Territory that was careful to keep buoys and beacons on the coast in order. On the return of the dingy there was just time before dark to sail the Herald in to the river. Once in the river all went well. Soundings were taken for many miles, and all exceeded those given on the chart; but new sandbanks had come into the river since the last chart was made. Without any warning the Herald grounded. There was only six feet of water where the chart had given 15 feet; but there was no bumping this time. The boat just settled down on the sand and refused to move until the tide rose again. An examination of the river bed showed that a large sandbank had been formed here reaching nearly across the river. We were still resting on the sandbank when a dingy appeared round the corner, this proved to be one from the Holly, which was anchored round the next bend. Very soon she raised her anchor and came round the corner. Rev. H. E. Warren was on board, and stayed with the Herald until he had seen her safely anchored in deep water, and then returned to the Mission Station, taking the Bishop, Rev. J. Done, and two of the Herald crew with him. The 20 miles to the Mission Station was covered in about four hours. The staff here had only about 10 minutes to get themselves and the children ready in their Sunday best to meet the boat at the jetty, but they were all there wondering who exactly the new arrivals were. A very happy Sunday was spent at the Mission. On the Monday Rev. J. Done and his crew left to return to the Herald and Thursday Island, rejoicing, I believe, to get away from Northern Territory shores with its sandbanks and muddy water, and something they had never seen before—fogs. Whether they will ever trust a white man's chart again is a question. Our river chart would not give them much faith in such things.

I was anxious to have a long talk to Rev. H. E. Warren, the Superintendent of the Roper River Mission, on aboriginal mission work, so when I found that he had to go down to the river mouth with some mission boys in the Holly to supervise the getting of a supply of salt from the coastal salt pans, I decided to go down the river with him. We compared notes as to the best methods to use in the evangelization of the aboriginal. I was able to tell him of how the work was being carried on in other places as far as I knew of it from conversations that I had had with those in charge of various missions belonging to other Christian bodies, and of course our own methods in practice at the Mitchell River Mission. In every mission there is some difference of methods. All are trying to hammer out some way of evangelizing without pauperising the native. On no mission that I have come in contact with are those in charge quite satisfied that their methods are perfect. Rev. H. E. Warren was able to show me some of the problems and difficulties that he had had to face during his 10 years at the Roper River. I realised at once how much better off the aboriginal is in Queensland than in the Northern Territory. One has to travel to another State to appreciate fully the benefit to the aboriginal of the legislation passed by the much maligned Queensland Labor Government. Members of the Commonwealth Government have been boasting lately about the blessing their Government has been to the Papuan by protecting him from the White Trader, and employee, etc. It is wise for them to say nothing of the abuses or lack of protection shown to the real Australian native in the Northern Territory. Perhaps a better pen than mine may some day show up their lack of government in the Territory, with the abuses that it leads to. Incidentally, one must praise the Queensland Labour Government for shouldering the burden, in cost, of caring for the aboriginal. I believe that the Government in W.A. should be praised for the same efforts, whereas the Southern States saw to it in times past that these unproductive members of society from whom we took their country, were killed or allowed to die. These two States are shouldering a burden in cost that should in justice be born by the whole country, but the aboriginal is indeed fortunate that he is not everywhere under the paternal care of the Commonwealth, judged by the state of affairs in the Northern Territory. We arrived at the salt pans on a Wednesday, and by daylight on Saturday had 13 tons of salt on the Holly, and were soon after travelling as fast as we could up the river to the Mission Station, 60 miles away, that we might be there for the Sunday.

My stay at the Mission was longer than I expected. I had hoped that the Holly would be able to come over to Thursday Island in the first week in September, but arrangements had been made on that side for a sea captain, now cattle raising in the Territory, to come and help with her across the Gulf, and he was not expected to arrive until the third week in the month; also two new workers for the mission from the south were only leaving to come north at the end of the month. It was too late to make alterations in plans. This could only have been done if all sources were connected up by wireless, so I had a fortnight longer at the mission than I expected. I am glad that this was so as it gave me a better insight into the work; also I was able to take my share in the preparation of the first Confirmation candidates to be presented by this Mission. During my stay I conducted a quiet day for the staff, and was preacher at their Sunday Evening Staff service most Sundays.

It was a very happy day, Sunday September 17, when the first fruits of the Mission were gathered in. I hope that those who are praying for this diocese will remember these six Confirmees, Timothy, John, Sarah, Esther, Naomi, and Elizabeth. Their lives will have a great effect in the future of the mission for good or ill. They are surrounded by temptations which may cause them to fall; but by the grace of God we hope that they will remain faithful. They were very earnest when in the beautiful little chapel at the mission they received the gifts given in confirmation. It was unfortunate that all the staff could not be present at this service. Mrs. Warren was in Darwin under the care of the doctor; A. J. Dyer and H. L. Perriman were on Groote Eylandt. On St. Matthew's Day the confirmees made their first communion, and two days later we left in the Holly for Thursday Island. On our way we made a very hurried visit to Groote Eylandt. The tides were not favourable, and the Holly had to go in and out on the same tide. She can only get over the bar on a high tide. High water was at 3 a.m., so that it was just before that, in the dark, that we found there was enough water for us to go in. The channel is shaped like an S. Twice the bow of the Holly was stuck on the sand, but the captain and crew went overboard and pushed her off. Just after 3 a.m. we arrived at the jetty. The unloading of the stores commenced at once, when the three ton or more were unloaded, and a load of about three ton of firewood was put on as ballast. At about 4.30 a.m. Rev. H. E. Warren told me that all work was finished on the boat, and we went in to the little Oratory, where I celebrated the Holy Communion. Day was just breaking as we were worshipping, and the birds even seemed to be assisting, for they were just beginning their early morning songs.

There was no time to wait even for a cup of tea after service; but with a very hurried farewell to the two white men we were leaving behind, we boarded the Holly, and started off down the river, wondering if the tide had beaten us. If it had it might mean a delay of 14 days in the Emerald River; but all was well, and the Holly dragged along over the bar, and was gradually slowing down. There was only just enough pace and power to carry her into deep water.

On Tuesday morning we left Groote Eylandt, and on Saturday we arrived in Thursday Island after an uneventful trip, except perhaps that incident of the shark that grabbed our log, and left his marks on the metal, probably putting us out 20 miles in our reckoning, for he opened the register and loosened the finger on the 10-mile mark. Then there was the exciting time when the Holly, a 14-ton boat, was averaging $9\frac{1}{2}$ knots an hour on her sails. The engine tried hard to keep pace, but was beaten badly. Arrived in Thursday Island, there was the usual amount of mail waiting to be attended to. Some had answered itself by lapse of time, which was helpful, the remainder will take a week or more to attend to.

Subscriptions to "The Carpenterian."

Each 2/6: Miss Hatton, Miss Inman.

Each 5/-: Mrs. Zahel, Mrs. E. G. Burnett.

Per Mrs. Greig, each 2/6: Miss Pass, Mrs. Greig, Mrs. Patten, Mrs. Shield, Mrs. Ogilvie, Mrs. Rains, Mrs. Ganley, Miss Thomas, Mr. Sabine, Mrs. Aplin.

The Carpenterian

FOR THE DIOCESE OF CARPENTARIA,
NORTH AUSTRALIA.

Vol. XXII., No. 88. Thursday Island, Oct. 2, 1922

Admiral John Moresby.

Port Moresby is now a familiar name to us in Northern Queensland, even if its exact geographical position may not be quite so well known in other parts of Australia. The explorer whose name it commemorates—Admiral John Moresby,—died recently in England, one of the few surviving links between the old navy and the new. During the war, Lord Fisher named a destroyer after him. But our own interest in his career lies chiefly in the fact that, in his five-gun paddle sloop, "Basilisk," which came out to Northern Australian waters in '71, he discovered a new and shorter route between Australia and China, explored and surveyed about 1200 miles of coastline in the archipelago, of which New Guinea is the centre, and added many rivers, harbours, and more than 100 islands, to the chart. There are, doubtless, still some of "the old hands" who will recollect the "Basilisk" and her more or less exciting cruises round the islands, and down the east coast.

Extracts from the late Admiral's published records are full of interest. On the initial cruise of the sloop, coming up from Brisbane and Sydney to Somerset, she fell in with a schooner in a helpless condition off Palm Islands. It was the "Peri," with a crew of kidnapped Solomon Islanders aboard; but of the 80 who had sailed from Rewa (where they had been disposed of for from £10 to £15 a-head), only 13 were found alive. The survivors, who had drifted some hundreds of miles, were taken to Sydney, and afterwards sent back to their own islands. Moresby called in some short time later at Cardwell, where, he says, "various tribes of aborigines range about the vicinity, and not unnaturally regard the white men who are rapidly dispossessing them of their homes, as mortal enemies. They show this feeling by committing murders and outrages, and suffer terrible retaliation at the hands of our countrymen, who employ native troopers, commanded by white men, to hunt down and destroy the offenders." A terrible record!

Visiting a native camp near Somerset, the chief impression left on the explorer's mind was the low type of humanity presented, and the lack of attempts at cultivation, or building permanent dwellings. It will be recollected that there were then no mission stations, so that, whatever other reproach might be laid at their doors, the shiftlessness and depression of the natives could not be attributed to "missionaries." One of the first island cruises was to Gabba Island (two brothers), at the time a centre of the pearling industry, to make inquiries into the conditions under which native labour was recruited. The Commander, after making thorough investigation, concluded that in many instances the men had not understood the verbal agreements alleged to have been made, and that their employees detained them in slavery by force and fraud, while there were cases where (to quote his own words) "there was nothing less than an organised system of kidnapping, attended at times with atrocities that it blanches the cheek and makes the blood run cold to hear of." It was the existence of these abuses in the Islands, corroborated by the Hon. John Douglas and Mr. Chester, P.M., which led to legislation regulating the recruiting of native labour. Warrior Island (so named from its inhabitants having attacked Bligh and Portlock, when they sailed through in the "Providence" and "Assistant" in 1792, on which occasion rounds of grape shot had to be fired at the canoes), earned from Captain Moresby the tribute of having the largest and best conducted pearl-shelling station in the Straits, and the islanders impressed him as being well advanced. They had war canoes 50 or 60 feet in length, and used large bows with poisoned arrows. Two Lifuan missionaries were on the island, the advance guard of the L.M.S. band, which came with Dr. Samuel MacFarlane. They had come down from Saibai (their station) in quest of food supplies, and the "Basilisk" was able to render assistance in this way. Saibai, it might be mentioned, though previously known, was not marked on any chart. It was first chartered as an island by Moresby.

Just before the termination of the first cruise, the sloop was instrumental in succouring the few survivors of the unfortunate brig "Maria," a ship fitted out by some adventurous Sydney spirits to prospect in New Guinea.

Returning in 1873 on the second expedition, the "Basilisk" began the new year by capturing two schooners with upwards of 100 South Sea Islanders on board. These had been employed in diving in the Straits, and, though understanding that their service was to be of limited duration, some of them had served for six years without wages other than food and clothing. Two barques, each carrying "blackbirds," were seized a few days later. Some of the captured ships, though condemned in Sydney, were released on appeal to the Privy Council, on paying all costs, others were sold, but law expenses cut down the prize-money very heavily, and the Imperial Government claimed half the remainder! Paying another call at Somerset, the ship's company was welcomed by the late Frank Jardine, and a service was held on board by the Rev. A. W. Murray (MacFarlane's colleague). Shortly after, the "Basilisk" proceeded to Jervis Island (Mabuiag), then the headquarters of three pearling stations. A good deal of surveying work was done here. "The natives of Jervis Island," says Moresby, "are black Papuans, quite uncivilised and unclothed." Working round by way of Cocoonut Island, where a Scotchman had established a pearling station, and a model village, the sloop came to Darnley Island, the only island where sago palms grow, (the reason for this is enshrined in local legend by the way), and found a flourishing beche-de-mer industry in existence. The product was worth, at that time, from £80 to £140 per ton. From Darnley Captain Moresby sailed to Murray Islands, and then stood across the Gulf of Papua on a two-fold quest, to visit the mission station at Redcar Bay, and to glean kidnapping information.

On his return to Somerset he found a barque lying at anchor with some 85 disappointed gold-diggers returning from Port Darwin on board. With summary promptitude he convened a naval court, deposed the incompetent captain, and sent the ship to New South Wales in charge of one of his officers. It was on this occasion, too, that he addressed a remonstrance to the newly-established missionary regarding the workers in the islands, urging that a properly equipped ship be provided so that the work might be properly done. With keen perception, and as a trained seaman, he saw the necessity for such provision, a need which is not diminished now. Another recommendation which he made was at the request of Lord Normanby, who desired him to assist Jardine in finding a more suitable site for headquarters than Somerset seemed to be. His choice (based on safe anchorage and water supply) fell upon Hammond Island.

These brief notes, taken mostly from R. Logan Jack's "Northernmost Australia," are pages from the past which have their own peculiar interest to-day. Some of the islands mentioned by the late Admiral as carrying large populations—Warrior, for instance—are now practically empty; disease, fighting, and other causes are responsible, just as we are told that some of the islands of Melanesia are practically "cleaned out," and as big villages in New Guinea have dwindled to but a fraction of their former size, although on the other hand there has been in other islands of the Straits during later years a steady increase in population. When the "Basilisk" was cruising, the decline had been going on for some time, as comparisons with the records of the earlier visiting warships show. When the "Hormuzzer" visited Darley in 1793, in company with the "Chesterfield," the armed party which landed and took possession in the name of His Majesty, recorded having burnt and destroyed 135 huts, 16 large canoes, and many plantations of sugar-cane and native food. This signifies a very much larger population than Darnley carries even now, despite its late peaceful years of recuperation.

The Straits, too, still contain much uncharted water. Moresby reports that he struck shoals; the rock east of Saddle Island, which bears his name, he also located, though, fortunately, not in the manner of two ships which had been previously wrecked there. But even where chartered fresh dangers arise from time to time, depths alter, and shoals are now reported in places where before the lead showed some fathoms. And in the pearling and fishing industries there have been changes (apart from those regarding proper agreements and rates of wages) "blackbirded" South Sea Islanders have given way to indentured Manilamen, and they in turn have been supplanted by the Japanese divers. Island boys and women are not now lured on to ships and carried off to satisfy the white man's greed, and owners recognise that in the Torres Straits Islander they have material capable of producing good results where there is mutual trust and fair-dealing, and where there is allowance made for those peculiar temperamental qualities which one must expect to find in natives anywhere.

But one other thing in Moresby's narrative has a pathetic interest for us in the Diocese. When he took the "Basilisk" to the place of Cook's landing in 1770, he found it, just a century later, practically as Cook had left it. Within a very short time, Cooktown had developed with lightning like rapidity into a full-grown city almost. To-day it is but a ghostly vision of past glory.

And so the "Times" headline recording the moving on of a great seaman,—midshipman, gunnery-lieutenant, post-captain, and admiral—will recall, too, his own words on relinquishing his last appointment. "This, after all, is as much as anyone can wish to gain—to carry one's soul with clean hands through this difficult world, and to have earned the kind thoughts and approval of our fellows."

W.H.M.

Notes.

Some years ago, a Priest, who was then working in a large industrial centre in Europe, fearing that he was losing his faith, consulted his Bishop, and asked for his advice. His Bishop told him to seek out the place in the world where man was most primitive, and living the most uncivilised life; and when he found this place, he was to earn his living there letting no one know who he was or what his former calling had been. This advice was followed, the Priest selected the See town of the Diocese of Carpentaria as the place that answered best to the requirements; years later he wrote to the Diocese to say who he was.

There was a beautiful diversity of wording in the inscriptions that were placed on the arches erected in honour of the Bishop's visit recently, in one week he came across these three:—

"A happy welcome."

"A happy welcome to our Lord."

"Well Come."

A license has been granted by the Bishop to Rev. R. D. Joynt, Priest on the staff of the Roper River Mission, to act as Surrogate in the Northern Territory.

Rev. H. E. Warren, Mrs. Warren, and Billy, and Miss L. Cross are in the south on furlough.

Miss Alice Farrant and Mr. E. C. H. Lousada have been licensed by the Bishop to act as lay-workers on the staff of the C.M.S. Mission in the Northern Territory.

The Rev. Ivor Skelton is expected to arrive in the Diocese in November, he will go to Darwin, which has been without a Priest since the Rev. C. W. Light left there in September.

Rev. F. W. Slade expects to leave Thursday Island on furlough in December, the Bishop will take charge of the Cathedral parish while the Sub-Dean is away.

We were glad to hear lately from Mr. C. H. Davis, who was a lay-reader and Sunday School Superintendent in Darwin twenty years ago, and is now bank-managing at Millicent, S.A., where he is doing similar service for the church. He sends some S.A. stamps to our stamp salesman in Thursday Island.

Intercessions.

Last Quarter I asked you to pray for the diocese as a whole, dividing it into three divisions—the Aborigines, the Torres Straits Islanders, and the scattered white population. This quarter I hope that you will concentrate your efforts of prayer upon the most unfortunate souls in the diocese, the half-castes, especially the children in the Northern Territory. These poor, despised, innocent outcasts have to bear the burden of the shame of their father's sin, the father being in most cases European, and probably calling himself in the census return, a Christian. These children, while being innocent themselves, yet are rejected and despised by those who make much of their guilty fathers.

The figures given lately in the census for the Northern Territory are staggering, excluding the thousands of aborigines that there are in the Territory, there are 3,867 inhabitants in the Northern Territory of other nationalities. Of these, 482 are half-caste, over one-ninth of this population.

Little is being done for these children. Of course the fathers do nothing, and the law of the States makes it almost impossible to bring their guilt home to them. The Church is caring for about 30 through the C.M.S. Mission on the Roper River; many of the others are herded together in the Compound at Darwin by the Government. There is a school for all the compound, but all sorts and conditions of races are herded together in this compound. I have heard many things about the state of this compound, and it is to be hoped that nothing is true of all that I have heard; but I am not in a position to judge, as I have not yet been to Darwin. Sufficient to say, that I have never heard a good word said by anyone about the compound. Then there are the very few who have been adopted and taken care of by Christian people, and by them given some chance in life. By the laws of the Northern Territory these half-castes, at the age of 18 years, are placed on an equal footing with the whites unless they habitually associate with the aborigines.

Now, I feel sure that we must call these people by another name, and, in future they will be called Euralians in this magazine. There is no reason why innocent people should be branded with a name of shame and half-caste has become a term of disgrace.

Pray that the Commonwealth Government shall alter its laws relating to aborigines, so that the guilty fathers may be brought to account. Pray for a blessing on the work of C.M.S. at the Roper River among these Euralians.

Pray that C.M.S. may receive Divine guidance in the development of their work amongst the Euralians.

Pray for the time when the Church can take care of many more of these children, especially at Darwin.

I dream dreams of the possibility of the time coming when some community of religion will open a home or homes in Darwin for these unfortunate innocents.

Carpentarian Association.

The following account of the Annual service and meeting of the Carpentarian Association in London has been taken from the Church Times. This association is assisting the work of the church in this Diocese by their prayers and interest. We are glad to see that the Secretary was able to get such capable speakers for their meeting; the Bishop of Salisbury is patron of the association.

THE CHURCH IN AUSTRALIA.

An Interesting Account of the Diocese of Carpentaria.

No true conception of the work that is being done by the Church in Carpentaria is possible without reference to a map of Australia, showing the diocesan boundaries. Its sphere is that vast Northern territory of Australia, extending as far south as the diocese of Adelaide, and the islands of the Torres Straits. Its geographical position brings to it difficulties which are peculiarly its own—difficulties of climate, of sparseness of population, of isolation (except on the sea line). The headquarters of the Mission and the cathedral city are in Thursday Island. The Torres Straits Mission, which was handed over to the diocese by the London Missionary Society at the beginning of the war, has arrived at its jubilee.

The annual report states that "The work of the Church is going on steadily and surely in The Straits, and there is abundant cause for thanksgiving. The Church has indeed been fortunate in the three priests who have guided the people through the change from Christian life under the L.M.S. to the fuller life of the Holy Catholic Church. In general discipline and observance of religious duty the people compare more than favourably with many a white parish. . . . During the jubilee of the Mission the Bishop spent twenty-four days visiting the islands, and held six confirmations."

The annual meeting was held last week at 101, Queen's-gate, S.W., by kind invitation of Mrs. Mayne, when the chair was taken by the Dowager Lady Brassey. Canon Nash (formerly Rector of Thursday Island) spoke of the vastness of the diocese; while the population, he said, was so thin that they could not expect to remedy the territorial difficulty. The first Bishop (Dr. Gilbert White) had journeyed from Darwin down to Adelaide, right through the Continent from north to south. He had established his headquarters at Thursday Island, which, although small, was quite the best place to be the centre of the diocese, because it was connected by steamers with all parts of the world. It so happened that at Thursday Island there was a very beautiful little church, which he decided to make his cathedral. It had been built in memory of the Quetta, sunk off Cape York in 1890, and had been enriched by relics of all sorts of wrecks and disasters, so that it was an extremely interesting church to visit. The population was of a mixed character—white, Chinese, Japanese, Malays, etc.—although the immigration of orientals had now been prohibited by the Australian Commonwealth. But of course the most important work was among the aborigines on the mainland, and also the work in the Torres Straits. The "black" population were of three races: Australian, Papuan, and Melanesian, and the Melanesian were the finest. The brown man of Samoa was good enough for any man; the Papuan also was a man of very respectable intelligence. The poor old black fellow of Australia had always been ill-treated and looked down upon, and he was of a very low type. Only the Bushmen of South Africa and one other tribe were in the same category in civilization. Yet there was no doubt that he had been wonderfully raised through the work done by missionaries.

GLENNIE MEMORIAL SCHOOL, TOOWOOMBA

Principal: MISS LAWBRANCE.

GLENNIE PREPARATORY SCHOOL, TOOWOOMBA

Principal: MISS SUTTON.

Church of England School for Girls, Toowoomba. Under control of the Brisbane Diocesan Council.

Patron: His Grace the Archbishop of Brisbane.

THE GLENNIE MEMORIAL SCHOOL gives Education up to Senior and Matriculation standard. Specialities: Music, Singing and Art.
 THE PREPARATORY SCHOOL receives pupils up to 13 years of age, and prepares candidates for the State Scholarship Examination.

Reduction for Sisters.

Fees for both Schools on application.

The Bishop of Salisbury said that every motive of fellowship would call him to support Carpentaria; but it was also a most interesting diocese. It had the interest of difficulty—it was one of the most difficult dioceses in the Anglican Communion. It was extraordinarily hot—all the inland part had far the hottest climate in Australia. The population was falling because the gold in the mines had petered out, and the townships were dying a lingering death. That was most depressing, and most of them had not enough money to support a resident priest. The Bishop needed to have all the qualities of a parish priest: he must like the sea, be a good bushman, and also a missionary. Evangelization to-day meant something more than "delivering the Message." Missionaries were needed with every sort of industrial training and education: not only clergy, but teachers, sailors, carpenters, agriculturalists, mechanics, to teach people what they knew themselves. He was not sure that the call came entirely to England—probably to the artisan community in Australia. But another great feature in modern missionary work was in the outlook of governments towards missions. Governments had made the discovery that they could not direct the affairs of men without spiritual forces that they could not provide themselves. That was a change from the days when the late Lord Salisbury had remarked in Exeter Hall: "I must tell you that missionaries are not very popular at the Foreign Office."

There was a Choral Eucharist for the Mission the same day at St. Mary's, Bourdon-street, when the Rev. W. J. B. Scott was the celebrant. The preacher was Bishop Goldsmith (vicar of Hampstead), who drew attention to the Association of Prayer for Australia, whose office address is: c/o The League of Help, 11, Pilgrim-street, E.C.

CHURCHES IN WHICH THE MISSION WAS REMEMBERED ON ST. BARNABAS' DAY.

Bearsted; Canterbury, St. George's, St. Gregory's, St. Mildred's; Chiselhurst, The Annunciation; Eastbourne, Parish Church; Elham, St. Mary; Folkestone, Holy Trinity; Forest School; Fulford; Glastonbury; Hackney, Parish Church; Halifax, St. Mary's; Haslemere; Highbury, St. John's Hall; Hull, St. Mary's, Sculcoates, St. Michael's, St. Paul's; Hythe; Leckhampton, St. Philip and St. James; Liverpool, St. Peter's Chapel; London, Christ Church, Woburn Square; Louth; Maidstone, Holy Trinity; Maisemore; Manchester, St. Ann's; Malvern, Priory Church; Malvern Link; Newcastle Cathedral; Oswestry; Reading, All Saints', St. Mary's; St. Boniface College, Warminster; St. Peter's in Thanet; Scarborough, St. Mary's; Seaforth; St. Mary's Waldron; Workingham; Wyburnbury.

In the Gulf.

The Gulf of Carpentaria, from which the Diocese takes its name, is the biggest inlet on the Australian coast, being some 500 miles square. It is an immense body of water singularly free from reefs and other dangers except along its coastline. To sail across with a favourable breeze is exhilarating, but to beat back with variable winds or none at all, is quite a different proposition.

With the ketch Herald of the Torres Straits Mission, we left Thursday Island for the purpose of taking the Bishop to the Groote Island and Roper River missions in the Northern Territory. The trip across was without incident except for the difficulty experienced in finding the entrance to the Roper, owing to lack of marine finger posts.

After leaving the Bishop, we set sail again towards the end of August, and for three days, mainly drifted along with the tide or the zephyrs, which scarcely ruffled the surface of the water, but all the while rolling with a sickening motion on the oily ground swell. The booms swung from side to side with painful regularity, and it seemed that every bolt would surely be drawn from their sockets. Then the wind started, rapidly increasing in power, till it became advisable to take in all reefs, and snug down for the approaching night. By daylight we could no longer carry our mainsail, and a few hours later it became apparent that what was still standing was over much. With good sails we might have held on, but ours are near the end of their usefulness, so finding discretion the better part of valour, we turned and made back for Groote, which was reached before sundown. Our food supplies were also diminishing, so that altogether we were not sorry that the weather was unpropitious.

We now spent a couple of days with the missionaries on Groote, and on 2nd September once more set out for home. It was not till early on the tenth that we sighted Cape Keerweer on the other side, the intervening time being spent in vainly whistling for the breezes, which were so reluctant to come. Even sailing up the coast our bad luck followed us, for with the sun the wind daily died away, and refused to blow again until after the great luminary had once more made his appearance in the East. However, on the 16th, a good breeze favoured us, and we ran up the harbour in fine style, glad that our journeyings of over 1300 miles, made so trying and tedious with fogs, little or no wind, oily seas, heavy swells, and numerous sharks all the way, was at length over.

J. D.

Cooktown Notes.

The Bishop's visit to Cooktown, which we were anticipating in our last notes, eventuated on June 7th. On Sunday, the 11th, he pontificated and preached. Good congregations honoured his visit. On the 12th a social evening was held at the Rectory, to give the parishioners an opportunity of making a personal acquaintance with His Lordship. A good representative gathering of church-folk presented themselves.

On July 6th, the Rector left Cooktown to make a long itinerary up the peninsula, by way of a holiday. The intended objective when starting was Normanton, but this had to be altered en route owing to the rapid flight of time. The stations visited were, Laura, Maytown, Palmerville, Mt. Mulgrave, Wrotham Park, The Walsh, Gamboola, Highbury, Drumduff, Kalata, Ruthland, Locknagen Mission Station. Most of these stations have not been visited since the Rev. Wilkinson relinquished his work. Altogether some 560 miles were covered on horseback. Bush people are always hospitable and welcome a visit. As the countryside has become so sadly de-populated, the itinerary could not become an annual arrangement.

During the Rector's absence, Mr. Geo. Shipoke kept the flag flying.

The deep boring on the sites of the old Palmer mines, has revived great hopes. The old miners are confident the Palmer will again see flourishing days, and regain its fame. No pronouncement, good, bad, or indifferent, has been forthcoming as to the work which has been accomplished.

A nucleus of citizens who are zealous for the advancement of the district are ever on the alert to avail themselves of an opportunity to resuscitate its expiring life. Cotton growing is coming to the fore, and as an excellent price is guaranteed, many, it is hoped, will be induced to plant large acreages. Cooktown, with its even climate for the greater part of the year, is eminently suitable for cotton growing. The establishment of a ginny in the district would be an assurance that it was something more than a boom.

Missionary Encouragement.

In the June number of The Round Table, a quarterly magazine that devotes itself to the discussion of the politics of the British Commonwealth alone, there is a remarkable testimony given to the power Christian Missions are exerting on Indian life. In a section entitled "A social revolution," the writer says: "Well may the orthodox Hindu feel that he is confronted by a social revolution of an almost cataclysmic character. The age-worn Hindu system divided society into rigid vertical strata, graded from the supreme twice-born Brahman to the tragic 'untouchable' for ever cut off from contact with fellow-men less degraded than himself. This rigid system has been shattered beyond repair by western ideas. The British Government made all men equal before the law; the railways gave the Sudra the same right to a seat as the Brahman; but the Government could not attack the social system. This the Christian missionary blasted with charges of dynamite. To the despised Sudra he brought the liberty-loving and democratic faith of the ruling race, admitting all who believed to the equal brotherhood of Christ. We can gauge something of the influence of the Christian missionary in the numbers of his converts; two and a-half million in Madras profess Christianity, and whole villages of the Punjab are said to be ready for conversion if there were the teachers to nourish them in the new faith. It is much harder to gauge the indirect results of their persistent teaching."

PAROCHIAL STATISTICS.

PARISH. OR MISSION.	CHURCHES LICENSED.	Total White Population of District.	*No. of Church People Ministered to	No. of Clergymen.	No. of Lay Readers.	No. of Honorary Lay Readers.	No. of Centres at which Services are regularly held.	No. of Sunday and Weekday Services.	Celebrations of Holy Communion.	Sunday School Buildings.				SUNDAY SCHOOL TEACHERS.		SUNDAY SCHOOL SCHOLARS		Average Attendance of Sunday Scholars.	No. of Communicants.	Persons Baptised.	MARRIAGES.		Burials.	PERSONS CONFIRMED.		Schools in which Religious Instruction is given.	No. of Weekday Religious Instructions	Number of children receiving Instruction on week days.
										Men	Women	Boys	Girls	After Banns	By License	Males	Females
†THURSDAY ISLAND ...	ALL SOULS' CATHEDRAL (Quetta Memorial)	400	378	1	1	826	97	1	2	2	23	39	44	97	36	2	2	6	10	20	2	160	77
COOKTOWN ...	CHRIST CHURCH ...	370	150	1	1	$469	77	...	1	4	30	45	40	40	17	...	2	8	...	7	1	130	85
DARWIN ...	CHRIST CHURCH... ALL SOULS'	450	200	1	...	2	2	249	154	3	12	10	18	104	32	...	7	10	8	17
MOSSMAN ...	S. DAVID'S ... S. ANDREW'S	500	170	1	2	152	59	1	17	9	12	37	9	...	9	3	...	1	1	22	45
†NORMANTON cum CROYDON ...	S. PETER'S ... S. MARGARET'S S. JOHN'S ...	450	200	1	3	693	63	2	32	38	36	80	42	...	2	8	11	16	2	80	90
†THE BUSH MISSION S. PAUL'S ... BETLEEMA ... BETANIA
†MOA MISSION S. PAUL'S ... BETLEEMA ... BETANIA ...	8	600	1	...	8	3	791	79	1	3	2	60	68	55	63	30	6	...	2	...	1	1	120	48
†ROPER RIVER MISSION ...	S. CATHERINE'S ...	14	125	2	2	...	2	754	29	1	5	7	32	44	70	7	9	1	...	3	1	200	70
†MITCHELL RIVER MISSION ...	THE ASCENSION ...	11	150	1	2	...	2	830	50	1	3	3	16	16	30	45	8	5	...	4	20	15	1	200	30
†TORRES STRAITS MISSION ...	S. MARY'S ... S. SAVIOUR'S ... CHRIST CHURCH... S. ANDREW'S ... S. PETER'S ... ALL SAINTS' (3 others)	18	2137	4	...	31	9	2030	110	1	11	12	169	144	211	702	93	14	...	14	24	36	2	200	60
Totals		2221	4110	13	4	41	25	6794	718	5	25	36	391	413	516	1175	276	28	23	58	73	113	11	1112	505

* Including aboriginals and aliens.

† Vacant.

† Some adults and children not enrolled in Schools are receiving regular instruction.

§ Not returned; the number for the previous year is inserted.

PAROCHIAL FINANCES (To the nearest pound sterling)

PARISH.	RECEIPTS.										EXPENDITURE.										CREDIT BALANCES OTHER THAN CURRENT A/C.				DEBIT BALANCES OTHER THAN CURRENT A/C.
	Direct Offerings.					Indirect		From Diocesan			Miscellaneous Income		Debit balance at end of year.		Total		EXPENDITURE.								CREDIT BALANCES OTHER THAN CURRENT A/C.		DEBIT BALANCES OTHER THAN CURRENT A/C.
	Oratory Alms	Contribu- tions	Special Efforts	Sales of Gifts	Entertain- ments	From Diocesan Funds.	Miscellaneous Income	Debit balance at end of year.	Total	Debit balance from previous year.	Clergyman's Stipend	Expenses of Divine Service	Diocesan Objects	Missions	Charitable Objects	Church Property	Indebtedness Reduced	Miscellaneous	Credit Balance at end of year.	Total	Building Funds	Sunday Schools	Other Items	Total	Property	Other Items	Total
THURSDAY ISLAND	47	153	103	30	165	68	30	52	...	648	...	250	57	...	46	32	22	...	16	225	648	217	6	...	223
COOKTOWN	117	109	79	18	91	7	...	421	...	245	25	2	2	...	23	...	15	109	421	2	8	...	10
DARWIN	9	155	128	...	77	36	16	...	6	427	...	306	56	6	42	...	17	...	427	...	4	13	17	18	18	...
MOSSMAN	2	61	96	12	50	221	...	195	4	4	2	...	5	...	7	4	221	73	73
NORMANTON cum CROYDON	118	56	32	192	16	4	...	418	...	205	29	4	18	...	8	154	418	...	8	...	8
Totals	203	534	438	30	242	326	203	63	6	2135	...	1201	171	10	50	38	110	...	63	492	2135	292	26	13	331	18	18	18

F. W. SLADE, Hon. Diocesan Secretary.

1922.

Diocese of Carpentaria.

Bishop:

RT. REV. STEPHEN HARRIS DAVIES.
Thursday Island, Queensland.

Administrator:

REV. F. W. SLADE, B.A.

Sub-Dean:

REV. F. W. SLADE, B.A.

Diocesan Secretary:

REV. F. W. SLADE, B.A., Thursday Island.

Commissaries:

REV. J. JONES, M.A., All Saints', S. Kilda, Melbourne.
REV. C. R. MIRRLEES, Springhill, Maesmore, Gloucester,
England.
REV. W. J. B. SCOTT, 16 Little Grosvenor Street, London,
W. 1.
REV. CECIL EDWARDS, Holy Trinity Rectory, Woolloom-gatta.

Rectors:

REV. B. S. COLE, Cooktown.
REV. C. W. LIGHT, Darwin.
REV. F. W. SLADE, B.A., Thursday Island.
REV. E. TAFFS, Mossman.

Honorary Lay Readers:

MR. H. F. L. FINNISS, Darwin
HIS HONOUR JUDGE ROBERTS, Darwin.

Diocesan Council:

REV. F. W. SLADE, B.A.	MR. GEO. CLARK.
REV. J. J. E. DONE.	MR. A. SULLIVAN.
REV. W. H. MACFARLANE,	DR. VERNON.
Th.L.

Honorary Legal Adviser:

HIS HONOUR JUDGE MACNAUGHTON.

Aboriginal Mission, Mitchell River:

MR. J. W. CHAPMAN.	MRS. MATTHEWS.
REV. H. MATTHEWS, J.P.	MISS F. SMITH.
(Supt.)	MRS. TRELLOGEN.
J. Geibo, J. Savo.

Roper River Mission:

MR. DYER.	MR. H. L. PERRIMAN.
REV. R. D. JOYNT.	MISS CROSS.
REV. H. E. D. WARREN	MRS. DYER.
(Supt.)

Torres Straits Mission:

REV. J. J. E. DONE.	REV. J. W. SCHOMBERG.
REV. W. H. MACFARLANE,	*REV. JOSEPH LUI.
[Th.L.]	*REV. POEY PASSI.
DEACONESS HATTON, Moa.
* Native Deacons.

The Diocese.

The See was founded in 1900, and consists of such part of Queensland as is bounded by the sea on the north and east, by the Northern Territory on the west, and by a line drawn from lat. S. 19deg. 30min. on the western boundary of Queensland due east to par. 144deg. E. and thence N. to lat. S. 16deg. 40min. and thence east to the sea, together with the whole of the Northern Territory, comprising an area of not less than 620,000 square miles. The population, which is very widely scattered over this immense area, consists of about 10,000 whites, 5,000 Japanese, Chinese, and other aliens, and 35,000 aboriginals. The white population is mainly mining and pastoral. The See town is Thursday Island, a pearling centre north of Cape York.

Finance.

The Diocese has no endowments beyond the Bishop's income of £395 per annum. Every parish needs a grant from central funds which come from subscriptions to the Diocese, and grants from English Societies.

Missions.

Missions are carried on amongst the Japanese at Thursday Island; the South Sea Islanders; the aboriginals on the Mitchell and Roper Rivers; and among the Islanders of the Torres Straits.

Special Offertories.

On Easter Day the offertories are given to the Clergyman of the Parish, and on Good Friday to the Australian Board of Missions.

The "Church Standard."

Posted to any Address for 6s. 6d. per Annum.

The CHURCH STANDARD holds the unique position of being the only independent weekly paper published in the interests of the Church of England in Australasia.

Published every Friday Morning.

Appeals to all Members of the Church of England, Members of the C.E.M.S., Churchwardens, Side-men and Parochial Councillors, Sunday School Teachers, Lay Readers, Catechists, and Clergy.

Specimen Copies on application to

THE CHURCH PUBLISHING CO. LTD.,

ROYAL INSURANCE BUILDINGS, 16 SPRING STREET, SYDNEY.

St. Margaret's, Brisbane.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND HIGH SCHOOL FOR GIRLS

Under the management of the Sisters of the Society of the Sacred Advent

Pupils prepared for examinations of the University of Queensland, Public Service and Associated Board R.A.

There are two Boarding Houses beautifully situated in extensive grounds overlooking the Brisbane River

BOARDERS RECEIVED FROM THE AGE OF EIGHT

FOR PROSPECTUS APPLY SISTER IN-CHARGE

St. Catharine's, Stanthorpe.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND HIGH SCHOOL FOR GIRLS

Under the management of the Sisters of the Society of the Sacred Advent

Pupils prepared for examinations of the University of Queensland, and Associated Board R.A.

Additional House secured

Increased Accommodation for Boarders

FOR PROSPECTUS APPLY SISTER-IN-CHARGE

Church of England Girls' Schools

UNDER THE MANAGEMENT OF THE
SISTERS OF THE SACRED ADVENT.

S. ANNE'S, TOWNSVILLE, Quarterly Fees for Boarders £10 10s.

S. MARY'S, HERBERTON " " " £15 15s.

Pupils prepared for Queensland University and Associated Board R.A. Examinations.
Commercial Subjects taught. Open-air sleeping accommodation if required.

In connection with S. Mary's, Herberton, there is a separate House for Boys under nine years of age. Quarterly Fees, £12 10s.

The Carpenterian

FOR THE DIOCESE OF CARPENTARIA, NORTH AUSTRALIA.

Vol. XXIII.—No. 89.]

THURSDAY ISLAND, JANUARY 1, 1923.

PUBLISHED ON THE FIRST DAY OF EACH QUARTER.

[PRICE 2/6 A YEAR.
POST FREE.]

NOTICE.

All communications to be addressed to the Editor of The Carpenterian, Bishop's House, Thursday Island, to whom subscriptions may be sent. Subscription, 2/6 per annum, post free.

The address of the Secretary for the Carpenterian Association in England is Miss Theodora Searth, Bearsted, Kent, England.

NOTICE TO CONTRIBUTORS.

All contributions of Parish News, etc., must reach the Editor before the last day of February, May, August, and November in each year.

Bishop's Movements.

The Confirmation tour round the Torres Straits Islands is described elsewhere by another hand. This part of the Diocesan work is the most encouraging of all; it is the only part of the Diocese where the population is not diminishing, also, the Islanders are undertaking more of the work of the Church themselves—although this next year we may not be able to receive into S. Paul's College for training those Islanders who are fit to go there. Our grants from the South towards this work could not be paid in full in 1922, and may be reduced in 1923. The Examination for entrance to S. Paul's College has taken place; some who desire to go there for training are suitable, and after two or more years' training, should become good Deacons. I hope that they will not be prevented from going through lack of funds. At present no one can be admitted, and only with great care shall we be able to carry the College on with the students who are there now. The cost for each student is about £65 a year. On returning from the Islands, I stayed for a few days in Thursday Island. On the arrival of the Marella from the South I went aboard, joining Rev. I. Ll. Skelton, who was on his way to Darwin. I had hoped to go to Cooktown and Mossman at this time, but circumstances arose at Darwin that seemed to necessitate my going there. The "Marella" arrived at Darwin on Sunday, November 12th, too late for the morning service. At Evensong I inducted Rev. I. Ll. Skelton into the living of Darwin.

I was glad to be in Darwin that I might get an opportunity of visiting the Compound—about which I wrote in the last issue, and about which I had heard so much that was not good. I found that accounts given to me were not strictly true and that the statements that appear in the Southern Australian Press are the same; small incidents are grossly exaggerated. The work amongst the Aborigines and Euralians in the Eastern Territory is made exceptionally difficult by the Act dealing with these people that is at present in force being such a very poor one. Some of those who are responsible for the administration of this Act acknowledge that it is quite impossible to administer it; but those responsible for the administration of the Act are doing the best they can, with the powers that it gives them, to care for these Aborigines and Euralians; the only responsible person who does not seem to bother is the Minister in Melbourne.

In the Compound there are three distinct divisions; members of those tribes that live on the seaboard and Islands, such as Melville, Bathurst, etc., live apart on the beach; the inland tribes and the two tribes from the Darwin locality, live on the high ground above the sea, where they have their own huts; the Euralian children are separated from these and all others, and are fenced off in a corner of the Compound. It would of course be better if these children could be removed to a home for themselves alone; but it is not in the Compound that they come to any harm, here they have their school and are carefully looked after. In school they show that they are intelligent and could hold their own with the average white children; but the cruel thing is that, as soon as a girl reaches an age when she could help in school and with the other children's sewing (this is all done by one woman at present), someone wanting a domestic servant in Darwin is allowed to take the girl away. Now, this would not be so bad if the girls were carefully looked after and protected from the bad influences of the town; in many cases this is done, but a visit to the Compound shows that, in some cases, employers do not protect the girls, with the result that there are unmarried mothers in the Compound. It is to be hoped that the Minister in Melbourne will decide that no girls may go out of the Compound to work; the innocent employers have to suffer for the neglect of the careless. Darwin is too small a community for a Protector to have to decide who is fit to employ these girls and who is not.

Darwin Church people are having a hard battle to pay their Rector a living wage. It is to be hoped that they will be able to carry on. This is one of the two parishes in the Diocese that does not receive a regular Diocesan grant: the Diocese does give a grant, but this is for the work up the line at Pine Creek, where there are only a few families struggling to make a living.

On Sunday, December 3rd, Rev. I. Ll. Skelton presented four candidates for Confirmation; these candidates had been partly prepared by the former Rector, Rev. C. W. Light, and Rev. I. Ll. Skelton had an opportunity of giving them more instruction, which will be carried on after Confirmation.

I returned to Thursday Island December 9th, and shall remain here until Rev. F. W. Slade returns from furlough after Easter, 1923.

Christ Church, Dauan.

Normanton-cum-Croydon.

This parish has been vacant since last Easter, but has been visited by the Bishop, and lately by the Sub-Dean. The intention is to minister to the whole district, including Burketown, Normanton, Croydon, Gilbert River, George-town, on the Bush Brotherhood plan, by means of a Ford car, in which the Brother would travel comfortably and efficiently. There are no financial difficulties, and when we can find the priest who is called to that work the position should prove decidedly attractive to him. "A land of difficulties and hardships, but a land that is loved as few lands are loved." The last bush priest who ministered in the Peninsula would not give up his work for anything, and only left it with the greatest regret when advancing age and increasing deafness made continuance impossible. Even a married man with a family could be suitably provided in the district. There are plenty of people, and though, as they express it, they "get a scatter on," the district is less than 400 miles long. This information will assist your prayers that the Church may find the right man.

Mitchell River Mission.

The Sub-Dean arrived on December 5th in the last voyage of the ketch "Francis Pritt," and remained for a week while the ship unloaded her burthen, which was as long as the advanced season would permit. He then proceeded in the ketch to Normanton, and thence southwards on holiday. This visit was arranged because the Mission has the misfortune to be without a Chaplain during all the wet season, owing to the empty coffers of the A.B.M. All the members of the depleted staff were busy, well and cheerful, looking forward to the rains with confidence, being well supplied with all necessities.

A harrowing tale of famine and straitness which has appeared in the newspapers is the result of a perverted imagination. The Mission is indeed desperately hard up, but the staff are not allowed to suffer in consequence. When promised payments did not come along the Mission went into debt; when the debt could not honestly be increased, the staff was reduced, so that the workers who remain should have all reasonable supplies. To prevent them from stinting themselves in necessities, the Staff Accounts are kept separately from the General Account, and an annual sum is allotted for the former, which the superintendent is asked not to exceed. This maximum is never quite reached. The staff order through the superintendent all the goods they require, and receive everything they order.

Through their constant industry and patience in disappointments, the Missionaries have made of the station a garden of fair beauty—the pleasantest spot for many a weary league. They produce abundance of beef, milk, butter, eggs, poultry, fruit, vegetables; while game and fish are plentiful; and the natives share in all these, and are in consequence well nourished and of good physique; a striking contrast to the wild tribes in neighbouring camps, and to the miserable blacks who loiter about northern townships.

The Missionaries are merely doing, as good workmen should, the work which is their duty, and do not regard themselves as doing anything heroic or remarkable. They are called to serve God in that way, and put up cheerfully with the deprivations which must fall to the lot of pioneers. For the isolation and difficulties they find compensation in the knowledge that they are accomplishing a good work.

The Mission is in immediate need of increased support, in order that a Chaplain may return to do the necessary ministrations. It is most unfortunate that the staff and people cannot see a Priest for at least four months, and of course the Mission could not be continued indefinitely without that necessary member of the staff.

There are tribes to the north, on the land lately added to the Aboriginal Reserve, which are very likely to respond to the Good News, as soon as a man can be spared to go and live among them.

Notes.

During the last quarter Rev. C. W. Light resigned his appointment as Rector of Darwin, and left for the South after three years' work in this diocese at Normanton and Darwin.

Rev. Ivor Llewellyn Skelton arrived in the diocese and was licensed as Rector of Darwin and Surrogate in the Northern Territory. Incidentally to get authority to celebrate marriage in the Northern Territory one has to write to the Minister of Home and Territories in Melbourne, where an Order-in-Council has to be put through for each person authorised to take marriages. There is a mail going South from Darwin once a month, so three months is the very least time in which such authority can be obtained. What happens if the hon. Minister is in the midst of a political campaign is still to be disclosed; yet the Commonwealth Government has a Registrar-General of Marriages living in the Northern Territory.

Rev. H. Matthews, his wife and family, were not able to return in time to catch the last boat to the Mitchell River Mission before the wet. They had many misfortunes during their holiday. Their daughter Monica developed bronchial-pneumonia and had to go to the hospital; then Marjory broke her leg in an effort to catch a train. We are sorry for them; their holiday has been spoilt; but we are glad to hear that both children are on a fair way to recovery now. The whole family is expected back at the beginning of April to catch the first boat to the Mitchell after the wet. J. W. Chapman will spend the wet season almost by himself, only seeing Miss Smith and Mrs. Trellogan occasionally, for they live at the school, which is some two miles from the main station.

It is unfortunate that in the South people do not realise the difficulties of communication in the North during the wet season. From November to the end of March there is no chance of getting parcels and cases to either the Mitchell River or to Roper River and Groote Eylandt. To sail about during this season would be foolhardy, yet goods are sent up year after year for these places too late for their last boats. The agent informs me that he has cases for all these places in his warehouse now.

The following information is collected from the report for the year ending December 31st, 1921. Aboriginals Department:—

"The total number of permits granted at Thursday Island for work on boats was 423, being 190 Torres Straits Islanders and 125 mainlanders. The wages earned by these men amounted to £5,753, of which £3,976 was paid for Torres Straits men and £1,877 for the mainlanders. In addition, 168 Torres Straits men worked in their tribal 'company' boats, and in this way earned £14,689.

"There were 291 deaths; the Settlements reporting 68, the Missions 29, Torres Straits 40, and the camps 154.

"Births numbered 324; the list showing—Torres Straits 131, Settlements 56, Missions 38, camps 99.

At Palm Island the Torres Straits men hold their own Church services daily. (Palm Island is the penal settlement to which aborigines are removed in certain cases.)

Island Company Boats.—In August last all native-owned fishing vessels were sent to trade at the Papuan Industries Station, Badu, under the supervision of the local Protector. The alteration has proved satisfactory in every way.

"Island Funds.—The total collections were £1,783 and the expenditure £1,502. A further £1,771 is out on loan to nine of the native fishing vessels. There is an increase in the total balance of nearly £300. The collections show a decrease of £824 and the expenditure a reduction of £1,257 on last year's figures. The falling off is accounted for by the fact that 7½ per cent. was previously collected from the gross proceeds of the island boats' produce, whereas the regulation provided for the collection of 7½ per cent. on the nett proceeds of a boat's earnings. As it is a difficult matter to ascertain rightly what are the earnings, it was decided to collect 5 per cent. from the gross earnings of each boat. £800 has been collected towards the reduction of the boats' debts, but will not appear in the liquidation of such debts until 1922."

We congratulate Rev. F. W. Slade on his having passed Part I. of the Examination for Scholar in Theology.

On Sunday, December 17th, the Archbishop of Brisbane ordained Cyril Grant Lane to the Diaconate at the request of the Bishop of Carpentaria. Rev. C. G. Lane is not unknown in this diocese, where he worked as a layman on the Mitchell River Mission, and later went, with the permission of his Bishop, to help the Presbyterians to restore their work on Mornington Island after the tragic murders took place there. He is at present working on the staff of S. Mark's Church, Warwick; his Vicar is the Rev. W. P. Glover, who was at one time on Thursday Island.

CONTRIBUTIONS TO Carpentarian.—Mrs. F. Morris 5s., Mrs. Woodhead 2s., Mrs. Crees, 5s., Mrs. Wilson £1/1/-, A. H. Bunting £1/1/-.

DIOCESAN ASSESSMENT. — Mossman Parish, £2/2/-.

Round the Islands of the Torres Straits.

On Friday, the 13th October, the Bishop left with the Rev. J. J. Done in the "Herald" for his first confirmation tour of the Islands of the Torres Straits, taking the Rev. H. E. Warren as his Chaplain.

As we neared the Island of Mabuiag the village presented a very animated sight, all the people running to their appointed stations to welcome their Bishop on his first visit. The decorated arch and lines of children waving palm branches and flowers, and the scores of multi-coloured lava-lavas of the men and brighter dresses of the women, made a picture that accorded with the enthusiastic song of welcome.

As the dinghy containing our party of six touched the shore, a score of great strong hands seized her and lifted her bodily right up the beach under the arch of welcome, and other hands assisted all to alight. After we passed up the lines of singing men and women, some 250 filed past to shake hands with the Bishop and the visitors. At dusk there was Evensong in S. Mary's Church, a very substantial concrete building with red-tiled roof and seating nearly 300 people. The prayers and address were in English and the hymns sung in the native language. The singing was most hearty and inspiring, and certainly gave great satisfaction to the people, for at times it was simply deafening from sheer volume of sound, yet was in perfect tune and harmony. S. Mary's is set on the beach in a great grove of evergreen coconut palms with the hills towering behind at present glorying in many shades of colour from shrubs and grass and stunted trees, with here and there a brown ant hill and patches of many coloured weathered rock. At the eastern side of the Church is the school and Government teacher's residence set in another grove of palms, while on the western side is the village consisting of a few dozen houses neatly made of pandanus and coconut leaves with grass thatched roofs, all blending beautifully with the foliage around and the people who live among them. The only harsh notes on the scene were a couple of galvanised iron houses, copied from the superior (?) white man, but with a very poor result. The court house and jail are in ruins and have been for years, silent testimony to the content and prosperity that reigns on this island paradise. Further along through the village are the people's gardens all unfenced, yet never interfered with by anyone except the rightful owners. There is never any stealing from one another, yet should one of the people need help through sickness or any other cause, there are always many volunteer hands ready to give the desired assistance. At daylight a bell rings for prayers, but long before this the people are up and about, some going to the gardens, some out on the reefs looking for fish, and others attending to their fishing boats and gear.

Behind S. Mary's Church and close to the village is the Baba's (Priest) little home, where the Rev. J. J. Done and his wife and children live. The little place is most ingeniously constructed of odds and ends cast out as useless by others, with some new material, but it would be hard to imagine a more comfortable or compact little home—discarded windows from a Cathedral, portions of ships and boats, and part of a fowl-house all have their places in the building, but now that it is finished and painted the most fastidious could hardly find fault with it as a home.

On Saturday evening came Evensong and preparation for the Holy Communion on the morrow, and on Sunday, the 15th, came the great day for Mabuiag. At 7.30 the Bishop, assisted by the Revs. H. E. Warren and J. Done, celebrated Holy Communion when there were 114 communicants and every shade of colour was represented there. At 11 a.m. Mattins was followed by Confirmation, when two men and ten women received the sacred rite. At 3.30 Evensong was read and the Bishop preached, the Church as at the other services being full.

A number of boats from the adjacent Islands hearing of the Bishop's visit came over to join in the festivities, and the Churchwardens deciding that there was no time like the present, took up a collection towards the Diocesan Assessment of £18 for the year. This service yielded £7/11/- which, with two other collections held earlier in the year, brought in more than the required amount. After the service the Churchwardens asked permission to make a small present to the Bishop; upon their request being granted, some 200 people assembled in the village with the gifts they had prepared and formed themselves into a procession, and singing hymns in native language wound in and out among the palm trees proceeding to the Baba's house, where the Bishop awaited their coming; as they reached the Bishop's chair each one, old and young, laid an offering on the mat, and many and varied were the gifts produced—native baskets, fans, beads, necklaces, pearl shell, coconut oil, and live fowls being the chief gifts. The head man made a short speech and the Bishop thanked them, whereupon all retired to the village evidently much pleased with an afternoon's good work well done. After supper the people held a service in their own language and enjoyed every moment of it. At 9 p.m. a bell rang for lights out, and so ended a great and memorable day for Mabuiag.

On Monday the 16th the Bishop's party walked down to where the "Herald" was anchored off the little jetty, but wind and tide not being favourable we had to wait until 11 a.m. to start. Then with much anxiety on the part of the strangers we sailed through little channels and openings in the treacherous reefs, points of coral and rocks being about on every side and a five-knot current running through. But the big dark skipper and boys of the crew enjoyed every moment of the excitement, for were they not in their own waters where they lived their whole lives. They knew every reef and opening, for there are found the wonderful fish and pearls that mean so much to them. The Government chart remarks about these places "unexamined coral reefs," but the boys say "We walk along bottom to look out pearl shell," so to them the safe places are well known.

Sailing now for some 20 miles behind a great reef with the waves breaking on it, a beautiful little peaked island called Dauan was reached at 5 p.m. Here we had to land in the surf and walk half-a-mile over broken coral and rock, not a very pleasant proceeding for the Bishop and his Chaplain, but the Baba and the "Herald" boys seemed to enjoy this, as indeed they enjoy everything that comes their way in the day's work. Various little bands of men and boys came down from the village to meet us, among the first party being the Rev. Joseph Lui, one of the first natives to be ordained Deacon. He is in charge of the school here and has the spiritual oversight of Dauan and also that of the neighbouring island of Saibai.

The village consists of a row of huts scattered along the beach, just above high water mark and in a grove of coconut trees. There was an arch of greenery erected and rows of coconut leaves laid down for the visitors to walk upon, while all the people to the number of 100, dressed in their best and prettiest clothes and wearing pink oleander flowers in their hair, stood to attention in line. As the Bishop's party passed along, each one shook hands with all present, for it would be very impolite to omit the handshake on every possible or impossible occasion.

The little Church is a most striking building, constructed entirely of native material by the people themselves. Each person seems to have designed a portion of it and ornamented some part of it according to his or her own sweet will, and the general effect is that of a large doll's house. It stands right on the beach and is in a grove of coconut trees. The lower walls are made of coral lime to a height of four feet six inches and are pierced with round holes for ventilation, giving the outside the appearance of a ship with many portholes. Above this lower wall is a top wall of split bamboos with little swinging windows to let in light and air. The roof is thatched with beautifully woven grass and palm leaf and must have taken many hands much time to construct. A little verandah projects from the top of the wall above the lime work and is ornamented with a scalloped wooden fringe. The whole outside is painted with red, white and blue, all the colours being made of native material. Over the west door is a rectangular board studded with spikes—this was explained to us as being representative of the crown of thorns worn by the Master. On the door there is a large red and white star on a blue background, and around the building is a tiny little fence about two feet high, all beautifully carved and fitted with much care and thought. Inside, the floor is covered with mats, for there are no seats. The font is a large clam-shell mounted on a carved base. The lectern has a little wooden fence round it, and the prayer desk has a little fence round the top. The sanctuary rails are supported on posts that project well above the rails and are surmounted by wooden balls.

The holy table is set back in a recess made of plaited bamboo and a large Cross is suspended from the east wall. The interior was nicely decorated with oleander and frangipanni flowers and greenery. It was plainly evident that religion was a real thing to these people and that they had put their best work and ideas into God's House and were most keenly anxious that it should be as beautiful as possible; God was first in the lives of these people, and His House received more care and attention than their own. Evensong was at dusk, when the Bishop preached; then a supper of wild duck, yam and sweet potatoes was provided by Joseph's good wife Mary; then, at 10.30 p.m., a deputation of men appeared to ask their Bishop to help them in some trouble.

Continued on 3rd column of page 716.

The Carpenterian

FOR THE DIOCESE OF CARPENTARIA,
NORTH AUSTRALIA.

Vol. XXIII., No. 89. Thursday Island, Jan. 1, 1923

League of Nations.

At the request of the Archbishop of Brisbane, the Clergy of this Diocese were asked to preach sermons on the League of Nations on Sunday, February 9th, 1923. This date was altered later to December 24th, 1922, but we could not alter our date in this Diocese. At the best our mails are only monthly, and notice could not be sent round in time. So we shall have our own special Sunday independent of the rest of Queensland.

The Church Times speaks of the League of Nations as the only thing brought about by the Treaty of Versailles containing Christian ideals, and however much we may criticise the character and constitution of the League, it stands as the only defence we have to a return to secret diplomacy and armed neutrality—that is to pre-war conditions. Of course there are two parties in most States who do not like the League—the Imperialist, whose doctrine of national selfishness cannot be made to fit in with Christian morality, and the other party who in almost every country is preaching class warfare, which must end in what is known as Bolshevism, with its anti-Christian teaching of hatred for others. On making enquiries whether sermons on the League would be understood in the Torres Straits Islands, one is assured that the islanders will ask why sermons were not preached on the subject to them when they get their papers from the South telling them that sermons were preached throughout Queensland on this subject.

Diocesan Council Meeting.

At the Diocesan Council Meeting held on November 6th the most important business transacted was the decision arrived at to open up a small Mission Station on the Small River. The Small River is named Cowal Creek on the maps, but is popularly known in Thursday Island by its name of Small River. This creek is just over on the mainland from Thursday Island; it is the meeting place of two mainland tribes, if not their chief camping place. These tribes are not always on the most friendly terms, but it is hoped that quarrelling will cease if there is the permanent influence of a Christian teacher living among them. It has been decided that out of the money raised in England by the Carpenterian Association an Islander teacher shall be maintained at the Small River, where he will conduct a school for the children of the two tribes, and evangelise the adults. A white priest will visit this teacher once a month. Rev. J. J. Done has already visited these people a few times, but as they know very little English not much can be done by occasional visits. The Island teacher will not have an easy time at first, for he will have to pick up enough of their language to make himself understood, and he will have to plant his garden for his own food supplies. If he can get a good garden made during this wet season it may encourage the mainlanders to try to make some next wet season. We do not intend to feed the children who attend school, as is done on other Missions in the Diocese. The parents must provide food for their own children. This is an entirely new departure in the method of conducting Missions among the aboriginals, who always look to the Missionary to feed and clothe them, which entails such enormous expense.

Other moneys raised by the Carpenterian Association in England is used for work among the scattered white population in Queensland and the Northern Territory. Only two of the Parishes in the Diocese are in a position to pay their clergy a living wage; the others have to have grants given to them, and Bush Brothers (when men are found to do this work) will at first have to be entirely maintained by the Association money, but it is hoped that after they have been working for twelve months they will be supported by the districts in which they work.

S. Martin's Hospital, Brisbane

We have great pleasure in publishing an illustration to call your attention to this, the Church of England War Memorial for Queensland, and the best war memorial in Australia. The hospital was opened on November 28th last by the Governor-General, and its name perpetuates the memory of Armistice Day, which falls on S. Martin's Day. His Excellency said in his speech: "We laymen are too apt to regard the service of God as a matter for ceremonial service within the buildings of the Church, but surely our duty does not finish there; for the service of God is incomplete unless we carry it into our everyday life."

We have been delighted with the look of the hospital and with its accommodation and arrangements for the care of the sick. It can make good use of all the money you can give it; the intention of such offerings has an appeal that will touch many a heart—the honour of the A.I.F. and the care of the sick, and thus to the glory of God. Thursday Island has contributed liberally, but let us all remember that the hospital's establishment cannot and ought not to be self-supporting.

Anyone who has been either a patient or a minister in a public hospital and in a Church hospital knows the immense difference between the two, a difference all in favour of the latter; the public cannot run a hospital perfectly—how could they? Who is there to choose and control the staff? How can responsibility be effective? The larger the hospital, the more these difficulties increase. We may well be grateful for the establishment, in the Metropolitan See town of the Province, of the first Church hospital in Queensland.

Round the Islands of the Torres Straits

(Continued).

An hour of careful questioning elicited the nature of the help desired; the remainder of the night was spent in the little grass hut built for Baba Done when visiting the Island. The celebration of Holy Communion was at daylight. The Bishop was celebrant, assisted by the Rev. J. Lui and Rev. J. Done; there were about fifty communicants. After this service there were two baptisms. Later in the day the Bishop visited the school, presided over by Joseph, and examined the children in their work. Families here on the Island are generally large, in fact a number of children is so earnestly desired that the average white man's family would be to them a matter of reproach and regret. If the depth of the spiritual life here is due to the presence and teaching of the native Deacon, Joseph, as there is reason to think much of it is, then the ordination of these men has been a mighty stride forward towards the evangelisation of the nations, and is a triumphant proof of the value of Foreign Missions.

We left Dauan at 3 p.m. for Saibai, the Island nearest to New Guinea, that coast being only some three miles from us and a village there plainly visible. Here again was great excitement on the arrival of the "Herald," the people running about, putting the finishing touches to the decorations, looked like ants in the distance. Some of the houses here seem to be built of the New Guinea sago palm, in preference to coconut leaves. The Island is under the charge of the Government teacher, Mr. Niebel, who received us hospitably, and gave us much information about the place and people. At 5 p.m. there was a wedding; the bridegroom appeared in stiff, starched collar and a pair of boots; but the boots had to come off before the ceremony began—even the lucky bridegroom could not be happy with them on. The bride was dressed in pink, with green leaves sewn on in patches, and pink oleander flowers in her hair. Both bride and groom were very shy and nervous. After the ceremony, which was attended by nearly everyone on the Island—about 250 people—Evensong was read and the Bishop preached, and at sunrise on the following morning celebrated the Holy Communion; there were 123 Communicants, and some of the people approached the sanctuary rails on their hands and knees; it was indeed an inspiration to be allowed to minister, even for a short time, to such a sincere and reverent congregation—a people despised by many on account of their dark skins, but surely a people whose hearts are right in the sight of God and whose lives and offerings are acceptable to Him.

The Church is an old ramshackle place of galvanised iron, rusted, weather-worn and falling down; many years ago it cost £150 to build. On one of his visits Rev. J. Done discussed the building of a new Church with the Churchwardens. On his next visit, a month later, the Wardens handed him £130, as the result of a "small piece collection;" needless to say he was pleased and gratified at this immediate response; but on his next visit a month later, when he found they had had another "small piece collection" and handed him a further £140, he had to order all further collections off. So the people, unable to give in that way, began to collect timber, stone, and other suitable materials to build with. Truly, the

Diocese of Carpentaria.

INTERCESSION PAPER

Jan., Feb., March., 1923.

INTERCESSIONS.

We beseech Thee to hear us, O Lord.

That it may please Thee :

1. That Priests may be found to minister to the scattered white population in the Gulf country.
2. That the three white members of the staff at the Mitchell River Mission may be blessed and given Divine help during their isolation in the wet season.
3. That wisdom and guidance be given to those responsible for the building of new Church buildings in the Islands.
4. That the Government may alter and improve their laws in the Northern Territory, so that the Aborigines and Euralians may receive better protection.
5. That the new Rector of Darwin may be blessed in his work.
6. That those confirmed in the Diocese in 1922 may receive the grace of perseverance.

THANKSGIVINGS.

We thank Thee and bless Thee, O Lord.

1. For the ordination of Cyril Grant Lane on December 17th.
2. That a Mission Station and School is to be opened on Cowal Creek.
3. For the faith and devotion of the Torres Straits Islanders.

ST. MARTIN'S HOSPITAL.

people of these Islands do offer willingly for the work of the Lord.

At 8.30 a.m. Holy Baptism was administered to seven children, and immediately after that the people presented the Bishop with a gift of fans and coconuts. We then boarded one of the large New Guinea canoes with two sails and two outriggers, and this took us out to the "Herald," where the Rev. J. Lui and his father and mother joined us as passengers back to Dauan, where they landed an hour later. The wind then fell away, and we spent an unpleasant night tossing and rolling about. We were travelling again at sunrise, and ran into the little anchorage at Boigu at 9 a.m. Here were the usual arches and decorations and songs of welcome to the Bishop. We were met on the beach by the Rev. Poey Passi, the other native Deacon, who is in charge here, and the Churchwardens and Councillors. We visited the School and found the discipline excellent; the arithmetic was very creditable, but some of the scholars were weak on reading.

During the afternoon the people gave an exhibition of native dancing and presented the Bishop and his Chaplain with a present of mats, baskets, necklaces, and coconuts. The village, as on other islands, is very neat and clean, but the houses are built closer together. The people here are building a jetty out to the end of the reef. There is much mat and basket work going on and everyone seems to be busy. The Church, which rejoices in the strange name of S. Saviour, is made entirely of native material and is of native design, while much of the beautiful wongai wood is used in its construction; it is furnished with seats but the floor is also covered with mats, and in the sanctuary are some lilies growing in the earthen floor. At Evensong the Bishop preached to a full Church on "The Fruit of the Spirit is Joy." After the second lesson there was a baptism and a thanksgiving service. At the close of the service came supper, then several deputations to the Bishop and Baba Done for a "small piece yarn."

On Friday, the 20th, at sunrise the Bishop celebrated the Holy Communion, assisted by the Rev. Poey Passi. The "Herald" then left for Dauan, which was reached at 6.30 p.m. after a rough passage. We were glad to get ashore and have a bath in fresh water. After supper a present of coconuts, yams, eggs, etc., arrived for the Bishop. We left the anchorage at 8 a.m., taking with us Joseph Lui's old father Lui and his wife Kaidai. Because of strong head winds we could only make Two Brothers Island by sundown, where we anchored, but got away again for Yam Island before sunrise and anchored there at 11.30 a.m. Here we found the most elaborate decorations yet seen—two arches and two decorated roads because of the uncertainty of our landing place. There are about 130 people on this island, which is under the care of Government teacher Miss Hempstead, to whom we were able to deliver her first mail since her arriving on the island. She loves the people, so naturally they respond; we found a very happy and contented family indeed. The Church is of galvanised iron, but in good repair and spotlessly clean. Evensong at 5 p.m., when a native boy named Elap read the service very intelligently; after the second lesson the Rev. J. Done administered Holy Baptism and the Bishop preached. At the close of the service several came for advice and help on private matters. At Holy Communion at sunrise on the 23rd there were forty-seven communicants; afterwards the people presented gifts of baskets, shells and beads to the Bishop and his Chaplain. The "Herald" got away at 8.45 a.m. and the whole population of the island came down to the beach to say farewell and sing hymns at parting. As the wind was very light we only managed to reach Rennel Island by dark; here we found three girls, who, seeing the "Herald" coming, had prepared their home for service, so Evensong was said in their house. Then they very kindly provided us with supper daintily served. In the house was a fine eagle lectern carved out of wongai wood—this is to be given to Darnley Church when finished. The anchor was up before daylight and we were on the way to Darnley. We passed close to several uninhabited islands but did not stop; in the distance we saw Stephen Island, where there are several wrecks and a supposed treasure trove, as old gold coins have been found there.

We reached Darnley Island at 2.30 p.m. There are about 300 people resident here under the care of the Government teacher, Mr. Miller, and the resident priest, Rev. W. H. MacFarlane. Here we had a great reception, everybody came down to welcome us with much speech making and hand shaking. The painted board on the welcome arch referred to the Bishop as our "Popa" and Rev. J. Done as our "Baba." After tea with Mrs. MacFarlane and her four little children, Evensong was said in All Saints' Church. This Church is only being built, but will be very beautiful when completed; it is being constructed of reinforced coral lime and the roof lined with plaited bamboo. Rev. W. H. and Mrs. MacFarlane most hospitably entertained us all during our stay here—the fatted pig was killed and duly appreciated.

On the 25th there was an early celebration of the Holy Communion, when over 70 communicated. After breakfast the school was visited. Mr. Miller is to be complimented on the excellent discipline kept and the wonderful progress of the scholars, some 50 of whom we saw at work in the senior school: their arithmetic was far more advanced than anything we had previously seen or imagined they could attempt—doing with ease money sums, long measure and simple roots.

Eleven o'clock Mattins was followed by Confirmation. At the close of this service all marched in procession through part of the

GLENNIE MEMORIAL SCHOOL, TOOWOOMBA

Principal: MISS LAWRENCE.

Church of England School for Girls, Toowoomba. Under control of the Brisbane Diocesan Council.

Patron: His Grace the Archbishop of Brisbane.

THE GLENNIE MEMORIAL SCHOOL gives Education up to Senior and Matriculation standard. Specialities: Music, Singing and Art. THE PREPARATORY SCHOOL receives pupils up to 13 years of age, and prepares candidates for the State Scholarship Examination.

Reduction for Sisters.

Fees for both Schools on application.

GLENNIE PREPARATORY SCHOOL, TOOWOOMBA

Principal: MISS SUTTON.

village to the house of an old lady suffering from an incurable disease, to whom the Bishop gave Confirmation. The procession, which consisted of the cross-bearer, two Churchwardens with their staves, Revs. J. Done and W. H. MacFarlane, the Chaplain with the pastoral staff, the Bishop in cope and mitre, the newly confirmed, and the congregation then formed up again, marched back and sang "Te Deum" in the Church. This island differs from those visited so far, for it is entirely volcanic and consists of most beautiful fertile soil, so that native foods may be grown with the minimum of labour. There are little villages scattered along the beaches half way round the island, and behind the villages in the mountain valleys are the gardens, and on the hill sides the coconut plantations. After supper the whole population turned up with a present for the Bishop; then all attended Evensong in Church; the Bishop gave the address. The singing was accompanied by three native war drums for an orchestra. After Evensong the young men gave an exhibition of dancing which lasted till 12.30 a.m.

The "Herald" got away at 9.30 a.m. on the 26th, but only got out five miles when the wind died out and we were anchored for the rest of the day. Next day there was no wind. On the third day we were still in the same place, but a light breeze came up later, so we got on our way to Murray Island. W. H. MacFarlane coming with us made the "Herald's" little cabin somewhat crowded, but we were a happy crowd. Murray Island was reached at 8.30 p.m. and a hearty welcome given us by the people, some 400 of whom came down to meet us. We attended Evensong in the large coral-lime Church and afterwards had supper with the Government teacher (Mr. Bruce), who has spent nearly 40 years on the island, and who regaled us with many interesting stories of times past, and exhibited curios and relics from these islands and New Guinea. On this island the people had their hair decorated with flowers, frangipani, hibiscus, oleander, and bouganvillea, and we were told that they are in the habit of pinning large living emerald-green butterflies to their hair as ornaments. Certainly the butterflies were large and most beautifully coloured, but we hope they do nothing so cruel as this.

At the celebration of Holy Communion at sunrise on the 29th by the Bishop there were 130 communicants. After breakfast Mattins was said at 10.30, and the Bishop preached on "The Temple of the Holy Ghost." Later in the day Rev. H. E. Warren was able to speak to the people about the Roper River and Groote Eylandt Mission work and call for offers of service there.

This island is the most fertile we have seen in the Straits. Coconuts and bananas are literally in their thousands, and there is an abundance of yams, taro, sweet potatoes, sugarcane as well. It is on the shores of this island that the wonderful fish traps are built—miles upon miles of stone walls built in the shape of little paddocks, trap the fish at high tide, and the people collect them after the tide is gone out. The origin of these traps is shrouded in mystery, not even tradition can account for their presence and peculiar construction, or suggest the time of their origin. Here we also saw large shoals of sardines swimming up and down near the edge of the beach, and there are quantities of shell and other fish to be gathered on the reef.

At 4.30 p.m. Evensong was said and Holy Baptism administered, then came the Confirmation service, when 20 adults were presented. Mr. Bruce had kindly invited us to lunch, and we spent a very instructive hour afterwards listening to stories and traditions of the old days among these islands.

On the 30th Mattins was read soon after daylight, and the people gave the Bishop and his Chaplain a present of necklaces, baskets, etc., which entailed more speeches of appreciation and thanks.

The "Herald" left at 8 a.m. for Yorke Island and dropped anchor there at 4 p.m. Here again we were met with songs of praise and joy, and found much time and labour had been put into the decorations. At the entrance to the long decorated avenue were a number of boards with an inscription of welcome to the Bishop and thanks to God for sending him painted neatly upon them. We were sorry not to meet the Government teacher here, Mrs. Smallwood; she was in Thursday Island on the sick list. At 4.30 p.m. there was Evensong with an address by the Bishop in the pretty little coral-lime Church; afterwards W. H. MacFarlane had a final preparation class for the confirmees, while Revs. Done and Warren addressed the people outside until it was time for bed. There were fifty communicants at sunrise on the 31st, then Mattins at 10 a.m. and Confirmation afterwards, when six men and three women were presented. Then came the inevitable present and more speeches, but everyone seemed to be delighted and happy, for was not their new Father in God among them for the first time. This island is long, low, and flat. It seems to be a sand heap on a coral reef, quite different to Murray and Darnley Islands.

As we bade farewell all the people to the number of 130 accompanied us to the beach crying "Yawah" (good-bye). Here W. H. MacFarlane was to leave us, returning to Darnley in the "Oituli," which was at anchor near the "Herald"; both boats got away at noon together with a cutter bound for Thursday Island direct. At sundown we reached Coconut Island, where we were again welcomed with many manifestations of joy from the eighty people resident there. The lay-reader here had carved a wooden shield and painted upon it the arms of the Diocese; this was used as part of the decorations. The Church is a little coconut leaf building kept spotlessly neat and tidy, and the furniture within is made by the people of wongai wood, which grows profusely on the Island, and the floor is of clean white sand. At Evensong the Bishop was the preacher, a presentation of a handsome pastoral staff beautifully carved out of wongai wood by one of the people was made to him. After Evensong there was much yarning and talking till bedtime.

On All Saints' Day the Bishop celebrated the Holy Communion, he also used the staff just presented to him for the first time. After breakfast came another present, this time live fowls and ducks, besides baskets and shells. We visited the school, conducted in the Church at present by Harry Captain, the lay-reader; here we found twenty-five children at work, their reading and writing was specially good.

Anchor was up at 11.45 a.m. After a rough passage we reached Warrabeer at 4.30 p.m. Here there are only ten people on the island, yet this is a far more fertile place than Coconut and much larger. At Evensong the Bishop preached on "The Fruit of the Spirit is Love." The Church, S. Peter's, is very tiny, but quite large enough for the needs of those who worship there, and is built entirely of native material. In the morning the Bishop celebrated the Holy Communion, when there were nine communicants. After service and some little talk the people made the Bishop a small present and Baba Done got a live squealing pig to take to Mabuig.

Moa was reached at 12.15. The Bishop had visited here before, so there was no demonstration. Here we were cordially welcomed by Deaconess Hatton, Mrs. Schomberg, and the college students; unfortunately we found that the Rev. J. W. Schomberg was ill in bed. After lunch the "Herald" sailed for Mabuig, leaving the Bishop at Moa. On the following morning the Bishop celebrated the Holy Communion and in the evening gave Confirmation; meanwhile the "Herald" had gone to Mabuig and was to have got back in time for the Confirmation Service, but head winds and tides prevented her reaching Moa until after the service.

On Saturday Mattins was read by Sailor, one of the students; then after breakfast there was time for a walk out to the gardens, three miles away, where many kinds of tropical fruits and vegetables are growing in great profusion. We were specially interested in the beautiful pineapples which were growing wild in the scrub. The "Herald" left again after lunch, and after ineffectual attempts to capture a turtle, arrived at Thursday Island and dropped anchor at 8 p.m.—H.E.W.

MITCHELL RIVER MISSION.

BALANCE SHEET FOR THE YEAR ENDING DECEMBER 31st, 1922.

RECEIPTS AND EXPENDITURE.

RECEIPTS.				£	s.	d.	EXPENDITURE.				£	s.	d.
To Australian Board of Missions	1200	0	0	By Cattle Committee	64	16	10
„ Government Grant	500	0	0	„ Boat Working Account	151	11	6
„ Donations Account	290	6	1	„ Station Account	650	11	0
							„ Boat Repairs Account	23	12	9
							„ Staff Account	160	9	5
							„ Freight and Charges		2	9
							„ Insurance Account	22	0	2
							„ General Expenses	42	10	2
							„ Salaries and Wages	274	10	0
							„ Balance	600	1	6
				£1990	6	1					£1990	6	1

LIABILITIES AND ASSETS.

LIABILITIES.				£	s.	d.	ASSETS.				£	s.	d.
Diocese of Carpentaria	100	0	0	National Bank of Australasia Ltd.	19	11	8
Matthews, Rev., Special Account	9	19	0	Travelling Expenses to be paid by A.B.M.	154	10	0
Hodels Ltd.	399	13	11	Excess Expenditure over Receipts, 1921	£1123	7	4
Hospital Account	7	7	0	Excess Receipts over Expenditure, 1922	600	1	6
T. Trutta	17	5	0					523	5	10
Wages held in Trust for Natives	163	2	7
				£697	7	6					£697	7	6

Examined and found correct.—(Signed) E. J. HENNESSY,
20/12/22. Auditor.

HODELS LIMITED,
Per GEORGE CLARKE,
Agents.

1923.

Diocese of Carpentaria.

Bishop:

RT. REV. STEPHEN HARRIS DAVIES.
Thursday Island, Queensland.

Administrator:

REV. F. W. SLADE, B.A.

Sub-Dean:

REV. F. W. SLADE, B.A.

Diocesan Secretary:

REV. F. W. SLADE, B.A., Thursday Island.

Commissaries:

REV. J. JONES, M.A., All Saints', S. Kilda, Melbourne.
REV. C. B. MIRRELES, Springhill, Maesmore, Gloucester,
England.
REV. W. J. B. SCOTT, 16 Little Grosvenor Street, London,
W. 1.
REV. CECIL EDWARDS, Holy Trinity Rectory, Woolloom-gatta.

Rectors:

REV. B. S. COLE, Cooktown.
REV. I. LL. SKELTON, Darwin.
REV. F. W. SLADE, B.A., Thursday Island.
REV. E. TAFFS, Mossman.

Honorary Lay Readers:

MR. H. F. L. FINNISS, Darwin.
HIS HONOUR JUDGE ROBERTS, Darwin.

Diocesan Council:

REV. F. W. SLADE, B.A.	MR. GEO. OLARK.
REV. J. J. E. DONE.	MR. A. SULLIVAN.
REV. W. H. MACFARLANE,	DR. VERNON.
Th.L.

Honorary Legal Adviser:

HIS HONOUR JUDGE MACNAUGHTON.

Aboriginal Mission, Mitchell River:

MR. J. W. CHAPMAN.	MRS. MATTHEWS.
REV. H. MATTHEWS, J.P.	MISS F. SMITH.
(Supt.)	MRS. TRELLOGEN.
J. Geibo, J. Savo.

Roper River Mission:

MR. DYER.	MR. H. L. PERRIMAN.
REV. E. D. JOYNT.	MR. E. C. H. LOUSADA.
REV. H. E. D. WARREN	MISS CROSS.
(Supt.)	MRS. DYER.
	MISS A. FARRANT.

Torres Straits Mission:

REV. J. J. E. DONE.	REV. J. W. SCHOMBERG.
REV. W. H. MACFARLANE,	*REV. JOSEPH LUI.
[Th.L.]	*REV. POEY PASSI.
DEACONESS HATTON, M.O.
* Native Deacons.

The Diocese.

The See was founded in 1900, and consists of such part of Queensland as is bounded by the sea on the north and east, by the Northern Territory on the west, and by a line drawn from lat. S. 19deg. 30min. on the western boundary of Queensland due east to par. 144deg. E. and thence N. to lat. S. 16deg. 40min. and thence east to the sea, together with the whole of the Northern Territory, comprising an area of not less than 620,000 square miles. The population, which is very widely scattered over this immense area, consists of about 10,000 whites, 5,000 Japanese, Chinese, and other aliens, and 35,000 aboriginals. The white population is mainly mining and pastoral. The See town is Thursday Island, a pearling centre north of Cape York.

Finance.

The Diocese has no endowments beyond the Bishop's income of £395 per annum. Every parish needs a grant from central funds which come from subscriptions to the Diocese, and grants from English Societies.

Missions.

Missions are carried on amongst the Japanese at Thursday Island; the South Sea Islanders; the aboriginals on the Mitchell and Roper Rivers; and among the Islanders of the Torres Straits.

Special Offertories.

On Easter Day the offertories are given to the Clergyman of the Parish, and on Good Friday to the Australian Board of Missions.

The "Church Standard."

Posted to any Address for 6s. 6d. per Annum.

The CHURCH STANDARD holds the unique position of being the only independent weekly paper published in the interests of the Church of England in Australasia.

Published every Friday Morning.

Appeals to all Members of the Church of England, Members of the C.E.M.S., Churchwardens, Sidesmen and Parochial Councillors, Sunday School Teachers, Lay Readers, Catechists, and Clergy.

Specimen Copies on application to

THE CHURCH PUBLISHING CO. LTD.,

ROYAL INSURANCE BUILDINGS, 16 SPRING STREET, SYDNEY.

St. Margaret's, Brisbane.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND HIGH SCHOOL FOR GIRLS

Under the management of the Sisters of the Society of the Sacred Advent

Pupils prepared for examinations of the University of Queensland, Public Service and Associated Board R.A.

There are two Boarding Houses beautifully situated in extensive grounds overlooking the Brisbane River

BOARDERS RECEIVED FROM THE AGE OF EIGHT

FOR PROSPECTUS APPLY SISTER-IN-CHARGE

St. Catharine's, Stanthorpe.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND HIGH SCHOOL FOR GIRLS

Under the management of the Sisters of the Society of the Sacred Advent

Pupils prepared for examinations of the University of Queensland, and Associated Board R.A.

Additional House secured

Increased Accommodation for Boarders

FOR PROSPECTUS APPLY SISTER-IN-CHARGE

Church of England Girls' Schools

UNDER THE MANAGEMENT OF THE
SISTERS OF THE SACRED ADVENT.

S. ANNE'S, TOWNSVILLE,	Quarterly Fees for Boarders	£10 10s.
S. MARY'S, HERBERTON	" " "	£15 15s.

Pupils prepared for Queensland University and Associated Board R.A. Examinations.
Commercial Subjects taught. Open-air sleeping accommodation if required.

In connection with S. Mary's, Herberton, there is a separate House for Boys under nine years of age. Quarterly Fees, £12 10s.

The Carpenterian

FOR THE DIOCESE OF CARPENTARIA, NORTH AUSTRALIA.

Vol. XXIII.—No. 90.]

THURSDAY ISLAND, APRIL 2, 1923.

[PRICE 2/6 A YEAR.
POST FREE.]

PUBLISHED ON THE FIRST DAY OF EACH QUARTER.

NOTICE.

All communications to be addressed to the Editor of The Carpenterian, Bishop's House, Thursday Island, to whom subscriptions may be sent. Subscription, 2/6 per annum, post free.

The address of the Secretary for the Carpenterian Association in England is Miss Theodora Scarth, Bearsted, Kent, England.

NOTICE TO CONTRIBUTORS.

All contributions of Parish News, etc., must reach the Editor before the last day of February, May, August, and November in each year.

Bishop's Letter.

This last Quarter I was glad to be able to stay on Thursday Island, my stays had been very brief before, so that I had had no opportunity of getting to know the Cathedral City. I was also able to relieve the Vicar, who was due for a furlough. Twice during this period I gave Confirmation in the Cathedral to Torres Straits Islanders who had been at sea working when I had visited their Islands, when the Nor'-West was on making it impossible to work at sea they took advantage of my being in Thursday Island to come in to me. In January this year two more Students were admitted to S. Paul's College, Moa. This will make our numbers there up to four for this year; possibly two will be going out next Advent but there are many more men and boys who are looking forward to being allowed to sit for the next examination. There was a legacy left by the late Louisa Bancroft to the Bishop of Carpentaria for use in the Torres Straits paid during the last Quarter. This Legacy of £100 I propose to make the nucleus of a Superannuation and Widows' and Orphans' Fund for our Island Clergy and Teachers. There has been no need of such a fund in the past; but now that more Students are entering the College, and we are beginning to send out Island Missionaries, as Satarika to Cowal Creek—we must make provision for them in old age; also for Widows and Orphans. Satarika, from Mabuiag, has been selected as the first Missionary Teacher to go to Cowal Creek. He will go to live there with his wife and family after Easter. Please to remember him in your prayers. None of the people to whom he is going can read or write, and, of course, know nothing of our Faith.

For over twelve months now the European population living around the Gulf of Carpentaria, and in the North of this part of Queensland, have been without regular ministrations. This is the townships of Normanton, Croydon, Burketown, Georgetown and Forsayth. I was in hopes of getting a Priest who would attach himself to the Community of S. Barnabas in the Diocese of North Queensland, and work in this Diocese in the Northernmost Queensland; but up to the present neither I nor those who are trying to help me have found a Priest ready and willing to do this work. Please do not give up praying for a Priest for this work. I feel sure that it is through our faithlessness in prayer that such an urgent need is not satisfied.

Upon the return of the Vicar, in April, I shall start moving round the Diocese. First to a Conference of Churchwardens from the Torres Straits Island, to be held at S. Paul's, Moa, then after a Confirmation at Badu, I shall go to Cooktown, Mossman, and across, via Cairns, to Croydon and Normanton, from here I shall pay a visit to the Mitchell River. It will then be time for me to get back to Thursday Island to answer some of the letters that even lapse of time will not answer. It is not easy to say when my return to Thursday Island will be, but certainly not before the end of June.

Elsewhere you will find notes on the Intercession Paper. We value your prayers more than all else that you have to give us.

STEPHEN CARPENTARIA.

In March and April some of the chief Priests of the Diocese will be returning from furlough, for the Superintendents of both the Mitchell River, and of the Roper River Missions. The Hon. Diocesan Secretary and Vicar of Thursday Island.

Notes.

At the end of February we had some severe Storms, only such as we expect at this time of the year; but we are always glad to hear of the safety of the Mission boats in the Straits after them. In these storms reports came in of the loss of two ketches. This made us anxious, but our boats weathered through all right. The "Oituli" lost an anchor, and reports that her dinghy is badly damaged. The "Banzai" was only delayed and thrown a week late in her usual running.

Lui, a Lifuan, who originally came in to the Torres Straits as a seaman, passed away in February. Lui was father of the Reverend Joseph Lui. Lui had a peculiar religious experience. When he arrived in the Torres Straits he was a devout Roman Catholic; but he found that the London Missionary Society were the Christian body that was supplying the spiritual needs of the Natives in the Torres Straits. Being a devout Christian, he helped them, and finally became one of their teachers. He was teacher on both Yam and Sainai Islands. But he lived long enough to see the work of the L.M.S. handed over to the Church of England. He had retired by this time; but gave of his best to the work of a new Christian body that had come into his life. Perhaps the day of all days in his life was when he was present at the Ordination of his son in the Cathedral at Thursday Island. We cannot help thinking what a loss it would have been to the Christian cause if Lui had originally held back because his own Church was not on the Torres Straits Mission field. Deep theological difficulties did not trouble him; loyalty to our Lord Jesus was his great aim in life.

DEC 19 1924

THE CATHEDRAL, THURSDAY ISLAND.

St. Paul's Mission, Moa Island Reserve for S.S. Islanders.

REPORT FOR THE YEAR, 1922.

During the year there were seven births,—two males and five females; 5 deaths,—3 adult males and two infant females; and 2 marriages,—one of the parties did not remain on the Reserve. The death-rate is higher than usual, and is accounted for by the demise of three old men.

The health of the people is good. There was one rather bad case of pneumonia, but the patient, though not sent to the hospital, made a good recovery, and is now quite well. One of the boys contracted rheumatic fever outside and is still rather weak. There have been several visitations of bad colds, and a sort of low fever, but nothing of a serious nature. We were fortunate to escape the epidemic of whooping-cough.

Two families have come from Darnley to make their abode at St. Paul's.

The population is increasing rapidly. The school enrolment for the end of the year shows 21 boys and 31 girls, a total of 52, which is an increase of nine over the previous year. The total population now stands at 162,—42 adult males, 29 adult females, 36 boys and 55 girls. This shows an increase of 15 over last year, and is largely accounted for by the arrival of the new families.

From an administration point of view, the year has been a very happy one. We have instituted a new system of government. The people make the law, and the Council administer it. The Superintendent merely acts as adviser and recorder.

During December, bush fires destroyed most of the gardens, but by sheer hard and constant work the fire was kept from the village, and fruit trees at the back of the village. All the people have made new gardens. Our chief difficulty is in preventing them from cutting new bush. A grub gets into the old gardens, making them unfit for the staple crop of yams; the grass is also a great nuisance. Experiments are being made to get rid of the grub.

House-building is occupying a good deal of time. Besides repairs to old houses, seven new ones are under construction.

During the year all boys and young married men, together with many of the older men, were signed on, and were working outside. Several of them were in charge of boats.

Company work on shore has been made law, and is most beneficial in speeding-up work, and fostering esprit de corps among the people. The wonder is that such a diversity of people can live so happily together.

(Signed) J. W. SCHOMBERG,
Superintendent.

Torres Straits Mission.

REPORTS SENT TO THE AUSTRALIAN
BOARD OF MISSIONS IN JANUARY, 1923.

Quiet constructive work has been carried on throughout this year 1922; building up on the foundations so well laid in the past, both in the spiritual life of the people and in the practical constructive work of Church buildings with their appointments. While this work still needs the guidance and occasionally the driving force of a White Staff, it has passed the initial stages of Evangelical Missionary work, and is entering upon the time when the Church should become more and more self-supporting both in spiritual and material matters.

At the College, two students continued their studies through this year under the Rev. J. W.

Schomberg. They will remain in for at least one more year. On every other Sunday these students are responsible for the services in St. Paul's Church, when Rev. J. W. Schomberg is away visiting other island villages; they are also responsible for the regular daily services. At the end of the year 1922 an examination was held for those Islanders who wished to be admitted to the College; five sat for this examination, and on the recommendation of the examiners, I am admitting two more students in 1923. One of the other of the three Islanders who sat for this examination has been told to try again next year (1923).

We are responsible for the conducting of three Day Schools.

At St. Paul's, Moa, Deaconess Hatton is in charge. The number of children on the roll has increased by nine. While this school is progressing favourably, the average attendance of 51 children makes it impossible for the teacher to give all classes proper attention. Under these circumstances I have appointed Mary Bann as assistant teacher. Mary Bann is a native of the Torres Straits Islands, and is quite capable of giving the necessary assistance.

On Dauan Island, the Rev. J. Lui is in charge of the school, where the average attendance is 22 children. I was very pleased with the way in which this school was progressing. As Rev. J. Lui has to attend to the Church services on Saibai Island as well as Dauan, this school loses a day or more every fortnight, the teacher does his best to make this time up by taking school on some of the Saturdays. The discipline both at this school and at Boigu is very good.

At Boigu, the Rev. P. Passi is in charge, and he has an average attendance of 40 children. The Rev. P. Passi does not have to visit any other islands for Church services, but he has occasionally to move across to the other side of Boigu. The people of Boigu make their gardens at the back of the island and at certain seasons of the year live over there taking their families with them.

I visited all these schools this year (1922) when I was going round the Islands, they compare very favourably with those schools that I was invited to visit, and which are carried on by the Queensland Government on the Islands. I did not see all the Queensland Government Schools. In addition to their school work the Deacons, Rev. J. Lui and Rev. P. Passi conduct the daily and Sunday services on their respective islands.

During my tour round these islands there were 93 candidates confirmed. Unfortunately I could not get out to the islands during the Christmas and New Year time when the boys and men who work with the pearling fleet are at home. Some of these boys have been ready and anxious to be confirmed for over two years. From time to time they manage to get in to me in Thursday Island with a letter from the priest in charge of their island, when they receive confirmation in the Cathedral.

The spiritual life of the people is developing well. There are of course disappointing moral lapses; the powers of evil seem to attack first one island and then another, but there always comes true penitence afterwards; for instance, the Chief Protector of Aborigines in his Report for 1921, says, that at Palm Island the Torres Straits men hold their own Church services daily. These are probably the only Christian services held on Palm Island, which is the penal settlement where unruly Aborigines and Torres Straits Islanders are sent. The missionary spirit is very much alive in the islands, as it always has been, for a Mabuig man has come home recently who went to New Guinea 25 years ago for the L.M.S., his short visit helped to keep the fire of enthusiasm burning. In 1923, Satarika is to go with his wife and family to live and work at Cowal Creek, he is a Mabuig man and will be kept at Cowal Creek by the Diocese. There are no Christians at this place at present.

The Islanders pay up their assessments regularly. These assessments nearly pay for the maintenance of the Native Deacons. In addition to these payments, the Islanders are building their own Churches and Sunday Schools. During 1922 a new roof has been put on the Church at St. Paul's Moa, much building has been done on the Church at Darnley; the roof of the Church on Yorke Island has had extensive repairs done to it; a new Mission house has been built on Cocoonut Island; the material has been made all ready for building a new Sunday School at Mabuig. Saibai has also prepared some material for their new Church, and Murray Island is beginning to collect money for their new Church. There has also been a change at Poid, which will probably mean a large expenditure this year, 1923. Poid is the village on Moa Island that used to be called Adam. It was to this village that the Islanders who used to live on Hammond Island were moved at the beginning of the year. This move has proved, as it was expected to do, of great advantage to the Islanders themselves, who have now settled in comfortably into their new homes; but it has taxed the accommodation in the Church at Poid. There is really not room enough for all the people when the boats are in. The unfortunate part is, that the Church is built of concrete, and is very substantial. It does not lend itself to enlargement so that it may be necessary to build an entirely new building. But all these facts of what the Islanders are doing now, and what they expect to do in the near future, go to show that in time the Church will be self-supporting on these Islands, but permanent good buildings are needed before the Islanders can give more to current expenses by way of salaries.

At one time in the year it was thought that the "Herald" would have to be laid up. It was a great relief when A.B.M. managed to send funds to save this from happening, for it would have been a great blow to the Mission. The Rev. J. J. E. Done is travelling continually in the "Herald" in order to visit once a month the Islands that he is responsible for. In 1923 the Rev. W. H. MacFarlane will relieve the Rev. J. Done of some of his islands so that he (J. J. Done) may attend to the Church buildings that are being erected on other Islands that he visits. Experience shows that it is necessary for a white person to be about when large Churches to hold as many as 500 people are being built of coral lime. The Murray Island Church is falling because the foundations on one side were not properly laid. This Church has been buttressed up, but this has not stopped fresh cracks appearing. No white man was able to be present to supervise this building when it was being erected.

January, 1923.

Mitchell River Mission.

The Report of 1921 spoke enthusiastically of the heights in the spiritual life to which the Aborigines on the Mission had achieved. Now, unfortunately, where you have mountain heights, you have also valleys, the more rugged and beautiful the mountain peaks by so much the more gloomy and dark are the valleys. This year, 1922, we have been down in the valleys of gloom and sorrow. Towards the middle of the year, a wave of immorality swept through the Mission. These waves come at intervals less frequent where there are children of the second generation of Christian parents; but they do come even on such places as the Torres Straits Islands, and are generally due to one or two ring-leaders. It was thought at the Mitchell that when the ring-leaders had gone away, peace, happiness, and purity would be restored; but this was not altogether the case. Some of the most promising Catechumens failed. This was a tremendous disappointment to members of the staff. The last reports that came in before the wet season shut off communications, while hopeful of better days show that the evil is not altogether driven out.

I visited the Mission in May, when we had some very happy services. Ten candidates were presented for Confirmation. On one day the whole village joined in the procession round the crops. These were Blessed; the Litany was sung in Procession as we marched round; at the various stations prayers were said. The crops this year have been very good and are responsible for a large saving in the cost of food for the villagers.

J. Chapman with some Christian boys from the Mission managed to pay one visit to the tribes to the North of the Mission, who live on the area that has recently been declared an Aboriginal Reserve by the Queensland Government. The Queensland Government has now made an Aboriginal Reserve all along the Western side of the Cape York Peninsular. It extends from the Northern boundary of the Mapoon Mission to the Southern boundary of our Mitchell Mission. J. Chapman reports that he found the natives on our part of this reserve could understand the dialect that he speaks, and that their camps are of a semi-permanent nature. The natives themselves are of a very fine type, free from disease; food is plentiful, and there is abundance of water at shallow depths. He goes on to say that he believes that these natives could be persuaded to make their camping places into permanent villages if shown how to build houses. He is very anxious to go himself and live here, just making a garden for his own needs. The whole of this country is intersected with water ways, so a good whale boat would be almost a necessity if one is to get about amongst the people, the back country being desert the native lives on the sea front. I visited the Children's Home at Belburra, which is two miles from the Head Station, here Miss Smith and Mrs. Treloggen, with the assistance of Jack Geibo, look after the children and conduct the school. They have their own Chapel in the school buildings, where they have their daily services, only coming to the village Church for the Sunday services. At present boys and girls are all housed under one roof; but it is hoped that in time separate houses will be built. A very good garden has already been made round the school, in which much of the food needed by the children is grown. This part of the work seemed to me to be by far the most hopeful. It was certainly a very good day for the children, when it was decided to remove them from the village.

During the year the staff has been considerably reduced. J. A. Murphy, who was looking after the cattle, was paid off at the end of March. No cattle had been sold, and there was little prospect of our getting a sale, and the cattle fund was in debt, so we could not see our way to keep him on. During the time that he has looked after the herd it has increased greatly. The brandings have been exceptionally large. We were sorry to have to part with his services, but retrenchment had to begin. The Mission boys will now have to look after the herd; but without a white man to supervise it is feared that we shall not be served so well. We also dispensed with the services of Edwin Tonkin, who had been on the Mission staff for a little over a year. His place will not be filled until such time as the debt on the Mission has disappeared.

Tom Solomon passed to his rest in June. He had been getting very feeble latterly; but did splendid work for the Mission in the early days. He had won a great love in the hearts of the natives outside the Mission, so that at his funeral the Church was filled with natives from the camps up and down the river.

Rev. H. Matthews, his wife and family, went on furlough in September, and had hoped to return for the wet season; but man-made arrangements are upset sometimes. We were very sorry to hear that two of their children had to go into hospital in the South. Under these circumstances, I asked Rev. H. Matthews to stay in the South until after the wet, although he himself was anxious to return leaving his family behind.

The balance-sheet shows that there has been a large saving in money this year. This is due to the crops being so good, especially those on the large area that Mr. Chapman and the boys laid out for irrigation, and then there have been plenty of cattle to kill. There will have to be another year of severe retrenchment before the debts on this Mission are paid off. This means another year must pass before any fresh work of a permanent nature can be undertaken among the tribes to the North. It is hoped that a few visits will be paid to these tribes during the year.

I have great hopes for the future of the Mission now that the people in the village know that they can provide much of their own food for themselves, and have grown pea-nuts which have been sold for them. In the spiritual life the trials of the year 1922 have been so severe that those who have stood the test will be the leaven that one can rely upon in the future. Our journey through the valleys may not be a weakening, but a strengthening, of all that matters in the Mission field, but it is very depressing whilst in the valleys.

Since this report was written, news has arrived of the death of Jack Geibo.

The Northern Territory.

(Communicated.)

Mr. Urquhart, Administrator of the Northern Territory—524,000 square miles inhabited by less than 4000 whites all told—draws a sad picture of that part of the Commonwealth. There is no work except wharf labour and that is all unloading, there being practically no exports; one twelfth of the population lives on Government rations and most of the remainder excluding those who are Government servants, on handling the imports, including the Government rations. It is a melancholy tale, all the more so that there seems to be no likelihood of any improvements, and that it quite plainly denotes the utter failure of the Commonwealth to deal with the problem of its far northern possessions in Australia itself.

This failure concerns the Church in more ways than one. In the first place there is the question of our moral right to keep cultivable land permanently unoccupied, secondly the whole question of coloured labour is involved and thirdly the reputation and good name of Australia is concerned.

As regards the first question. Have we a moral right, and if we have the right have we the power, to keep great areas of land that might support a large population, empty and unused and with no prospect of use by ourselves? There are such lands adjacent to the Victoria, Daly, and Adelaide, and possibly, though less certainly, the Roper and Macarthur Rivers; there is besides a very large area of mineral country which will not pay under present conditions of labour; and there is also a large area of country suitable for cattle, and more that might be made available by conservation of water and other improvements. Have we the right to keep this land empty on the chance that possibly, though very doubtfully, in 100 years the rest of Australia with its huge unoccupied areas will be so filled that Australians will be driven to settle in the far north? It is very doubtful whether we have any such right and it is still more doubtful whether we have the power. We have it to-day solely on account of the British fleet. That fleet has been of late greatly reduced in power and, apart from the question of its power, will England be always willing to fight to preserve Australian ideals?

Probably she will if the Australian claims seem to her just, but if they do not? We must remember that to-day the public opinion of Europe is becoming a power that it never was before. Have we a case that we can confidently and successfully argue at a meeting of the League of Nations? If not will England go to war for a case we cannot prove before the conscience of Europe?

Secondly, if the grounds of our dog-in-the-manger policy with regard to the Northern Territory is to be solely our advocacy of the White Australia policy, we must be careful of the grounds on which we advocate it. The days are gone, except for purblind fools, when we can contemptuously speak of all persons whose colour differs from our own as "damned niggers." Such contempt is so obviously without a real foundation in fact as to simply pillory the folly of the speaker. Even with regard to the less advanced races there is a new toleration, a new sense of justice, and what is more a new sense of capacities and possibilities in the world. Not to acknowledge it is to show ourselves to be among the back numbers of the earth.

The White Australia policy can be justified but only if it is combined with the most scrupulously just attitude with regard to the colour question combined with such wise and efficient administration of those territories which seem to invite coloured settlement as to justify at least our claim for suspension of adverse judgment.

The present condition of things in the Northern Territory and this is the third point, is calculated to bring Australia into contempt. Other nations say that we have conclusively shown that we are incapable of doing anything with the country and that we ought to give place to those who can.

There are only two consistent policies for the Territory. One is to spend enormous sums of money in order to induce white men to live there. Some attempts have been made in this direction, with the result that the unemployed whites do not want to leave the Territory so long as they can live on Government doles, but apart from other objections the cost of doing it on a large enough scale to be effective would be altogether prohibitive. The other is the drawing of a colour line, and the encouragement not of indentured labour but of free native settlement by coloured immigrants in that part of Australia which the white man cannot work. This is already in operation in the Torres Straits Islands, which are actually part of Australia, in Papua, and in the mandated territory. The argument is generally used that the coloured population would drift south of the Line; such drift could easily be prevented by law and the difference of colour would at once show that the trespasser was out of his own country. The real difficulty would be that white wasters would tend to drift north in order to live on and exploit the coloured man. Australia would have to give the northern State full power to exclude all undesirable trespassers. That would be the real difficulty, not the other. Had there been any reasonable chance of settling the north with white Australians it would be the best policy but as the attempt has failed we have to ask ourselves whether it is best to risk losing the north and having it taken by some power which will use coloured labour without scruple or restriction or to settle it ourselves and rule it so wisely and well that there will be at least no reasonable excuse for other nations to interfere. Meanwhile we drift, which is the most foolish and fatal of all policies.

Is there no statesman who can set before us such a really great and wise scheme of settlement that it may at least bring careful consideration, and argument that is not mere prejudice? After all it is a question of right and wrong and no one can say that the present solution or lack of solution is right.

The Carpenterian

FOR THE DIOCESE OF CARPENTARIA,
NORTH AUSTRALIA.

Vol. XXIII., No. 90. Thursday Island, April 2, 1923

The Christian Healing Mission.

This Mission has not been asked to visit Carpentaria, since the difficulties of travel are too great and the time required too long, while the numbers that could be ministered to are extremely small. But we wish the faithful to remember that we are in full sympathy with it, and desire them to receive the benefits of it.

Gifts of healing have always existed and been used in the Church, but not to anything like the extent they should be; the power of healing sick persons of many kinds of diseases by the laying on of hands is part of the endowment of the Church. There are always some who possess this power, who should be sought for and used; they are more likely to be found among the laity than among the clergy, because the former are more numerous.

Mr. J. M. Hickson, a lay member of the Church, discovered at the age of fourteen that he possessed this power in a marked degree, and has used it in every country of the world with conspicuous success. The present writer no longer "believes in miracles," for faith is lost in sight; he has seen many sick persons who had employed the best medical skill for years without apparent benefit, miraculously healed, sometimes in a moment, oftener more slowly. The authenticated cases in Victoria and Tasmania (the only Australian States yet visited by the Mission) are numbered by hundreds, and one of the best proofs of the power of the movement is in the squeals of spite which the powers of evil mingle with the triumph songs of the Church. There is a strange feeling of elation and gladness when one sees one's faith evidently proved true, and of pity for those who have not believed.

Other methods than the laying on of hands are employed in spiritual healing—the unction mentioned by S. James, and Intercession at the Eucharist. Always the object is to heal the sufferer's body, soul, and spirit, making him healthy and sound in everyway—a whole man.

When anyone falls sick the following procedure should be followed: A doctor should be employed and all available means of cure or relief should be tried under his direction. The sick person should send for the Priest, who must examine him concerning his repentance and faith, for a person who is unforgiven or troubled in mind or conscience cannot be wholly well. Then the sufferer must cease from worry, as he can if he believes in the healing Christ, and rest in the Lord, for the matter is in God's hands. The friends of the sick man should pray for him. They should meet in Church for the purpose, and should attend at the Eucharist for the purpose; they should bring the patient to the Church (or visit his house) and place their hands on his head with spoken prayer, but they must first make sure that they themselves are in a state of repentance and faith, in order that their intercessions may avail. The patient should receive absolution, communion, and unction.

The Healing Mission has exposed, to the discomfort of worldlings, an amount of needless suffering many times greater than is commonly thought to exist, which is plainly not in accordance with the Will of God, and against which medical science is powerless. We shall be unfaithful if we neglect to use the spiritual powers that are ours for its removal.

— F. W. S.

Folk Stories of the Torres Straits

TALES OF THE MIRIAM.*

Near Flinders entrance, up at the head of the Great Barrier, Murray Island rises up some 700 feet out of the turbulent waters that surge and swell round. Gazing upon the mass of rock which forms the head of the "dugong," as the natives term the island, or looking down at the gardens in the crater beneath, one wonders just how long back it is since the molten lava came tumbling down the sides of the one-time flaming beacon. Just across to the south-west, looking as though one might swim across to them, lie Dauar and Waier, connected at low water by a strip of sand. Formerly Dauar carried a good population, but now all the Dauar people live on Murray, only going across to make their gardens or to catch turtle. All three islands are much in legend and folk-lore. It was on Murray that the two survivors of the "Charles Eaton," wrecked in 1834, were discovered; but they had many European visitors before that, and, like other islands of the Torres Straits, traditions of wrecked ships and the fate of their crews, reveal glimpses of the days when bold Dutch and Spanish and Portuguese voyagers came sailing by from the mysterious regions beyond where dwelt the "lamar," the "white spirits." And it was not far distant from Murray, either, where the sportive hands of fate, after luring a fishing lugger into the inviting shelter of a lagoon in a coral atoll, and causing it to be held high and dry, recompensed the seekers of marine fortune by yielding up unexpected treasure of Spanish coin running into a couple of thousand pounds. Possibly the reef studded waters over which one gazes from the heights of "Mer" (to give it its native appellation) could yield up the secrets of the missing ships of Mendana, and those other seekers of new lands if they chose. Just last year a couple of old copper ingots, with a mingling of silver and gold, were discovered a little way out. And occasionally the diving boats come in with tales of some old ship's skeleton lying on the ocean's bottom, encrusted with coral and half-buried in sand.

*The native name for Murray Island is "Mer;" the Islanders are the Miriam people.

A mysterious cult of the Murray Island people was the "Bomai Malu," with its elaborate and strange ceremonies. Probably no one knows more of the Torres Straits people and their customs than Mr. John Bruce, the Government official at Murray, who has been on the island for over 30 years, but even he does not know exactly what to make of the Malu cult. It was the central factor in the social and religious life of the people; but its origin is shrouded in mystery though there are many things suggestive of a debased form of Christian ceremonial of ages past.

The old men love to talk of these now departed mysteries; they love to relate, too, their old-time legends—fairy-stories just such as we ourselves pass on to our children. But you must act with caution, the slightest suggestion of unbelief or sarcasm, and good-bye to your chance of getting the story. Nor do you get them all from one individual. To certain of the old people belong particular groups of stories, and the privilege of relating these is respected all through.

You would like to hear the story of the old man and the boy who fooled him? Listen then, to old Passi, the "mamoose."

THE STORY OF NAGEG AND GAGEE.

Long ago, there dwelt on the island of Dauar, an old man named Iruamores. At Waier, in the pretty little bay where the pelicans swim round and great blocks of flat stone lie piled up one on top of the other like huge boxes of children's blocks, lived a woman named Nageg. She had a son, Gagee (or Geigi), and when he was six or seven years old his mother made a little bow and arrow for him, with which he used to shoot fish. Bye and bye, she made him a spear, and all day long he would go out on the reef spearing fish which he would bring home for his mother to cook. One day going further round than usual, he came opposite to where old Iruamores lived at Dauar. "Ah," thought he, "I'll go and fool that fat old fellow." So climbing up a cocoa-nut tree, he secured some of the young sprouting leaves and made them into a garland and anklets for his head and legs. Then, diving into the sea, he transformed himself into a big king-fish and swam across to Dauar. There he saw a big shoal of sardines, and leaping in amidst the floating black mass he made them scatter and break in all directions. "Ah," said old Iruamores as he saw the fish darting hither and thither, "a big king-fish is chasing those 'tup' (sardines) on to the beach," so getting his "weres" (a big funnel-shaped basket of split bamboo for catching sardines) he scooped some up. Gagee was elated with his joke; swimming back to Dauar, he resumed his human form once more and went home. But he did not tell his mother what trick he had played on old Iruamores. Next day he thought he would have some more fun again, and once more disguising himself in the form of a fish, swam across and sported amongst the sardines. Again the old man came along with his

"weres," but as he was scooping up the sardines he saw the soles of Gagee's feet showing. "Ah, ah, my boy! So it is you who are fooling me—you are not a fish at all. I can see your feet and legs. Alright, you wait. Next time you come I'll catch you!" And, going back to his grass house, he set to work to make an especially large weres. Gagee swam back telling his mother that he had been spearing fish, but carefully remaining from letting her know of his other escape. When morning dawned he went across to Dauar again, for it was fine fun to fool old Iruamores like that and frighten away the sardines. Ah! here was the old fellow coming again now! And so he darted hither and thither as the great king-fish do when raiding a shoal of sardines. But what was this? The old man had scooped him up in his big "weres" along with the sardines, and now he was pouring them all into an old canoe. In vain he struggled to get away—he was caught. Meanwhile, Iruamores called out to an old woman to bring wood and a big shell (the old fashioned saucepan of the islanders). Then he began to cook, first he boiled the sardines, then cut up Gagee into three portions and cooked him, placing each shell full on a banana leaf as a plate. Having finished he began to eat, pile after pile of fish going into his capacious stomach, until there was nothing left. But Iruamores was not satisfied, and smashing up the weres he ate it. The firewood, ashes, and three stones supporting the shell saucepan all followed, until at length he was so full that he could not walk about, and lay down on the beach to sleep.

Over at Waier, old Nageg, the mother, waited in vain for the return of her son as she sat making her leaf mats. And when morning came and he did not appear, she started to seek him, calling out plaintively as she walked, "Gagee, my son, Gagee, my son." And when she came opposite to Dauar she remembered the disagreeable old man who lived there. Perhaps he had harmed her boy. Going on to the sand-spit she saw Gagee's fish spear, and recognised his foot-prints, and further on some of the pieces of coconut leaf that he had used. It was low tide, and so she started to cross over to Dauar, still calling as she went for her son to come. Presently she came to where old Iruamores was lying down, and told him what she sought. "Have you seen my son," she asked. "Yes," grunted the old man, "I saw him; he is playing with those boys further round." And so, going on, he questioned the boys. But her Gagee was not with them, and they had not seen anything of him. Returning along the beach once more she saw the place where he had been cut up, and found some of his hair. So the old man was lying and he had killed her boy after all. Going up to Iruamores, with one mighty heave she thrust a sharp stick she carried right through his body, then she hit him on the head with a big stone, and taking her stone knife she ripped up his body and found the bones of Gagee. Carefully she took them all out, and arranged them in order on the ground, until the skeleton of her boy lay before her. Then going into the bush she got some green ants in their house, and placed them on the bones at feet and head and hands. As the ants ran along the limbs the skeleton came to life, and Gagee stood up. Together Nageg and Gagee returned to Waier. At the point where the waters are deep Nageg told her son, "Now you go away for ever and live in the deep water, and if any man tries to catch you with hook and line, you break the line or smash the spear." "Very well, mother, I go," said Gagee, "but I think very good you go and live in holes beneath the stones in the reef, and then if any one tries to catch you, you cut his hands with the sharp sawbones on your body, or if they try to haul you out from your place in the rocks, you straighten that long point on your head so that it will hold you fast." And so they parted, Nageg to dwell amidst the stones of the reef, and Gagee to live in the deep waters. And as you go to Dauar and Waier to-day, you will see a great flat stone, half round, on the latter island under a big native almond tree. That is Iruamores. Across at Waier is another stone—Nageg making her mat. And in a little bay you come upon an opening in the rocky cliff; a guide leads you through in a pitchy darkness, over smooth water-worn stones, now crouching, now sideways, until on the other side (it is some fifty yards or so) you come out into a crescent shaped bay with coconut palms and pandanus trees, with the ridge of the island standing against the skyline like battlemented towers. It is really a great fissure which completely cuts the island in two. At its entrance, swimming in and out amongst the rocks, you see the Nageg, a brilliantly coloured little fish with sharp spines on head and tail, which make it very difficult to pull it out of its home amongst the crevices. Coming across in the cutter, one of the crew throws out a thick tow-line, with a great 8 inch hook at the end attached to strong wire. "That one for Gagee" (the kingfish name) he explains, "you must make the wire strong or bite that line and break him." And thus do these children of the sea account for the peculiar characteristics of two of the many varieties of fish which frequent their bright-hued waters.

MEIDU THE SLEEPING WOMAN.

Another of the Dauar folk-tales is that of Meidu, the sleeping woman. In a small cove on the Eastern side of the island, where the sand is rather different from that elsewhere, is a big stone near high water mark. This is Meidu, a woman who once lived at the spot. One day she and a number of girls were swimming and sporting in the water. Presently the girls got tired, and after coming up out of the water and playing round on the beach for a while, they went to their house, leaving Meidu lying sunning herself close to the water's edge; by and by she dozed off to sleep, the tide began to rise, but Meidu was in slumberland. As the lapping waves gently touched her legs, unconsciously she drew them up, but did not awaken. Soon the water reached her thighs, but still Meidu slept on. Presently she was floating in the water, and as the tide passed out, it carried her right on to the ocean's deep bosom, but still she slept, until just at eventide she opened her eyes. In the distance were Murray and Dauar; and as Meidu perceived them she lifted up her voice in plaintive song. But soon she slept again, and the restless waters bore her on and on, past many islands, and over many reefs, until finally she came to rest on the smooth sand on the south-west coast of New Guinea, near the Fly River. Awakening for a little while, she repeated her song, then once more went off into sleep. Just about this time, a couple of boys from Mabudauan village, Ginomai and Manukak, were sauntering along the beach having some sport with bows and arrows, seeing which could shoot the farthest. Their mother, Nupa, remained at the house. Presently Ginomai's arrow found a mark in the sand close to where Meidu slumbered, and as he came up to recover it, he exclaimed in astonishment, "Hullo! where did this woman come from?" Hastening up to the spot, his brother, Manukak, made a rapid decision as he gazed upon the sleeper. "Ah, that is my woman," said he; "I take her home." But an unseen listener was watching close by—an old man from Boigu, named Bazee, a noted pigeon killer. On hearing what Manukak had said, he stole up rapidly to the house of Nupa, the old mother. "Who are you?" asked Nupa, as he appeared at the doorway. Speaking in Boigu language, he suddenly sprang upon Nupa and killed her; then, preparing an earth-oven with heated stones, he cooked her "kop-maori" fashion, eating the flesh and throwing away the bones. Bye and bye the two boys arrived with Meidu, but there was no mother to greet them and welcome the new daughter-in-law. As they sought her, they discovered the bones. Looking round, they got some green ants, and after assembling the bones of their mother, they placed the ants on them three times, then the bones rose up, and the voice of Nupa spoke, "Bazee has been here and killed me," said she, "he has gone along to Boigu." Filled with desire to avenge their mother's death, they left Meidu at the house and hastened in the direction Bazee had taken. Ah! there he was dancing along the road! Quickly and quietly they stole up, then whiz! a fleet, sharp-tipped arrow left the bow, and Bazee sank down. Disembowelling the fallen cannibal, they cut off his head, and returned to the house where Meidu awaited them. And now, at that same place, you will see everywhere "Meidu," the nipa palm (something like the pandanus), of which the sleeping woman of Dauar is the progenitor. And when the flooded waters of the great Fly River uproots patches of the nipa trees and sends them floating out into the sea, bye and bye they come down to be cast up upon the beaches of Murray and Dauar islands during the Nor'-West monsoon, the people look knowingly at each other and say, "Ah! Meidu has come back again to look at her old home."

THE BLOOD OF KIAR.

Great splotches of colour, deep red, stain the rock at one side of Dauar. Instinctively you touch it with your finger; but, as old Passi tells you "you can't rub it off," for it is the blood of Kiar, the man who cut his foot badly one day on a heap of shells. Some men carried him in from the reef to the shore, but the spurting blood marked the rocky cliff close by, to be seen by all who pass by until this very day. "I think we drink some green coconut water now," says Passi, and soon a brown skinned lad, with lava-

GLENNIE MEMORIAL SCHOOL, TOOWOOMBA

Principal: MISS LAWRENCE.

Church of England School for Girls, Toowoomba. Under control of the Brisbane Diocesan Council.

Patron: His Grace the Archbishop of Brisbane.

THE GLENNIE MEMORIAL SCHOOL gives Education up to Senior and Matriculation standard. Specialities: Music, Singing and Art.
 THE PREPARATORY SCHOOL receives pupils up to 13 years of age, and prepares candidates for the State Scholarship Examination.

Reduction for Sisters.

Fees for both Schools on application.

lava tucked round the loins and between his legs is walking rapidly up a 50 foot palm, almost as naturally as his white fellow human moves along the street. A deft slash of the knife, then a twirl of the knife's point to clear an opening in the nut, precedes a graceful invitation to allay your thirst. You murmur a polite "Esoao" (thank you) as you return the empty container of one of nature's most wonderful gifts. In the shelter of a nearby rock, overhanging until it almost threatens to come crashing down upon those beneath, a little group "make-fire" with a couple of sticks and a piece of cocconut-palm cloth, and Passi's "Esoao" is perhaps even more hearty than was your own, as he takes from your fingers the proffered gift of tobacco. "Long time now we smoke tobacco," he says, "these islands got him first before any white man he come, we smoke him along "Zoob" (a big ornamental bamboo pipe with the smaller holder attached). "But that tobacco he no like this one; that one he grow before he hot, and when you smoke him he make you drunk." And then with thoughts far away and eyes fixed half dreamily on the rugged sheer rock with its curious clefts and fissures which distinguishes Waier, now tinged a rich purple with the setting sun, he begins afresh some reminiscence of other days.

THE STORY OF ABOB AND KOS.

Long, long ago, there lived at Murray Island two brothers who had no father. Although of super-natural origin they used to fish and follow the ordinary occupation of the islanders, and one day, after getting some small sardines (which are called "Tup" and are caught with a funnel shape scoop made of split bamboos and cocconut leaf ribs), Abob told his younger brother to bring some wood and also some pandanus leaves with which to wrap up the fish before roasting them over the coals. But Kos felt disinclined, and so Abob after a while went off himself. Cutting a supply of leaves, he left them in a convenient spot and went on for a walk along the villages. Presently he noticed a small canoe, and putting it into the water, went paddling off to Dauar. Meanwhile, Kos was awaiting his brother's return; becoming tired he set off to find him, following the tracks along the sand. Soon he discovered the cut pandanus leaves, then going on further came to the spot where Abob had launched the canoe. Looking across the strait his eye alighted upon the missing one paddling gently along. But how could he reach him? "Ah he would fly," and so causing wings to appear, he flew after Abob and came to rest on the canoe. After a moment of sudden surprise Abob recognised him. At first he did not want the other to accompany him, but presently they agreed to go on together, and landing on Dauar, hauled up the canoe, but it was old and broke in two pieces. Part of it is that curious looking stone which you may see now upon the beach at that spot. The two brothers began to walk round the island, but feeling hungry, they decided that a meal of sardines would relieve the feeling of emptiness; there were no "weres" (scoops) however, and they had not brought spears, but they hit upon a splendid idea; why not heap up the stones and make enclosures, so that when the tide went out the fish would be left high and dry? Waier, the neighbouring small island, claimed their attention now, and transforming themselves into fish, they swam across. On the hill-top they saw a number of men. Resuming their ordinary form they began a fight with the Waier men, until by and by all were killed, and then determining that the island should be rendered uninhabitable they began to smash great fissures in the hill until it looked as though some mighty swordsman had been at work. Satisfied, they once again assumed the form of fish and swam to Murray, where they built more fish traps; then, seeing the cap of Darnley right away to the Nor'-west, they decided to venture there. Here again they built fish-traps, and also changed the language of the people somewhat, and going on to Stephen Island did the same thing there, changing their own names in addition. At Darnley, there is still the big stone, with a circular hole right through, to which they made fast their canoe; and the great lumps of irregularly formed rock poised along the cliff side a little way back are Abob and Kos themselves, looking across to Stephen before they determine to go on. From Stephen Island they went up New Guinea way, and then they pass into oblivion.

The story as the people relate it is much longer than is set down here, and many other incidents are intermingled with it. But it will be noticed that it is Abob and Kos, culture heroes and more or less mythical personages, to whom is attributed the origin of the interesting, curiously formed fish weirs that encircle the islands mentioned. Some are semi-circular, others are rectangular, others again so shaped that looking down upon them at low tide from the hill-top, they almost appear as though some hand had attempted to fashion them into a running device of figures. They are mostly constructed of the lava which once flowed down the hill-side, but all the information that the Islander has to advance regarding their existence is "Spirit made him." By some visitors, the theory has been offered that they are the remains of Spanish-Peruvian occupation in centuries past. And the change of language, attributed to Abob and Kos, may point to the advent of visitors from without. There are still dialectic differences between the people of Murray, Darnley, and Stephen Islands, although substantially the language is the same. From time to time attempts have been made to fasten Spanish-Peruvian ancestry to many of the native words, but although there are indications of such, it is obviously impossible to link it up with any certainty. But listening to the old time legends with their quaint clothing of fancy concealing a certain amount of fact, and remembering that these waters, with the great Southern continent whose shores they lap, were the mysterious goal of many a daring voyager of the past, one conjures up pictures of those by-gone days when perhaps the Islands held a people of higher civilisation, and when, too, adventurers from the regions beyond brought with them new customs, new speech, new arts, new fruits of the earth with which to enrich the groups.

—W.H.M.

Notes on Intercession Paper.

On the Islands new Church buildings are being erected. At Saibai a Church to hold 500-600 people is being built of lime cement. A new roof is to be put on the Church at Mabuiag. This building holds 500 people; fibrolite tiles are being used for roofing. The Church at Darnley is being enlarged; coral lime is being used here. At Murray, and S. Paul's, Moa, new Churches will have to be built. All this building is to be done by the natives themselves; the white Priests will supervise when they can.

The C.M.S. are developing their Mission Station on Groote Eylandt and may have a settlement here for Euralians.

Christian boys from the Islands are working under non-Christian Japanese captains. The captains in some cases press the boys to do un-Christian acts, also to work on Sundays. The boys signed on now work up to Christmas, when they are signed off.

A.B.M. has had to reduce our grants for Mission work this year. In the Torres Straits we are trying to carry on with the same staff, but at the Mitchell River the staff has had to be reduced.

SUBSCRIPTIONS TO "THE CARPENTARIAN."—F. Byrnes 10/-, Mrs. McLeod 2/-, T. Toulasik 2/6, H. G. Simpson 2/6, Mrs. Ashley 2/6, Mrs. Sherrin 5/-

Statement of Receipts and Expenditure for the Year ended 30th December, 1922.

Statement of Assets and Liabilities at 30th December, 1922.

6/1/23. Examined and found correct,
E. J. HENNESSEY, Auditor.

Statement of Receipts and Expenditure of Special Trusts for Year ended 30th December, 1922.

[illegible]

1923.

Diocese of Carpentaria.

Bishop:

RT. REV. STEPHEN HARRIS DAVIES.
Thursday Island, Queensland.

Administrator:

REV. F. W. SLADE, B.A.

Sub-Dean:

REV. F. W. SLADE, B.A.

Diocesan Secretary:

REV. F. W. SLADE, B.A., Thursday Island.

Commissaries:

REV. J. JONES, M.A., All Saints', S. Kilda, Melbourne.
REV. C. R. MIERLEES, Springhill, Maesmore, Gloucester,
England.
REV. W. J. B. SCOTT, 16 Little Grosvenor Street, London,
W. 1.
REV. CECIL EDWARDS, Holy Trinity Rectory, Woolloom-gatta.

Rectors:

REV. B. S. COLE, Cooktown.
REV. I. LL. SKELTON, Darwin.
REV. F. W. SLADE, B.A., Thursday Island.
REV. E. TAFFS, Mossman.

Honorary Lay Readers:

MR. H. F. L. FINNISS, Darwin
HIS HONOUR JUDGE ROBERTS, Darwin.

Diocesan Council:

REV. F. W. SLADE, B.A.	MR. GEO. OLARK.
REV. J. J. E. DONE.	MR. A. SULLIVAN.
REV. W. H. MACFARLANE,	DR. VERNON.
Th.L.

Honorary Legal Adviser:

HIS HONOUR JUDGE MACNAUGHTON.

Aboriginal Mission, Mitchell River:

MR. J. W. CHAPMAN.	MRS. MATTHEWS.
REV. H. MATTHEWS, J.P.	MISS F. SMITH.
(Supt.)	MRS. TRELLOGEN.
J. Geibo, J. Savo.

Roper River Mission:

MR. DYER.	MR. H. L. PERRIMAN.
REV. R. D. JOYNT.	MR. E. C. H. LOUSADA.
REV. H. E. D. WARREN	MISS CROSS.
(Supt.)	MRS. DYER.
	MISS A. FARRANT.

Torres Straits Mission:

REV. J. J. E. DONE.	REV. J. W. SCHOMBERG.
REV. W. H. MACFARLANE,	*REV. JOSEPH LUI.
[Th.L.]	*REV. POEY PASSI.
DEACONESSES HATTON, MOR.

* Native Deacons.

The Diocese.

The See was founded in 1900, and consists of such part of Queensland as is bounded by the sea on the north and east, by the Northern Territory on the west, and by a line drawn from lat. S. 19deg. 30min. on the western boundary of Queensland due east to par. 144deg. E. and thence N. to lat. S. 16deg. 40min. and thence east to the sea, together with the whole of the Northern Territory, comprising an area of not less than 620,000 square miles. The population, which is very widely scattered over this immense area, consists of about 10,000 whites, 5,000 Japanese, Chinese, and other aliens, and 35,000 aborigines. The white population is mainly mining and pastoral. The See town is Thursday Island, a pearling centre north of Cape York.

Finance.

The Diocese has no endowments beyond the Bishop's income of £395 per annum. Every parish needs a grant from central funds which come from subscriptions to the Diocese, and grants from English Societies.

Missions.

Missions are carried on amongst the Japanese at Thursday Island; the South Sea Islanders; the aborigines on the Mitchell and Roper Rivers; and among the Islanders of the Torres Straits.

Special Offertories.

On Easter Day the offertories are given to the Clergyman of the Parish, and on Good Friday to the Australian Board of Missions.

The "Church Standard."

Posted to any Address for 6s. 6d. per Annum.

The CHURCH STANDARD holds the unique position of being the only independent weekly paper published in the interests of the Church of England in Australasia.

Published every Friday Morning.

Appeals to all Members of the Church of England, Members of the C.E.M.S., Churchwardens, Sidesmen and Parochial Councillors, Sunday School Teachers, Lay Readers, Catechists, and Clergy.

Specimen Copies on application to

THE CHURCH PUBLISHING CO. LTD.,

ROYAL INSURANCE BUILDINGS, 16 SPRING STREET, SYDNEY.

St. Margaret's, Brisbane.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND HIGH SCHOOL FOR GIRLS

Under the management of the Sisters of the Society of the Sacred Advent

Pupils prepared for examinations of the University of Queensland, Public Service and Associated Board R.A.

There are two Boarding Houses beautifully situated in extensive grounds overlooking the Brisbane River

BOARDERS RECEIVED FROM THE AGE OF EIGHT

FOR PROSPECTUS APPLY SISTER-IN-CHARGE

St. Catharine's, Stanthorpe.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND HIGH SCHOOL FOR GIRLS

Under the management of the Sisters of the Society of the Sacred Advent

Pupils prepared for examinations of the University of Queensland, and Associated Board R.A.

Additional House secured

Increased Accommodation for Boarders

FOR PROSPECTUS APPLY SISTER-IN-CHARGE

Church of England Girls' Schools

UNDER THE MANAGEMENT OF THE
SISTERS OF THE SACRED ADVENT.

S. ANNE'S, TOWNSVILLE, Quarterly Fees for Boarders £10 10s.

S. MARY'S, HERBERTON " " " £15 15s.

Pupils prepared for Queensland University and Associated Board R.A. Examinations
Commercial Subjects taught. Open-air sleeping accommodation if required.

In connection with S. Mary's, Herberton, there is a separate House for Boys under nine years of age. Quarterly Fees, £12 10s.

THE CARPENTARIAN

For the Diocese of Carpentaria,
North Australia

XXIII., No. 91

THURSDAY ISLAND, JULY 2, 1923.

Price 2/6 a Year

Published on the first day of each quarter

Post Free

NOTICE.

All communications to be addressed to the Editor of The Carpentarian, Bishop's House, Thursday Island, to whom subscriptions may be sent.

The address of the Secretary for the Carpentarian Association in England is Miss Theodora Scarth, Bearsted, Kent, England.

Information can be obtained from the Bishop or from the Diocesan Secretary.

NOTICE TO CONTRIBUTORS

All contributions of Parish News, etc., should reach the Editor before the last day of February, May, August, and November in each year.

Diocese of Carpentaria.

Bishop :

RT. REV. STEPHEN HARRIS DAVIES.
Thursday Island, Queensland.

Administrator :

REV. F. W. SLADE, B.A., Th. Schol.

Sub-Dean :

REV. F. W. SLADE.

Diocesan Secretary :

REV. F. W. SLADE. Postal Address : Box 57, Thursday Island, Queensland, Australia.

Commissaries :

- REV. J. JONES, M.A., All Saints', S. Kilda, Melbourne.
REV. C. B. MURRELLS, Springhill, Maesmore, Gloucester, England.
REV. W. J. B. SCOTT, 16 Little Grosvenor Street, London. W. 1.
REV. CECIL EDWARDS, Holy Trinity Rectory Woolloongabba.

Rectors :

- REV. B. S. COLE, Cooktown.
REV. I. LL. SKELTON, Darwin.
REV. F. W. SLADE, B.A., Thursday Island.
REV. E. TAFES, Mossman.

Honorary Lay Readers :

- MR. H. F. L. FINNISS, Darwin.
HIS HONOUR JUDGE ROBERTS, Darwin.

Diocesan Council :

- REV. F. W. SLADE, B.A.
REV. J. J. E. DONE.
REV. W. H. MACFARLANE, Th.L.
MR. GEO. CLARK.
MR. A. SULLIVAN.
DR. VERNON.

Honorary Legal Adviser :

HIS HONOUR JUDGE MACNAUGHTON

Aboriginal Mission, Mitchell River

- MR. J. W. CHAPMAN.
REV. H. MATTHEWS, J.P. (Supt.).
MRS. MATTHEWS.
MISS F. SMITH.
MRS. TRELLOGEN.

Roper River Mission :

- MR. DYER.
REV. R. D. JOYNT.
REV. H. E. D. WARREN (Supt.).
MR. H. L. PERRIMAN.
MR. E. C. H. LOUSADA.
MISS CROSS.
MRS. DYER.
MISS DOVE.

Torres Straits Mission :

- REV. J. J. E. DONE.
REV. W. H. MACFARLANE, Th.L.
REV. J. W. SCHOMBERG.
*REV. JOSEPH LUI.
*REV. POEY PASSI.
DEACONESS HATTON, Moa.
MISS MARY BANN, Moa,
* Native Deacons.

Cowal Creek Mission :

Supervised by the REV. J. DONE.
Teacher : SATRAIKA.

The Diocese.

The See was founded in 1900, and consists of such part of Queensland as is bounded by the sea on the north and east by the Northern Territory on the west and by a line drawn from lat. S. 19deg. 30min. on the western boundary of Queensland due east to par. 144deg. and thence N. to lat. S. 16deg. 40min. and thence east to the sea, together with the whole of the Northern Territory, comprising an area of not less than 620,000 square miles. The population, which is very widely scattered over this immense area, consists of about 10,000 whites, 5,000 Japanese, Chinese, and other aliens, and 35,000 aborigines. The white population is mainly mining and pastoral. The See town is Thursday Island, a pearl centre north of Cape York.

Finance.

The Diocese has no endowments beyond the Bishop's income of £395 per annum. Every parish needs a grant from central funds which come from subscriptions to the Diocese, and grants from English Societies.

Special Collections.

On Easter Day the offertory alms are given to the Clergyman of the Parish, and on Good Friday to the Australian Board of Missions.

THE CARPENTARIAN.

THE BISHOP'S LETTER.

Upon the Sub-dean's return from his furlough, I left Thursday Island for the annual tour through the Diocese. The first appointments to be kept were in the Islands of Badu and Moa before leaving for the mainland of Queensland, and the few parishes down the Eastern coast. I was most fortunate in getting out to Badu, for the "Goodwill" had come in to Thursday Island for its monthly visit just at the time when I was ready to go out, and Mr. Harman very kindly gave me a passage out on her on Saturday, April 14th. At Badu the "Banzai" had already arrived from S. Paul's with Rev. J. W. Schomberg on board. Here we had on the Sunday morning our celebration of holy communion, and then, later in the morning, a confirmation, when about 30 candidates were presented. It was later in the day that I look upon the events that took place as marking one of the great days in my life, for soon after this confirmation at Badu we left in the "Banzai" for the village of Poid, known sometimes as Adam, on Moa Island, here there were to be many baptisms as well as a confirmation. Poid village has about 260 inhabitants, nearly half of whom have never been baptised, though for some years they had been under instruction and desirous to be baptised: these people used to live on Hammond Island, where they were far too near to the evil influence of the undesirables of the white population on that Island. With the full approval and earnest wishes of the church, these people were moved some twelve months ago to this village of Poid, and on this visit I was glad to hear from them that though they did not like leaving Hammond Island at first, now they were glad they had come to Poid. After the usual welcome and handshaking, which was interrupted by a large black snake putting in an appearance, the Rev. J. W. Schomberg with myself and the Churchwardens left to search the Creek for a suitable place for the baptism of about 40 adults to take place. A very good spot was found just above where the villagers washed their vegetables, we then returned to the church and at about 4 p.m. the service commenced. The first part of the service was taken in the church, a procession in single file then followed me to the creek, we had to walk in single file owing to the high grass and the road,—well, footpaths are called roads; as we went to the creek the people sang hymns in native language about S. John the Baptist. On arriving at the creek those to be baptised at once crossed to the opposite side, leaving the baptised on the same side as the church; when I had dispensed with cope and mitre I went into the middle of the creek and continued the service; here in their turn those to be baptized came down to me and passed up on the other side, some blind and lame, nearly all married people with families; the sun had gone down long before the service was finished, but on our return to the Church it had been lighted up ready to receive us, and here we finished the service. We wished to have a preparation service soon after that all might make ready for the reception of holy communion and confirmation in the morning; it was only when arrangements were being made for this service that we were told that the people had fasted all day in preparation for their baptism, this even though there had been no special instruction given in this matter; but now they had three live turtles on the beach and wanted to butcher them; a band of the older Christians were sent to make the turtle ready, while the remainder of the village came to church to make ready for the further spiritual gifts to be received on the morrow. On the Monday morning the time was fully taken up by the services of holy communion and confirmation, and the service at which eleven marriages that had been registered before the Civil Court in Thursday Island received the God's blessing through the ministry of the Church. In the afternoon we again assembled at the Church to baptize the infant children of those who had so recently been received into the Christian family themselves; it was only after this service that the reason for a large lugger being anchored off Poid was revealed; the Japanese captain of this boat had arrived on shore to collect his crew for this season's work, recruiting had begun in the Islands on January 1st for this year's crews, and is normally finished by the end of that month; this Japanese captain had come out two months before to recruit his crew, who, while they were willing to go with him later refused to sign on until the bishop had been out on April 15th, this meant the loss of two months wages to the Islanders, but money does not count when people are in real earnest in their desire to receive spiritual gifts. The men left the next day for work down the Barrier Reef off Rockhampton, Mackay and Townsville. One more incident of note at Poid, a Churchwardens' Conference was to take place at S. Paul's, Moa, on the Wednesday, and Namei was to represent Poid at this; he was told that he could come over with us on the "Banzai," but that we would not wait for him, also, that we were picking up Adegator at Badu, and taking him over as their representative; now Namei and Allegator were on opposite sides in the last fight that took place in the Islands; as we were saying good-bye we saw Namei striding down the village dressed in his best for his visit to S. Paul's, a flannel shirt with the tails flying in the wind, and a new lava-lava, but in his hand a bright and sharp cane-cutter's knife, his wife was following him with his luggage, a grass mat; and there had been no time to dress up his youngest son, so he was brought along to say farewell in nature's garb.

We spent the Monday night at Badu, where Mr. and Mrs. Harman kindly gave us hospitality, then leaving early in the morning we hoped to beat the tide and reach S. Paul's in the morning, but the tide beat us. J. W. Schomberg and myself landed and walked about five miles along the coast to the village, getting there a little before the "Banzai." At the village most of the churchwardens had already arrived, for the "Herald," "Oituli," and "Jimmy" were there. The Conference is described elsewhere in this issue.

From the Conference I hastened back to Thursday Island to catch the first boat that would take me to Cairns on my way to Cooktown. I was very fortunate in catching boats on this occasion. A boat runs from Cairns to Cooktown once a week, leaving Cairns at 4 p.m. on Tuesday, and we were sailing into Cairns at 4.30 p.m. on a Tuesday, but the boat had been delayed for an hour. Reaching Cooktown on Anzac Day, I was able to just get there for their Requiem, and to assist in the public meeting in the evening. Here, on Tuesday, SS. Philip and James' Day, the confirmation was held. Since my visit to Cooktown last year it is very noticeable how the population has decreased. The few people left are making a noble effort to support a resident priest; if the time comes that this can no longer be done it will be a great difficulty to give this place religious ministrations. While at Cooktown I had the opportunity to visit the Cape Bedford Mission. The visit was all too short, but did give me some valuable encouragement. This mission is conducted by the Lutherans, and Mr. Schwartz has been here for 36 years. The adults live out on their farms where they grow their own food supplies. At the head station is the school for the children. To those who know about Aboriginal Missions, when I tell them that nothing here is kept under lock and key—not even stores, it will show to what a high state of character the aboriginal is able to achieve.

—S. C.

APPOINTMENTS.

The Rev. F. C. Pond, of the Bush Brotherhood of the Diocese of North Queensland, has been given authority to act as a Surrogate in this Diocese. Rev. F. C. Pond, when he has the opportunity and time to do so, extends his trips over the boundaries of the Diocese of North Queensland, and very kindly ministers to parts in this Diocese, which at present cannot be reached by any of our own clergy.

The Rev. C. H. Gillman has been released from the promise that he made to Bishop White in 1915, that he would work for three years in this Diocese. Rev. C. H. Gillman served in the war, and owing to injuries received there, the doctors tell him that he would be very foolish to attempt to live in North Queensland. We are sorry to lose his work in the North, and congratulate the Diocese of Brisbane on getting the services of such a good priest.

In April, Miss M. Dove was licensed as a lay missionary to the Roper River and Groote Eylandt Mission.

Miss Dove, with the Rev. H. E. Warren and Miss Cross, arrived in Thursday Island in April on their way to the other side of the Gulf, and continued their voyage in the "K Holly" on the 9th May, reaching home on the 14th.

Mary Bann was licensed as Assistant Teacher in the school at S. Paul's, Moa. She began her work in the school at the beginning of this year.

On April 20th, Satraika was licensed as lay missionary and school teacher at Cowal Creek. Satraika has virgin soil to turn over here. I was told recently that not a person in the community could be found who could even sign their name. There are only one or two baptized persons there, these are Roman Catholics, who have received no instruction in their faith.

MOSSMAN AND PORT DOUGLAS.

The Bishop, after a calm run from Cooktown, landed at Port Douglas, at 6 a.m. on Thursday, 3rd May, 1923. His Lordship was met by the Rector, Rev. E. Taffs. After Mattins, at 9 a.m., he spent the morning in visiting some of the few residents left in Port Douglas. In the afternoon he visited a blind young woman who is about to go to Townsville to be present at the Healing Mission of Mr. Hickson. At 6 p.m. he and the Rector left by the tram for Mossman. The white population of Mossman remains stationary, but many farms have been bought by Italians, who are rapidly increasing in numbers and influence. Port Douglas is getting more and more deserted. The Queensland National Bank authorities have now decided to remove their bank to Mossman, which is at present only a branch of Port Douglas bank. It seems that in the near future Port Douglas will be occupied by people who find their means of livelihood in connection with the passenger and freight traffic at the port.

On Friday evening, in the parish hall at Mossman, which is used as the temporary church, the bishop gave confirmation when sixteen candidates were presented; the building was crowded to its fullest capacity by a reverent congregation, who listened most attentively to the definite and practical address of the bishop. There was a fair attendance on Saturday evening at the service of preparation for the holy communion, which was conducted by the bishop.

At the first celebration of the holy communion on Sunday at 7.30 a.m. the church was crowded with communicants—the newly-confirmed, their communicant relations, and all those who wished to help them, in perseverance and loyalty, by their prayers. Almost all on the communicant roll of Mossman were present. The church was again filled at the second celebration at 10 a.m., when the bishop celebrated and preached. After this service, the bishop, with Rev. E. Taffs as chaplain, bearing the pastoral staff, went to the residence of Mr. H. Bersinzi, to confirm Mrs. H. Bersinzi, who was too ill to come to the church. In the evening the bishop preached a fine and lucid sermon on the resurrection of the body from the text I. Cor. XV., 14. It was a hopeful and helpful day for the flock of faithful church-people who remain loyal notwithstanding much pleasure-loving worldliness around. It is hoped that the impetus thus given to their faith may have the practical result of causing some renewed interest and enthusiasm in the raising of a worthy church, and a discontent with the present temporary building; the unfinished stone and concrete building is a constant reproach to which we must never get used.

On Monday the bishop left by tram for Port Douglas. Here we have a well-built and well-appointed church, newly-painted, with neat wall decorations at the east end, and a suitably furnished altar. This building was put up immediately after the 1911 cyclone or a new site leased to the parish by the Diocesan Council. A commodious rectory was also built next to the church. The old site near the back beach was about three-quarters of a mile from the centre of the township; bringing the materials from the old site to the new increased the cost of the buildings, but it was worth this to get into a more central position. The balance of the Cyclone Church Building Fund was used for the erection of a stone and concrete church at Mossman, but was not sufficient to complete the building. On the Tuesday the bishop celebrated the holy communion and left Port Douglas very early on the Thursday.

—E.T.

Church and Rectory, Port Douglas.

COOKTOWN.

The round of fast and festival brings to a stagnant community the renewal of interest and joy. Good Friday services were splendidly attended. The Three Hours' Meditations on the seven savings from the Cross had an excellent attendance throughout. Easter Day was a beautiful bright festival. The church was nicely decorated. Each eucharist was well attended. During the day we had an orchestra of six to aid the singing. Notwithstanding that our church families are diminishing in number, a few of them have been replaced by families that have come to take an active interest in the church. We are still hopeful that the day is not far distant when we shall welcome many more.

A sufficient number of parishioners answered to the notice of the Easter Meeting to enable the business to be transacted. Mr. George Schipke and Mr. Moran were elected and appointed churchwardens, with a parochial council of seven. The retiring churchwardens were again able to show a creditable balance.

The Sunday school teachers, treasury collectors, and organist, are good consistent workers, and we are deeply grateful to them for their work.

Anzac Day was loyally observed. The eucharist at 7.30 had its goodly number of communicants, and the requiem at 11 o'clock was crowded. The bishop arrived during this service on a visit to the parish, and gave us his blessing. The public gathering at the Oddfellows' Hall was very large, and we were fortunate in having his lordship as the principal speaker.

The confirmation of eleven girls and one boy on Tuesday evening, May 1st, was the consummation of a very enjoyable and helpful visit from the bishop.

—B.S.C.

THURSDAY ISLAND.

The vicar returned on the 10th April after a prolonged absence. He had ministered in the Gulf district, and had preached in a number of churches in the capital cities on behalf of the missionary cause, and had addressed a number of meetings of clergymen, people, and children. His best thanks are tendered to the Lord Bishop of Carpentaria for fulfilling all the duties of his several offices during his holiday.

Missionaries passing through have included the Rev. H. Matthews, who was with us for ten days; the Rev. H. E. Warren, Miss Cross, and Miss Dove, who stayed a month; the Rev. R. D. Joynt and Miss Farrant, who were with us for ten days.

The local branch of the Mothers' Union has commenced its meetings for the session, and the meetings so far have been largely attended. The Girls' Friendly Society has also commenced with large meetings, and has arranged to have a series of social evenings, to which the members invite their own friends.

The Easter Meeting was duly held, and was fairly well attended. The accounts shewed that the finances of the parish are in a satisfactory condition, and that the church only needs the continued support of its members to enable it to do its work. Churchwardens were elected and appointed, and a vigorous parochial council was elected of seven members, including three women. It is some years since we commenced having women members on the parochial council, and we have found it a great improvement to include by that means the active workers at sales, socials, and in the societies, all in one advisory body, which thus becomes a council of workers as well as advisers.

Miss Ruth George, who has obtained the degree of B.A., from the University of Queensland, is, we believe, the first far northerner to graduate. She has always lived in this parish, except when absent from home at the Muses' bower, and qualified for matriculation while here, and with no help except such as she could obtain locally, and while earning her living in an office. We venture to tender hearty congratulations, both on the achievement in itself, and on the proof thus established, that the far north is a fit country for the pursuit of the studies of good learning.

—F. W. S.

MITCHELL RIVER MISSION.

The wet season did not end until some time after our last issue was published, so we now give the news received when communication was again opened up.

There were no further outbreaks of immorality, and the people worked well, and steadily all through the season. Never before have the married people had anything like the area under crop which they have planted this season, and given favourable weather they will be well supplied with food.

The mission school contains forty scholars, and expects soon to have fifty. A party of forty men and boys prepared the land for the school garden by doing two days' work, and the children planted it, and may expect it to yield them a good supply of food.

The simple daily services are well attended, and there is no need to enforce attendance by rules. The people read aloud from their bible, the lesson chosen, and by this means they understand its teaching much more readily when the missionary explains it.

A number of the people in the camps, who dwell nomadically on the reserve, but have not responded to the invitation to live in a mission village under rule, have lately begun to cultivate land for themselves, a proceeding unheard of before. This year the number who do so has increased. This is a marked advance. The mission gives them seed, etc., and lends them tools.

These wild people of the camps are also sending their children to the mission school. Naturally it is a great convenience to them to have their children fed and cared for while they themselves go hunting, and it gives the mission an opportunity of doing its most hopeful work. Some of them have expressed their willingness to attend church if they receive food and tobacco for doing so. This offer has not been accepted! But quite a few of the heathen come to the mission church of their own free will.

The tribes to the north of the present sphere are described as a healthy, clean lot of people, and require our attention as soon as we can give it.

The superintendent, the Rev. H. Matthews, sailed from Thursday Island for the mission on the 13th April.

The bishop leaves Normanton for the mission on the 19th June, and should arrive while this issue is in the press. —J. C. and F. W. S.

THE ISLANDERS CONFERENCE.

Wednesday, April 18th, was the day finally fixed for the Conference of the churchwardens from the Torres Straits Islands. This year the conference was held at St. Paul's, Moa. By the Tuesday evening all the clergy, churchwardens, or the representatives who were taking their places from the Islands were assembled. That evening we had a preparation service conducted by Rev. H. M. McFarlane. The order of proceedings for the following day was fixed by the bishop. These were to be in the early hours of the morning. A celebration of the holy communion, at which service the bishop was to give his blessing to three Islanders, who were leaving that week to help in missionary work in different capacities of school teacher and seaman. After matins and litany, the bishop was to deliver his address, which would then be explained to those churchwardens who might have had some difficulty in following it by the Island clergy. This explanation would be in pigeon English, and two native dialects sandwiched together. The bishop did not feel he was capable of translating his address into such language. At 4 p.m. the bishop was to return, when various resolutions would be passed and certain actions sanctioned, and questions which islanders might want to bring up, would be answered. The day was to close with evensong.

The meeting, which started at 4 p.m., was interesting. In front of the churchwardens and between them and the bishop, Rev. Joseph Lui was sitting. He was to be the spokesman for the churchwardens. This duty he performed very ably, especially when it came to the point of the churchwardens wanting certain things explained to them by the bishop. Joseph Lui translated these explanations first into the language spoken in the eastern group of Islands, and then into that spoken in the northern group on the coasts of Papua. A discussion was then carried on in rather a babel of tongues, until finally Joseph could sort out the opinion of the churchwardens, or perhaps another question to be asked. Joseph then addressed the bishop. One wonders how the very correct Chairman of a Southern Synod would have dealt with such a conference. Would he have made everyone address the chair, and only one person speak at a time? The results of breaking all rules of procedure in public meetings were not attended with disaster in this conference, but this was chiefly due to the innate politeness of the Islanders. One imagines that the self-assertiveness of the white man would make a procedure such as was followed at S. Paul's very disastrous in a conference of white people.

In the opening part of his address the bishop spoke of the development that had taken place in the islands in the lifetime of those present at the meeting, from the hostile days when all were at enmity with one another to the present days, when on all islands there were schools. Many islanders had their own boats for fishing and pearling, and there were local Councils controlling the social and domestic life of the islands under the Queensland Government. From the past progress, the future should hold great things in store for the islands, but the bishop pointed out that now the next step must be the better education of at least some of the inhabitants. He asked the churchwardens to tell their people to look forward to the time when some of their cleverest boys would be able to come to a high school at S. Paul's. That entrance to such a school or class would have to be by examination. That parents would have to give some help in the supporting of their children whilst at such a school, but children now should be told that there was the possibility of their being given a higher education if they set their minds to their school work now. The bishop pointed out that, whereas now others had to do the clerking work and accountancy work for those who owned their own boats, their own boys, when better educated, would do such work for them.

After this, various things of a practical nature had to be discussed, amongst other matters that of having to work on pearling boats on a Sunday, and the influence of the life lived on these boats under heathen and nominal-Christian captains, whether these men were Japanese or European. With regard to the latter, the churchwardens were unanimously of the opinion that their boys and young men deteriorated in character under certain captains, being taught to drink and other evil habits by these men; and as for the Sunday work, while it was clearly known that this was not compulsory; pressure was used to make the men work on Sunday even against their will, unless arrangements were made about this before signing on. Of course the only solution is for the islanders to get more boats of their own, and to learn the modern methods of diving as practised by the Japanese, then there would be no need to sign on under any but island captains. Another matter discussed and settled at this conference was that dealing with churchwardens. It had been the practice in the past to appoint men for life to this office. It was decided to make no more appointments of this nature, but to appoint two for each church annually at Easter, thereby bringing the church in the islands into line with the remainder of the diocese in this matter. The only licences that the Bishop would issue were those of catechist or lay reader, and these to be renewed every year. The churchwardens were rather alarmed at the bishop's proposals, as they at first thought that he meant to take their offices from them, and cancel the licences that had been given by former Bishops, which were for life; in fact, in one case, certainly it had been considered an hereditary office, but the bishop assured the conference that he did not propose to cancel any licences except for grave breaches of the Christian moral law or neglect of duty.

Other things discussed were the old island customs, which could be called almost national customs. These were being displaced by imitating European ways, such as at burials, the provision of expensive wooden coffins in place of the grass mat, or the purchase at excessively high rates from the South of tombstones instead of making such on the islands as in the past, of coral and cement. The members of the conference decided to do their utmost to influence public opinion in the islands to maintain old island customs that were good, and boycott European ways. (Ghandism, is it not?) These churchwardens again expressed their earnest hope that no undue pressure be brought to bear that the island girls be sent to Thursday Island to work. At present none are allowed to live on Thursday Island, but government regulations have a habit of changing suddenly, and the islander never forgets orders that he has been given in the past. The assessments came up for revision. One island had appealed to have theirs reduced, but the conference saw no reason why this should be done in 1923. In 1924 this might be done, as Poid, where the population has been doubled since the fixing of the amounts, has volunteered to double its assessment in 1924. The total assessments remains the same, £150 per annum, which is used in paying the deacons who are also school teachers on Dauan and Boigu. —S. C.

THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND MEN'S SOCIETY.

Information supplied by Rev. A. R. Ebbs.

National Secretary, C.E.M.S.,

Church House, Sydney.

THE RULE OF LIFE.—In the power of the Holy Spirit. To pray to God every day; to be a faithful communicant, and by active Witness, Fellowship and Service, to help forward the Kingdom of Christ.

SOME OF ITS DOINGS.

THE SCOPE OF THE SOCIETY.—The Bishop of Chelmsford, the Chairman in England, says that the C.E.M.S. is the biggest Society of male Communicants in the world, the total membership is about 70,000, the number of members in Australia is about 5,000. The Bishop, in a recent great message urges, in the realm of service, that each C.E.M.S. man during 1923 will aim at:—(1) Bringing at least one man to Christ and to confirmation. (2) Inducing one fellow communicant to join the C.E.M.S. and to help it by his spiritual life and work. This is a great ideal for the Australian brethren.

GODFATHERS AT CONFIRMATION.—Bundaberg Branch has adopted the practice of members acting as Confirmation Godfathers, which practice is in force in some Branches. A rubric at the end of the Catechism says that "everyone shall have a Godfather, or a Godmother, as a Witness of their Confirmation." This was done at a Confirmation at Bundaberg in June last, and the Godfathers, after the Confirmation, kept in touch with the boys, and encouraged them in their church attendance and communions.

IMMIGRATION.—The New South Wales Council is pressing forward in this challenging work. The C.E.M.S. officer for N. S. Wales, Mr. W. E. Wensor, presents the following encouraging report for February. Ships visited, 12; Cards distributed, 495; Commended to Rectors, 191; Employment found for 19; Employers interviewed, 22.

The Church of England Boys' Society Council in Sydney has now entered upon a most important work in this connection. Mr. Ivon Johnson, c/o C.E.M.S. Church House, has been appointed Honorary Secretary of the Boys' Immigration Department, which has as its purpose the welcoming, corresponding, and the chumming up with every Anglican lad, especially communicant boys, who arrive in N. S. Wales from overseas.

THE CHILDREN'S COURT, SYDNEY.—A most valuable work of caring for Church of England Boys admitted on probation, and allowed to return to their homes is being carried on by Mr. P. D. Brady, supervising Hon. Probationary Officer for C.E.M.S. (Address Ascot, Temple Street, Stanmore), and by a number of C.E.M.S. men to act as honorary probationary officers by doing all they possibly can to help these lads to win out. The figures supplied by Mr. Brady for the months of January and February are an eloquent testimony to the work being accomplished. He reports—cases for the two months, 62; cases requiring special oversight, 12; Total number of boys under our supervision, 175; Reports received from the hon. probationary officers for the two months number 42.

MISSIONS FOR SPIRITUAL HEALING.—All C.E.M.S. men are asked to do everything in their power to help forward this great work, and especially to conserve the results thereof.

COWAL CREEK MISSION.

On April 17th a conference of Bishop, Torres Straits Mission Staff, and Island representatives, was held at S. Paul's, Moa. At its conclusion, both the Mission boats, "Herald" and "Oituli" came to Thursday Island for stores, and at once proceeded to Cowal Creek, situated not many miles from Cape York, the most northerly point of Australia. On board we had most of the island men who had attended conference. We landed mid-day on Saturday, April 21st, and at once set to work. I had been visiting this place for several months, but now a forward move was taking place, and a Mabuiag man was to be stationed among the people, receiving a licence from the Bishop as lay reader and school teacher. The object of this trip was to build his house, and establish the school.

During the afternoon some of the men made and erected a flagpole, others planted coconuts, again others assisted in the erection of a temporary altar, whilst a last party put up my camp, for I was to stay for a few weeks. Sunday opened with a celebration of the Holy Communion, Rev. Poey Passi, one of our Torres Strait's deacons assisting. Mattins was said under a large tree, all the resident people attending. Rev. Poey Passi preached at this service taking John III., 16 as his text.

At 3 p.m. we all assembled on the Mission grounds and prayers were said at the four corners of the proposed building. These were followed by special thanksgivings and intercessions at the altar, a sermon by Rev. Joseph Lui, our other native deacon, his subject being the "Lost Sheep," and the induction of Satraika, as lay reader and school teacher. Rain hastened the proceedings towards the close. At night the service was taken in the village, Rev. W. H. MacFarlane giving the address.

Monday was a busy day, most of the men went to the bush to cut timber for the house, while others assisted me with the erection of the poles. By evening a good start had been made.

Tuesday we said good-bye to both ships and Satraika, and I turned to work, and by Monday, May 7, the house was completed, and school commenced with 16 children. Each day was full. The children came daily for instruction and prayers, and Mission services were nightly held in the village.

A census showed that 93 people live in the village at the mouth of Cowal Creek; 48 at another village about one and a-half miles to the north, and ten at another small settlement, but all are within easy reach. A good work has been begun, and there seems to be no need for pessimism as to results. It will require much patience and sticking power on the part of the workers, but with the prayers of the faithful, and the help of Him in whose name the work is undertaken, it must come to a successful issue in God's good time.

—J. D.

LENT IN TORRES STRAITS.

Lent in Torres Strait is necessarily a time of fasting for the people who inhabit the numerous islands. The season coincides with the Nor'-west monsoon when the gardens are merely growing—harvest comes later—and when the gales and rains hinder the pursuit of the ordinary avocations of the men, pearl-shell, trochas-shell, and beche-de-mer fishing.

No islander is wealthy according to our standards, and he has yet to learn the meaning of thrift, hence there is often little laid by for the proverbial rainy day, which, unfortunately, comes annually.

It must not be thought, however, that earnings are wasted, far from it. To start with, they are not individually large, and they are regularly apportioned with due regard to duty, the Church Missions, and even charity are properly considered, and many cases of great generosity are met with. One instance of this last virtue will suffice. A man who holds the Bishop's licence noticed a child in his village who was looking somewhat pinched. He has told the boy's grandparents who have the care of him, and who are too old for work, to send the child to him for meals, so that he could be properly fed (he is already doing the same for two others), and he has a family of ten children of his own to provide for.

Last year the prices of the produce of the sea fell, so that there was even less than usual to fall back upon.

But Lent was kept. I found one old blind woman going without one kind of island food, others giving up fish—the principal diet in times of shortage—others again decided against flour or rice, and some put away their pipes. In every case there was self-denial, and during the weeks much spare time was put into making baskets or fans, or mats with which they could join in the Lenten offering on Easter day. To some all this may seem but a small thing, but to those who know, it is evidence of the depth of the spiritual life of so many of our people. They give up whatever it may be for Christ's sake. They mean it as an effort to bring them closer to Him. Not all, perhaps, could so put their motives into words, but I venture to think that He who looked so kindly upon the widow's mite, will also regard these offerings, for we are not to be judged by the amount of our giving—it is not given to all to be able to give much. Surely it is reasonable to believe that these simple folk will be found among those of whom it may be said, "she hath done what she could."

—J. D.

MISJUDGED TROPICS.

(From "The Australasian," Melbourne, by kind permission of the Proprietor).

The Overseas Emigration Committee has excluded from the desirable area from a migration point of view the tropical part of Queensland, leaving, as it says, settlement to be carried out there by "Australians who have become acclimatized." Both the hypothesis and the arguments on which it is based are quaintly erroneous. There is such a large and fruitful province within the tropics, yet climatically belonging to the temperate zone, that if it were accepted that only seasoned people can live in the north of Queensland, some of the healthiest regions under the sun would be barred to the British immigrant. As a matter of fact, behind Rockhampton, Mackay, and Cairns lie plateaux which in winter are cold enough for any reasonable person, and in summer are never exhaustingly hot. About the Atherton and the Evelyn in the thinly scattered settlement you may see as healthy and as rosy-cheeked children as in the country districts of Victoria or Tasmania. And the people of the vast elevated plains west of Rockhampton and Townsville are as vigorous and long-lived as any folk in Australia. The death rate is much lower than in England or in more densely populated parts of the south. These highlands, sometimes arid in appearance, and often hot in summer, will one day carry a great population. As for the Evelyn and Atherton plateaux, these are lands which enjoy a good rainfall, are rich of soil, and climatically admirably fitted to be the home of a healthy and numerous people. At present they are peopled by a mere handful, but a handful so active and enterprising that large areas which only a few years ago were dense forests have been brought under profitable cultivation. Yet geographically they are tropical. If the embargo had been laid on the coastal belt in which the sugar industry has its richest plantations and farms, and tropical fruit and vegetation flourish luxuriantly, something might have been said about it, but even there large rural industries have been built up. White men work in the canefields, and white men and women and children contrive to live and prosper. It is a dangerous thing to condemn any part of tropical Queensland merely because it lies north of the imaginary line of Capricorn. The suggestion of leaving it to "seasoned Australians" is equally fallacious, for the southerner who has never been in Queensland is as much horrified at the word tropical as the villager in the coldest hamlet in England.

JESUIT PLOTS.

In Eulimenon the devil has always enjoyed exceptional opportunities, at first because of the famous "birth-stains," later through the peculiar location of the city which permits the riff-raff of all the lands to come over all the seas into its very heart, and constantly through the presence there of a strong party-spirit which is antagonistic to the Spirit of God. With all these advantages we might expect the evil spirits to abandon their usual caution and to fight against goodness in the open instead of by stabs in the dark; and we cannot but admire the cunning which avoids such a blunder.

Their methods are interesting. Men to all outward appearance rational and righteous are employed to inform simple minded women that among the clergy of our church are to be found Jesuits in disguise. The victims are well chosen. On account of their infant nurture they suppose that the members of the Society of Jesus (a religious order in the Church of Rome) are capable of any wickedness, and they readily imbibe the suggestion that among the clergy of the church of England any one may be, and some are, unmitigated scoundrels, committing perjury daily—except those certified by a party which exists for the purpose. Having been well primed with the suggestion, the victims are sent to lonely outposts, where the seed may grow and fructify undisturbed.

It is long since such methods of injuring religion had any chance of success in better informed circles. We have to go right back to the Sixties to find the last occasion when a question on the subject was asked in the House of Commons. Then the leader of the House, says Justin McCarthy, "rose, and, leaning on the table in front of him, began with a manner of portentous gravity and a countenance of almost funereal gloom to give his answer. "Her Majesty's Ministers," he said, "had not been informed of any absolutely new machinations of the Jesuits, but they would continue to watch, as they had hitherto watched, for any indication of such insidious enterprises. One of the favourite machinations of the Jesuits," he went on to say, with deepening solemnity, "had always been understood to be a plan for sending into this country disguised emissaries of their own, who, by expressing extravagant and ridiculous alarm about Jesuit plots, might bring public derision on the efforts of the genuine supporters of the state church. He would not venture to say whether the honourable member had any knowledge of any such plans as that—," but here a roar of laughter from the whole house rendered further explanation impossible, and the leader composedly resumed his seat."

—F. W. S.

A VOYAGE OF THE "HOLLY."

The ketch "Holly," of the C.M.S. mission at Roper River in the Northern Territory in this diocese, had an adventurous trip in April. During that month there were fierce storms, of most unusual severity, in the Gulf of Carpentaria. The steamer Douglas Mawson disappeared, and no tidings of her fate have yet been received. The "Holly" cannot sail well, and depends chiefly on her engine, always a risky policy in these waters, where almost every man is a good sailor, but few are skilled engineers.

She sailed on April 3rd from Roper River for Thursday Island, having waited for a hurricane to blow itself out, with Mr. McNeice, a master mariner, as skipper. Without his skill and resource, disaster would have been certain in the weather subsequently experienced. All experience suggested that the weather would be fair for a fortnight at least.

She reached the mouth of the river, borne on flood waters, in seven hours, and anchored. At dawn on the 4th she put to sea, but after making six miles was compelled by very stormy weather, to put back. At noon, the weather having cleared, she started again, but another storm sent her back a second time, after making 13 miles. That time there was great difficulty in finding the river mouth, owing to the darkness. That night and the next day it blew very hard, but a start was made again on the 6th towards noon. She was soon clear of the channel, but had engine trouble, and set sail to seek an anchorage. After 1 a.m., with no indication of the position, the lead found soundings, and anchor was cast in 4½ fathoms.

At dawn on the 7th, an unsuccessful attempt was made to reach Groote Island. A strong east wind was blowing, and rough sea running and by nightfall she had drifted to a point 14 miles from her start, where she was anchored.

On the 8th, they got the engine working, and succeeded in making Groote Island. Here they found that the mission had been visited by a tidal wave, which had ruined the station. There is no evidence of such phenomena having happened here previously.

They got away again on the evening of the 9th, after repairing the engine. Next day the engine would not work, a jib-stay carried away, and there was some narrow escapes; one man fell overboard, but was recovered. On the 11th the foresail boom split, but was repaired in time. Rough seas and strong contrary winds continued.

On the 13th, the Queensland coast was sighted about 15 miles ahead, but a heavy thunderstorm came up, jib carried away, and an east wind blew the ship back into the Gulf. Next day the damaged boom broke finally. On the 15th both jib and mainsail blew out; heavy rains and choppy seas continued day after day; everything aboard was wet, there was no chance of making a fire or of getting any sleep. On the 16th, the sun was visible again and the weather had moderated, so she was put again on her course for Thursday Island, but bad weather came again, and for most of the 17th and the night following she was in imminent danger of swamping. The engine could be got to run only in fits and starts, sails frequently carried away, and the vessel was in no condition for such weather. Next day she was brought to about the same spot as she had reached five days before, 15 miles from the Queensland coast. Sails were patched again, and a jury boom contrived out of an iron rail, but she could not face the weather, and was put back once more. By this time provisions were getting short.

Roper River was reached again on the 21st. Here damages were repaired and fresh supplies taken aboard. On the 24th she got away again, and this time was favoured with fair weather, and reached Thursday Island on the 29th.

It is not pretended that the missionaries endure any worse perils than those which are cheerfully faced daily by some 2,000 men in these waters, who seek no better reward than wages. But the above shows the necessity of having suitable ships, well found and manned. These are expensive, but it would be sinful folly to attempt the work with anything less than the best tools. Visiting seamen often remark on the sturdiness and general excellence of Thursday Island ships, and are surprised at it, until they learn what conditions these have to meet.

—R.D.J. and F.W.S.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS.

The Diocesan Secretary has received the following sums since January 1st:—

	£	s.	d.		£	s.	d.
For Mitchell River Mission—				For Cowal Creek Mission—
Bishop of New Guinea	10	9	7	Mrs Millar	1	0	0
Per the Superintendent	19	0	0	„ A.B.M.—
„ Cathedral Building Fund—				From Thursday Island...	7	3	2
S. E. Nixon	2	2	0	„ Mabuiag	1	6	1
„ Torres Straits Mission—				„ Yam	2	4	9
From Moa	19	5	2	„ Saibai	1	7	2
„ Badu	23	6	5	„ Dauan		13	8
„ Poid	8	11	7	„ Cooktown	3	17	2
„ Yorke	2	2	8	„ Mossman	3	19	9
„ Murray	25	16	6	„ Moa	8	6	11
„ Darnley	5	12	0	„ Badu	6	5	11
„ Stephen	10	0		„ Darnley	2	2	1
„ Mabuiag	19	3		„ Coconut	5	4
Mrs A. Kirchner	16	0		„ Yorke	17	5
Miss Hempsted	2	0	0	„ Murray	3	2
For S. Paul's College	13	0		Executors of Louisa Bancroft	100	0	0
„ Pensions, from Natives				Walter and Eliza Hall Trust	105	0	0
Accustomable Dues	2	0	0	For Bishop's House Maintenance—
„ Clergy Endowment Fund,				ance—H. G. Simpson ...	7	10	0
Interest	23	4	3	Parochial Assessments—
Subscriptions—				Cooktown	2	2	0
Christian Legacy Income	15	4	5	Interest, Diocesan Church
Mrs Brydges	1	10	0	Management Fund ...	28	9	1
Mr W. J. Paull	5	5	0
Per Rev. W. H. MacFarlane	3	0	0
Per the Bishop	5	0	0

SUBSCRIPTIONS TO "THE CARPENTARIAN."—Mrs Owen 15/-, Miss Davidson 5/-, Mrs Norgate, Mr Fergusson, Miss Littleford, Rev. J. W. Schomberg, each 2/6. Per Mrs Greig: Mrs Ogilvie, Mrs Patten, Miss Pass, Mrs Shield, Mrs Reese, Mrs Greig, Mrs Evans, Mrs Aplin, Mrs McLean, each 2/6.

TORRES STRAITS MISSION.

BALANCE SHEET FOR YEAR ENDING DECEMBER 31st, 1922.

RECEIPTS AND EXPENDITURE.

RECEIPTS.				£	s.	d.	EXPENDITURE.				£	s.	d.
To	Australian Board Missions	1385	0	10	By	General Expenses	49	19	...
"	Island Contributions	128	4	11	"	Training College	96	11	...
"	Subscriptions and Donations	48	3	0	"	"Banzai" Repairs	8	3	...
"	Balance	26	9	2	"	"Oituli" Repairs	64	13	...
							"	Property Repairs	31	17	...
							"	"Herald" W. A/c	390	4	...
							"	St. Paul's, Moa	180	6	...
							"	Salaries and Wages	495	3	...
							"	"Oituli" W. A/c	270	17	...
				<hr/>							<hr/>
				£1,587 17 11							£1,587 17 11
				<hr/>							<hr/>

LIABILITIES AND ASSETS.

LIABILITIES.		£	s.	d.	ASSETS.		£	s.	d.
Churches—Badu	...	46	4	1	Churches—Adam	...	3	11	...
Boigo	...		1	8	Dauan
Cocoanut	...	28	9	8	Masig	...	29	11	...
Darnley	...	8	15	4	Murray
Mabuiag	...	3	18	3	Stephen	...	1		...
Saibai	...	148	8	8	Travelling Expenses to be paid by
Sale—Native Bibles	...	3	17	6	Australian Board Missions	...	72	11	...
Invalid Food and M. A/c (St. Paul's,					National Bank of Australasia Ltd.	...	50		...
Moa)	...	4	15	0	Church Roof, St. Paul's, Moa	...	29		...
Australian Board Missions, for Hymn					Excess Expenditure over
Books	...	53	13	0	Receipts ... 1921	£593	1	10
Hodels Ltd.	...	403	17	5	Excess Expenditure over
Crews' Wages in Suspense	...	105	0	0	Receipts ... 1922	26	9	2
									619 1
		£807	0	7					£807

Examined and found correct.

2/1/23.

E. J. HENNESSEY, Auditor.

HODELS LIMITED,

Per GEORGE CLARK, Agents.

GLENNIE MEMORIAL SCHOOL, TOOWOOMBA

Principal: MISS LAWRENCE.

GLENNIE PREPARATORY SCHOOL, TOOWOOMBA

Principal: MISS SUTTON.

Church of England School for Girls, Toowoomba. Under control of the Brisbane Diocesan Council

Patron: His Grace the Archbishop of Brisbane.

THE GLENNIE MEMORIAL SCHOOL gives Education up to Senior and Matriculation standard. Specialities: Music, Singing and Art.

THE PREPARATORY SCHOOL receives pupils up to 13 years of age, and prepares candidates for the State Scholarship Examination.

Reduction for Sisters.

Fees for both Schools on application.

The "Church Standard."

Posted to any Address for 6s. 6d. per Annum.

The CHURCH STANDARD holds the unique position of being the only independent weekly paper published in the interests of the Church of England in Australasia.

Published every Friday Morning.

Appeals to all Members of the Church of England, Members of the C.E.M.S.,
Churchwardens, Side-men and Parochial Councillors, Sunday School Teachers,
Lay Readers, Catechists, and Clergy.

Specimen Copies on application to

THE CHURCH PUBLISHING Co. LTD.

ROYAL INSURANCE BUILDINGS, 16 SPRING STREET, SYDNEY.

ST. MARGARET'S, BRISBANE

CHURCH OF ENGLAND HIGH SCHOOL FOR GIRLS

Under the management of the Sisters of the Society of the Sacred Advent

Pupils prepared for examinations of the University of Queensland, Public Service and Associated Board E.A.

There are two Boarding Houses beautifully situated in extensive grounds overlooking the Brisbane River

BOARDERS RECEIVED FROM THE AGE OF EIGHT

For Prospectus Apply SISTER-IN-CHARGE

ST. CATHARINE'S, STANTHORPE

CHURCH OF ENGLAND HIGH SCHOOL FOR GIRLS

Under the management of the Sisters of the Society of the Sacred Advent

Pupils prepared for examinations of the University of Queensland, and Associated Board R.A.

ADDITIONAL HOUSE SECURED

INCREASED ACCOMMODATION FOR BOARDERS

For Prospectus Apply SISTER-IN-CHARGE

Church of England Girls' Schools

UNDER THE MANAGEMENT OF THE
SISTERS OF THE SACRED ADVENT.

S. ANNE'S, TOWNSVILLE, Quarterly Fees for Boarders £10 10s.

S. MARY'S, HERBERTON " " " " £15 15s.

Pupils prepared for Queensland University and Associated Board R.A.
Examinations. Commercial Subjects taught. Open-air sleeping accommodation if required.

In connection with S. Mary's, Herberton, there is a separate House for Boys under nine years of age. Quarterly Fees, £12 10s.

A

THE CARPENTARIAN

For the Diocese of Carpentaria,
North Australia

XIII., No. 92 THURSDAY ISLAND, OCTOBER 1, 1923.

Price 2/6 a Year

Published on the first day of each month.

Post Free

DEC 1 1923

NOTICE.

All communications to be addressed to the Editor of The Carpenterian, Bishop's House, Thursday Island, to whom subscriptions may be sent.

The address of the Secretary for the Carpenterian Association in England is Miss Theodora Scarth, Bearsted, Kent, England.

Information can be obtained from the Bishop or from the Diocesan Secretary.

NOTICE TO CONTRIBUTORS

All contributions of Parish News, etc., should reach the Editor before the last day of February, May, August, and November in each year.

Diocese of Carpentaria.

Bishop :

RT. REV. STEPHEN HARRIS DAVIES.
Thursday Island, Queensland.
Consecrated Lady Day, 1922.

Administrator :

REV. F. W. SLADE, B.A., Th. Schol.

Sub-Dean :

REV. F. W. SLADE.

Diocesan Secretary :

REV. F. W. SLADE, Postal Address : Box 57, Thursday Island, Queensland, Australia.

Commissaries :

REV. J. JONES, M.A., All Saints', S. Kilda, Melbourne.

REV. C. R. MIERLEES, Springhill, Maesmore, Gloucester, England.

REV. W. J. B. SCOTT, 16 Little Grosvenor Street, London, W. 1.

REV. CECIL EDWARDS, Holy Trinity Rectory Woolloongabba.

Rectors :

REV. B. S. COLE, Cooktown.

REV. I. LL. SKELTON, Darwin.

REV. F. W. SLADE, B.A., Thursday Island.

REV. E. TAFFS, Mossman.

Honorary Lay Readers :

MR. H. F. L. FINNISS, Darwin.

HIS HONOUR JUDGE ROBERTS, Darwin.

Diocesan Council :

REV. F. W. SLADE, B.A.

REV. J. J. E. DONE.

REV. W. H. MACFARLANE, Th.L.

MR. GEO. CLARK.

MR. A. SULLIVAN.

DR. VERNON.

Honorary Legal Adviser :

HIS HONOUR JUDGE MACNAUGHTON.

Aboriginal Mission, Mitchell River :

MR. J. W. CHAPMAN.

REV. H. MATTHEWS, J.P. (Supt.)

MRS. MATTHEWS.

MISS F. SMITH.

MRS. TRELLOGEN.

Roper River Mission :

MR. DYER.

REV. R. D. JOYNT.

REV. H. E. D. WARREN (Supt.)

MR. H. L. PERRIMAN.

MR. E. C. H. LOUSADA.

MISS CROSS.

MRS. DYER.

MISS DOVE.

Torres Straits Mission :

REV. J. J. E. DONE.

REV. W. H. MACFARLANE, Th.L.

REV. J. W. SCHOMBERG.

*REV. JOSEPH LUI.

*REV. POEY PASSI.

DEACONESS HATTON, Moa.

MISS MARY BANN, Moa.

* Native Deacons.

Cowal Creek Mission :

Supervised by the Rev. J. DONE.

Teacher : SATRAIKA.

The Diocese.

The See was founded in 1900, and consists of such part of Queensland as is bounded by the sea on the north and east by the Northern Territory on the west and by a line drawn from lat. S. 19deg. 30min. on the western boundary of Queensland due east to par. 144deg. E. and thence N. to lat. S. 16deg. 40min. and thence east to the sea, together with the whole of the Northern Territory, comprising an area of not less than 620,000 square miles. The population, which is very widely scattered over this immense area, consists of about 10,000 white, 5,000 Japanese, Chinese, and other alien and 35,000 aboriginals. The white population is mainly mining and pastoral. The See town is Thursday Island, a pearl centre north of Cape York.

Finance.

The Diocese has no endowments beyond the Bishop's income of £395 per annum. Every parish needs a grant from central funds which come from subscriptions to the Diocese, and grants from English Societies.

Special Collections.

On Easter Day the offertory alms are given to the Olergyman of the Parish, and on Good Friday to the Australian Board of Missions.

THE CARPENTARIAN.

BISHOP'S LETTER.

After visiting Mossman and Port Douglas, I started on my annual trip through the towns in the south of the diocese. As usual, I was held up in Cairns, on this occasion for five days only, as the train leaves for Forsayth once a week. Whilst in Cairns some friends very kindly offered to take me over to Yarrabah in their launch, all went well until we reached Mission Bay, when the engine decided to give up work, our attempts to start the engine again were fruitless, and to sail a flat-bottomed launch against a strong tide and wind was impossible, so there was nothing else to be done but try to reach Cairns again. I was disappointed to miss reaching Yarrabah, but hope for better results when next I have an opportunity to get there.

On May 16 I left Cairns for the west, reaching Forsayth on the 17th. This is the terminus of the line, also the beginning of this diocese. Here I was in hopes of finding some means of getting to Georgetown during the week. The mail car leaves at daylight the morning after the train arrives, and the train only gets in late at night. This gives one no opportunity to hold services or to see our churchpeople, but there seems to be no means of communication after the mail cars leave, so very late in the evening I baptised a baby here, departing for Georgetown the next morning.

At Georgetown also one has to stay a few hours or a week, there was nothing for it but to stay a week. The services which were held in the Shire Hall were well attended; much of the Church property is kept in the Shire Hall here; it was removed there when the church was blown down some years ago. I had an opportunity of inspecting what was left of the church. There was only some timber and a bell. The timber had been exposed to the weather for some years. This I decided had far better be sold than allowed to deteriorate any more. Mr. St. J. Caulfield very kindly offered to see to the sale of this, the proceeds from which go to swell the Georgetown Church building fund, which will be used when a population returns to the North.

Croydon was my next stopping place. This city was reached on Saturday, May 27. I had decided to stay here for two Sundays. During the week the daily celebrations were fairly well attended, and the children came very regularly every afternoon at 4 p.m. for instruction and prayers. There were many children to be baptised for there had been no clergyman here for some time. There are over 100 children on the roll at the State school, so that one does wish North Queensland was more attractive to the junior clergy of Australia. My annual visit can never be long enough to give these children satisfactory instruction.

Whilst at Croydon I visited Golden Gate and found the last of our Church families packing up to move to near Mareeba. This being the case, I had the Church here pulled down and the materials sent to Normanton for me to take away on the Francis Pritt. These materials have since been given; the iron to the Mitchell River Mission, and the timber to the Torres Straits Mission. The Chalice and Paten from here have been lent to the Groote Eylandt mission, and all registers both from here and Georgetown have been removed to the Diocesan Registry.

On June 6th I moved on to Normanton. I had meant to stay for two Sundays only, but this was extended to three, as I waited to get the materials from the Golden Gate Church; for the whole fortnight that I was in Normanton the children turned up very regularly at church at 4 p.m. for their instruction and devotions.

Here, as all over the district I had been through, there is great depression, in some parts because the gold reefs have been lost; in others because the price of cattle is so poor (it is very good to make £3 a head clear profit on fat bullocks); a great part of the European population has gone away during the last five years, and others would go if they had the means to do so, and work to go to in other places. Time does seem to be proving that the white man cannot, under present conditions, make a livelihood in the far north. On June 27 I left Normanton by the Francis Pitt for the Mitchell River. The wind and tides were very unkind to us. On the first night the tide deserted us, and we stayed on a sand bank in the river (there is only one tide every 24 hours in this part of the world); on the second evening the wind dropped and we had to anchor still in the river, to prevent our being carried up stream; the third night we stayed, much against our will, on the bar at the mouth of the river, when at last out at sea there was no wind for two days and on one of these days we wallowed in a very heavy swell. It was not until July 4th that we at last reached the Mitchell mission. As I had lost so much time I could only stay here for a week. This was disappointing, as I had meant to stay longer. There had been no floods here this year with the result that the countryside was very dry. The potato crop while not quite a failure, was very poor as compared with last year's. This was unfortunate, as many of the camp aborigines had made gardens this year; some for the first time. One noticed at once that a great change had come over the mission; a new tone has developed. It is to be hoped that the leaders in all that is evil have at last been rooted out. One missed Jack Geibo and Tom Solomon very much. Jack had all the framework for the new school erected, and was working on this building when he was taken with his last illness. Johnny Savo was unfortunate in having his house and all his possessions burnt a few days before my arrival. He himself was also badly burnt, but was improving before I left. It seems quite probable that the stove which is reputed to have been the cause of the fire at the Trubanaman hospital was also the cause of this fire. Whilst I was at the mission, a party of ex-mission men came to see me. These men had run away just at the time that the hard work has to be done for planting the crops. Now that the crops have grown and are being eaten, they requested to be received back. It seemed to be most undesirable that they should be put on the same footing as those who had remained. It was finally decided that they would not be received back on the old terms, but must use their own initiative in getting their livelihood to a much greater extent than they had done previously. They were offered help in erecting good houses for each one; a piece of ground for their own garden, within the area now cultivated for mission use, and all seeds, etc., necessary for planting, and sufficient meat every Saturday for their Sunday supplies; but they had to stop fighting and other evil practices that they had adopted. In this way they will be raised above the camp men who have never been on the mission, but will not share all the privileges of mission boys. I was glad to find that practically all the children on the reserve are now at the school; even the camp people who had previously been very shy about leaving their children, have got over their fear of the mission, and leave their children at school in return for a small portion of tobacco every week.

J. W. Chapman had visited the Edward River tribe again. These people seem to be an exceptionally fine tribe. Now that the mission is out of debt, I hope that a suitable layman may be found, who, by taking charge of the work that J. W. Chapman does at the mission, will release him, and thus allow him to spend much more time with these Edward River people.

After leaving the Mitchell, I called at Aurukun and Mapoon, reaching Thursday Island on July 17th, a fortnight later than I had expected.

The "Oituli" had already been in to Thursday Island for me, as I was expected to get out to some confirmations in the western group of Islands. On the 19th she returned again with her master on board; but there was another disappointment, for I had foolishly gone down with fever. It was not until August 2 that I was able to sail. Our first stop was at Cocoanut Island, where, on the Saturday morning, 21 persons received confirmation; amongst them were some candidates from Warraber Island. The whole population from this Island had come over to the service; then, after inspecting the proposed sight for the new church, which is to replace the one destroyed in March last, we left for Darnley Island. We reached Darnley at dusk, and thoughtlessly sent our baggage ashore first. Those who had come down to sing us welcome could see the dinghy, but could not tell who or what was in it, so the luggage received a great welcome, much to the amusement of the welcomers when they realised their mistake; but this effort did not make any difference to the heartiness of our welcome later on.

On the Sunday morning the foundation stone for the new Baptistry was laid with all due ceremony, and in the evening confirmation was given. On the Monday a visit was paid to Stephens Island, and as this was my first visit, decorations were up, and all the village was out to welcome us. Instead of the usual practice of carrying passengers ashore through the surf, the dinghy with passengers was carried up the beach. When handshaking was all over we had an opportunity of walking across this very pretty island. The main road is only a little over $\frac{1}{4}$ of a mile in length, but on each side is a row of cannas which must look very beautiful when they are all out, especially as I am told that there are many different colours. The people here appreciate their flower gardens, and many flowers and flowering shrubs were in bloom. After evensong and confirmation, a present was made of necklaces, shells, etc. It was 1 a.m. before we got back to Darnley, our return journey had to be accomplished after dark and against the wind, so that I think we were fortunate in only hitting the reef once; this seemed a very nasty bump to me, but the captain called it just "touching edge of reef as we go over," and he ought to know. Later in the day we left on our return journey to Thursday Island.

CATHEDRAL BRANCH, G.F.S.

The G.F.S. anniversary was duly held on the 22nd June, and was a pronounced success. The members made their corporate communion early in the morning, when there was a large attendance, and we believe that all who could joined in that service. They attended evensong, at which service a dozen new members were admitted, some of whom had been waiting a long time for an opportunity; the simple admission ceremony in the beautiful church was impressive of the usefulness of religious observances in the ordinary activities of life. The members then had their tea together in the Parish Institute, and at that function showed their skill and readiness in housekeeping. Afterwards they held a social evening, to which they invited their friends, who were numerous enough to fill the hall nicely; and we understand that the guests enjoyed the evening well.

COOKTOWN NOTES..

Cooktown has just been celebrating its jubilee. According to this event, we must date its opening to 1873. A brief sketch of the church's work from its inception may not be out of place in these notes.

In May, 1874, the Rev. W. Kildaht, Incumbent of Townsville, visited Cooktown and held Divine Service in the Police Barracks. Arising out of this service, a meeting was held for the continuation of the work. A committee was formed to organise and consolidate the work. An application was made to the Bishop of Sydney, that the Rev. F. Tripp, "who recently arrived from the Copperfields," be appointed to take the oversight of Cooktown. This appointment was never made as the applicant died on 20th May, 1874. The Bishop of Sydney wrote about this time, saying that it was very difficult to procure any assistance whatever.

The Committee maintained its interest, and purchased the present site of the church. Some building was purchased and removed to the site during the same year, and utilised as a temporary church.

A Sunday School was inaugurated which had an attendance of sixty pupils. The temporary building was also used as a public school.

Mr. C. Powell presented a bell to the church, presumably the same bell which hangs in the tower at present. The committee made the purchase of an organ in Sydney in the same year.

In February, 1875, the Rev. Richard Eva arrived from Sydney to take over the parish. During his incumbency a splendid lot of work was accomplished. In May, plans and specifications were drawn up, and tenders called for the erection of a church. A tender of £300 was accepted. In July the church was completed, and opened for Divine Services. The event was marked by a public tea meeting.

In October, 1875, the Rev. Canon O'Reilly visited the parish, and held a week's mission.

When the building of the church was completed, the committee set to work to raise funds for the erection of a rectory. Their efforts were so successful that the tender of Mrs. J. Clum for £393 15s. was accepted, and the vicar and his bride took up their residence in January, '76. The debt was liquidated during the year, and the property was enclosed with a fence. During this year the parish was honoured by a visit from the Lord Bishop of Sydney.

The Rev. R. Eva resigned the parish in January, '78, and accepted the parish of Maryborough.

In 1887 an addition to the church, including a sanctuary, greatly improved the comfort and appearance of the building.

From '75-23 there has been twenty incumbents; eighteen of whom accepted other livings; one died during his incumbency, but the continuity of the Church's work has never been broken.

The first recorded baptism in the parish was on May 8, 1875; the first marriage in 1879, although it is known that marriages were celebrated previous to this date, no record can be found.

The fabric of the church is in good repair; the rectory is showing some signs of wear and tear, but interest has always been maintained to keep the buildings in good order.

The S.S. Picnic this year was a great success from every point of view. The practical response from the residents was better than in former years, although we have lost so many families during the past two years.

A Girls' Communicant Guild has been successfully established, and they are working with a will to hold a sale of work at the end of the year. A monthly corporate communion and attendance at a preparation class is one of the principles of the Guild.

The vicar spent a week touring the tin fields during August, but few residents remain. The vacated homesteads and dilapidated fences and gates are evidence of hopes frustrated.

The doors of the North are open for a large influx of population.

CARPENTARIAN ASSOCIATION.

This Association in England continues to do very useful and helpful work for the diocese. Their work does not consist in purely money-raising, but in getting people interested enough in the diocese to pray for us and our needs. During the year, Rev. E. J. Nash, who is now living in England, has been speaking for us; also Rev. W. H. Abbot, who, though he never actually worked in the diocese, must know some of the conditions of church life here, as he was working for a short time in the diocese of Brisbane, and later worked in New Guinea. It is not easy to find people in England who have any knowledge of these parts for clergy from here very rarely go to England to settle. The association sent £240 to the diocese during the last twelve months, some of this money is used for the maintenance of the Cowal Creek mission, for which the association bears the total costs; the chief one being, of course, the salary paid to Satraika (Shadrach) the Torres Straits Islander, who is school teacher and evangelist there. He gets all the aboriginal children to his school daily, and has been partly instrumental in getting one man to surrender one of his three wives. There are some Mothers' Unions in England whose support for the diocese through the association is very regular. They will be glad to hear that the Mothers' Union at Thursday Island is very flourishing, as are those also on the Islands at S. Paul's, Moa; Mabuiag and Darnley; on the latter Island there was such delay in getting the badges for the Mothers' Union that the mothers made their own.

A medical officer who visited Cowal Creek sometime before the Church undertook any work there visited the Mission there in August not six months after its inauguration. He was very much struck with the change that had come over the natives; their features seemed to have changed; they no longer showed an expression of hopelessness as they had done previously, he saw some signs of intelligence, and a desire to improve themselves. He remarked upon the cleanliness of the natives and the signs of industry that he saw. Satraika impressed him. He showed the qualities of leadership, which he had not seen when Satraika was training under him in the hospital, especially he noticed his determination that he should be obeyed by the Cowal Creek inhabitants.

We are grateful to the congregations of the following Churches who remembered this diocese on St. Barnabas' Day:—Bearsted; Canterbury, St. George's, St. Gregory's, St. Mildred's; Chislehurst, The Annunciation; Eastbourne, Parish Church; Elham, St. Mary's; Folkestone, Holy Trinity; Forest School; Fulford; Glastonbury; Highbury, St. John's Hall; Hull, St. Mary's; Sealecoates, St. Michael's, St. Paul's; Hythe; Lechhampton, St. Philip and St. James; Liverpool, St. Peter's Chapel; London, Christ Church, Woburn Square; Louth; Maidstone, Holy Trinity Maisemore; Manchester, St. Anne's; Malvern, Priory Church; Malvern Link; Newcastle Cathedral; Oswestry; Reading, All Saints, St. Mary's; St. Boniface College, Warminster; St. Peter's-in-Thames; Scarborough, St. Mary's; Seaforth; St. Mary's, Waldron, Wokingham; Wyburnbury and S.S. Peter and Paul, Farningham.

NOTES.

Two students of St. Paul's College, Moa, will be sitting for their Deacon's examination in December.

Rev. W. H. MacFarlane with his wife and family left on August 17 for furlough, and will be returning in December.

We regret that Miss Hempstead has left Yam Island. She has returned to the Taroom Aboriginal Settlement at the urgent request of those at Taroom.

The "Holly" does get a smooth passage across the Gulf sometimes; on her second visit this year to Thursday Island she had an excellent run.

A new Short History of this diocese will be printed in the near future, with it there will be a supplement containing a brief account of the Cathedral and things of interest in it.

At the last Diocesan Council meeting it was decided to increase the grant made to the parish of Cooktown. This was needed owing to the decrease in population in this town.

Visions of what might have been the present state of the North of Australia come before us on reading Logan Jack's book, "Northernmost Australia." He tells us that Captain Cook formally took possession of New South Wales for Britain in 1770, when he planted the flag on the highest point of Possession Island. In 1895 another pioneer and explorer, Mr. Embley, landed on Possession Island and observed a quartz reef containing visible gold. He traced this reef to the highest point of the Island and sunk the first shaft, where Captain Cook had planted the British flag over 100 years before. About 2480 ozs. of gold were got on Possession Island. If Captain Cook had observed the gold, would there have been a Botany Bay, and would the South of Australia be the part that was developed first?

We commend an appeal that is being made for money by the Queensland Missions to Seamen, for the purpose of building an institute in Brisbane; that port has increased its business very largely during the last few years, and the local buildings of the mission are inadequate. Such institutes are greatly appreciated by seamen, who gladly acknowledge the benefits of them—religious, moral and social. Of course Brisbane is a long way from us, but if our port had need of a branch of the mission, it would be served from the Brisbane branch, and in any case the benefit of one port extends to all the seamen from other ports using it. Our own South Sea Home provides an institute for the majority of the seamen who stay in this port. We understand that donations will be received by the Mayor; the vicar will be glad to acknowledge donations sent to him.

It is of interest to our readers to know that the diocesan accounts contain a Cathedral Building Fund, which had to be started because a donation was received for that express purpose. Donations are sure to be received from time to time, and will be very welcome. Although we are bound to say that there is no immediate prospect of expending the money, the completion of the edifice must be undertaken some day, and that will be a glad day for many of us.

BOOKS RECEIVED.

VOLUNTARY CLERGY.—ROLAND ALLEN. S.P.C.K. 87 pp.

The author advocates the ordination of men who will receive no stipend and maintain themselves, not merely as a relief for the present dearth of candidates, but as more in accordance with the New Testament.

The argument is feelingly stated, and contains sufficient truth to be dangerous. The church is very old and (self-criticism notwithstanding) very wise, and in her wisdom has decided that her servants shall be under her control by having no position in life but that which they get from her. The author leaves untouched the most insistent difficulty in voluntary work, namely, that a worker may cease at his own whim, without any disgrace or other loss to himself; in Australia we are familiar with this aspect of the question, not in the ranks of the clergy, but, e.g., among the honorary lay readers; some of whom have done fearful harm either by apostasy or contumacy, just because the church had no real control over them. The instance at p. 37 of a man who refused holy orders except with the condition that he was to be independent of the Ordinary appeals to us as a sufficient proof that the candidate was unsuitable.

Vocation is to work; "work which now falls upon one man . . . could easily be performed by two or three or four men, all of whom could earn their own living"; or by thirty or forty; doubtless it could, but it would not.

We are convinced that not a few of our readers will be surprised that the author has never heard of a man being ploughed in a bishop's exam. for the best reason of all; our own experience has been very different. The inexperience of young clergymen, from which they are supposed never to recover, is exaggerated; while resident in a university college, did they all keep their eyes shut? At the minimum age for ordination, any man is old enough to have made up his mind, and those who have not been ordained young have also made up their minds, they have chosen not to be ordained.

While it is true that nearly all clergymen live of the gospel, as the Lord hath ordained, it is also true that the majority of Australian clergymen have formerly followed some other occupation, and that they had no temptation to enter the sacred ministry as a means of livelihood, for many of them give up hundreds of pounds a year in order to follow their vocation; one man known to us receives in stipend just one-fourth of the sum he would earn as a layman.

There seems to be some confusion between vocation to service and vocation to the particular service of holy orders, but just such men as are described on p. 50 as "naturally not ordained" are in holy orders in this diocese.

The inarticulate cry of the pioneers especially moves us, but no remedy is suggested for it; if they came knocking at a bishop's door as suggested p. 68, which is just what they will not do, they would not be like the people who are said to have knocked ceremonially demanding baptism, for these produced their candidates. Where is the author going to get his candidates for a self-supporting clergy? That is the rock which will wreck his plan.

We venture to suggest another remedy; let the church demand not less sacrifice or none, but more, and emphasize the revival of the religious life for men; there are signs that our own country is awakening to the value of celibate orders within the clergy; if they increase sufficiently in numbers, almost the whole of the problems stated in this book, which are painfully familiar to us, would be solved.

F. W. S.

SOME ASPECTS OF CONTEMPORARY GREEK THOUGHT.—Dr. Frank Gavin. The Hale Lectures, 1922. Milwaukee, Morehouse Pub. Co., London, A. R. Mowbray & Co., xxxiv., 430 pp.

A work for which we are grateful as helping us to understand Eastern Christianity; "throughout history it has been the bane of Christianity that neither (Eastern nor Western) has succeeded in understanding the other." As we read we wonder whether the answer to our prayers is not near, for the prospect of the restoration of unity with the East seems to grow brighter.

The field covered is so large that the Table of Contents traverses practically the whole of theology. The book is stimulating, imparting a kind of freshness to theology, since almost every christian doctrine is treated by the Greeks in ways to which we are not accustomed. Yet the clear and definite statements not only claim our respect, but reveal the underlying unity of Orthodox and Anglican thought; in the doctrine of the Visible Church, for example, we formulate almost as they, and are fundamentally opposed to the protestant sects; the same applies to the doctrines of Justification and Sanctification, which are "indebted largely to protestant contentions and the need of defining Orthodox teaching against them, for the particular character of their formulation."

One little service the author has done the student is found in his felicitous renderings of Greek words, which we often have difficulty in translating happily. And nowhere else have we seen such a clear statement of the theory of Economy, always a puzzle to the Western mind, which is apt to regard it as merely a theory that uncompromising regulations can be broken at will without blame. "The Orthodox Church is mistress of the grace of God and sovereign over the sacraments." The doctrine of Intention, on the contrary, is an instance where we naturally incline to the Orthodox as against the Roman theory; "it is sufficient that the priest act freely and with full consciousness of what he is doing."

The whole doctrine of the eucharist is dealt with very clearly; the Greek Church insists on the necessity of the Epiclesis, regarding consecration as effected in a moment immediately after the Epiclesis is said, and as remaining ineffaceable and indelible.

Naturally, we take the liveliest interest in the opinions of Orthodox theologians on the question of the validity of Anglican orders, and on reading some of them, first published only a few months ago, and on considering how much has been accomplished by the holy synods since this book went to press, we are struck by the thought that it is not for theologians to say whether reunion is possible; it is for practitioners to say that it is necessary, then the scholars' business is to find some way of making it possible.

The fruitfulness of this neglected study is illustrated by the fact that S. John Damascene provided "the sole compendium of dogmatic theology up until the seventeenth century (Palmieri)."

F.W.S.

The Church and the plain man. David J. Davies, B.A.

Spiritual Sacrifice. John S. Hart, M.A., B.Sc.

Studies in the English Reformation. Henry Lowther Clarke, D.D., D.C.L.

The Ephesian canonical writings. Arthur Vincent Green, M.A., LL.D.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS.

The Diocesan Secretary has received the following sums:—

£ s. d.			£ s. d.
For Georgetown Ch. Bdg.			From Badu	3	10 9
Fund:—Sale of material	£10	10 0	From Poid	1	15 8
J. J. Moran, Trustee ..	22	17 3	From Yam	0	10 0
For Missions in the diocese:—S. Andrew's Waterside Mission ..	40	0 0	From Yorke	0	5 6
For pensions, from Natives' Accustomable Dues	1	1 0	From Darnley ..	4	10 0
For Mossman Ch. Bdg. Fund:—From rector and wardens	86	3 9	From Sales of Books in the languages ..	0	14 0
For Gulf Car Fund, from Normanton ..	19	5 0	From Society for the Propagation of the Gospel	23	11 9
For a dinghy engine for "Herald"	2	13 0	For Mitchell River Mission: profit on cattle..	3	1 5
For A.B.M.:—Bush alms, per the bishop ..	9	4 10	Subscriptions: Bishop of Willochra	1	2 6
From Poid	1	18 6	Diocesan fees and assessments	25	9 0
From Boigu and Saibai Islands ..	0	5 3	Clergy Endowment Fund interest	30	8 11
For Torres Straits Mission:—			Christison Legacy Income	14	0 0
From Moa	4	1 7	For Bishop's House Maintenance, H. G. Simpson	10	0 0
			Diocesan Ch. Management Fund interest ..	26	4 5

SUBSCRIPTIONS TO "THE CARPENTARIAN".—Miss Trail, 10/-; Per Mrs. Greig, Mrs. Smithson, 2/6.

PARISH. or MISSION.	CHURCHES LICENSED.	Total White Population of District.	*No. of Church People Ministered to	No. of Clergymen.	No. of Lay Readers.	No. of Honorary Lay Readers.	No. of Centres at which Services are regularly held.
THURSDAY ISLAND ...	ALL SOULS' CATHEDRAL ...	320	370	1	1
COOKTOWN ...	CHRIST CHURCH ...	1000	150	1	1
†DARWIN ...	CHRIST CHURCH ... ALL SOULS' ...	450	200	1	...	2	2
MOSSMAN ...	S. DAVID'S ... S. ANDREW'S ...	500	180	1	2
NORMANTON cum CROYDON ...	S. PETER'S ... S. MARGARET'S ...	400	150
ROPER RIVER MISSION ...	S. CATHERINE'S ...	12	100	2	3	...	2
MITCHELL RIVER MISSION ..	KOWANYAMA ...	7	100	1	1	...	2
MOA MISSION ...	S. PAUL'S BETELEMA BETENAIJA ...	9	600	1	...	6	8
TOBRES STRAITS MISSION ...	S. MARY'S ... S. SAVIOUR'S... CHRIST CHURCH ... ALL SAINTS' ... S. ANDREW'S ... S. PETER'S ... (3 others)	20	2190	4	2	30	14
Totals ...		2718	4040	12	6	38	27

* Including aboriginals and aliens. † In most of the parishes, etc., some adults and children not en

PAROCH

PARISH.	RECEIPTS.
	Credit Balance from previous year.	Direct Offerings.			Indirect		From Diocesan Funds.	Miscellaneous Income	Debit balance at end of year.
		Offertory Aims	Contribu- tions	Special Efforts	Sales of Gifts	Entertain- ments
THURSDAY ISLAND ...	259	144	114	...	177	...	30	55	...
COOKTOWN ...	110	117	38	42	1	15	60
*DARWIN ...	9	155	128	...	77	36	16	...	6
MOSSMAN ...	5	72	40	...	108	13	50	7	...
NORMANTON cum CROYDON ...	165	7	9	...	17	...
Totals ...	548	495	320	42	363	73	156	79	6	20

* No returns; these are the figures of the previous year.

the Year ended 31st March, 1923.
STATISTICS.

Celebrations of Holy Communion.	Sunday School Buildings	SUNDAY SCHOOL TEACHERS.		†SUNDAY SCHOOL SCHOLARS		Average Attendance of Sunday Scholars.	No. of Communicants.	Persons Baptised.	MARRIAGES.		Burials.	PERSONS CONFIRMED.		Schools in which Religious Instruction is given.	No. of Weekday Religious Instructions	†Number of children receiving Instruction on week days.
		Men	Women	Boys	Girls				After Banns	By License		Males	Females
119	1	3	1	29	40	38	92	10	...	2	14	5	...	2	160	91
70	5	22	43	45	52	26	...	1	15	1	11	1	120	75
154	3	12	10	18	104	32	...	7	10	8	17
65	2	12	16	20	66	9	...	4	6	8	10	1	18	57
5	3	32	38	36	60	9	...	2	6
41	...	5	4	23	29	50	15	1	7	2	4	1	493	76
24	...	2	3	24	22	42	40	1	6	6	4	1	250	40
87	2	3	3	140	100	230	348	26	5	...	14	6	13	1	210	56
130	1	13	10	257	237	374	752	86	10	...	32	45	43	3	310	240
395	4	26	34	551	535	853	1529	200	15	16	110	81	102	10	1561	635

Schools receive regular instruction. † No returns; these are the figures of the previous year.

FINANCES (to the nearest pound sterling).

EXPENDITURE.										CREDIT BALANCES OTHER THAN CURENT A/C.				DEBIT BALANCES OTHER THAN CURENT A/C.
previous year	Clergyman's Stipend	Expenses of Divine Service	Diocesan Objects	Missions	Charitable Objects	Church Property	Indebtedness Reduced	Miscellaneous	Credit Balance at end of year.	Total	Building Funds	Sunday Schools	Other Items	Total	Property	Other Items	Total
..	255	56	...	14	...	256	...	10	188	779	173	5	...	178
..	274	11	2	4	...	11	...	25	56	383
..	306	56	6	42	...	17	...	427	...	4	13	17	...	18	18
..	226	11	4	8	...	11	...	34	1	295	83	83
..	4	...	11	...	1	101	117	80	80
..	1061	134	6	30	6	331	...	87	346	2001	256	9	93	358	...	18	18

1. The first part of the paper is devoted to a general discussion of the problem of the existence of solutions of the system of equations (1) for arbitrary values of the parameters α and β . It is shown that the system of equations (1) has solutions for arbitrary values of the parameters α and β if and only if the condition $\alpha + \beta = 1$ is satisfied.

2. In the second part of the paper the problem of the existence of solutions of the system of equations (1) for arbitrary values of the parameters α and β is solved.

3. In the third part of the paper the problem of the existence of solutions of the system of equations (1) for arbitrary values of the parameters α and β is solved.

4. In the fourth part of the paper the problem of the existence of solutions of the system of equations (1) for arbitrary values of the parameters α and β is solved.

5. In the fifth part of the paper the problem of the existence of solutions of the system of equations (1) for arbitrary values of the parameters α and β is solved.

Diocese of Carpentaria.

INTERCESSION PAPER

Oct., Nov., Dec., 1923.

INTERCESSIONS.

We beseech Thee to hear us, O Lord.

That it may please Thee :

- 1 That a Priest may be found to minister the scattered white population in the Gulf Country.
- 2 That a layman willing to do Missionary work will offer himself for the Mitchell River Mission.
- 3 To assist with Thy grace the students preparing for Holy Orders at S. Paul's College.
- 4 To bless the work recently undertaken at Cowal Creek and on Groote Eylandt.
- 5 To make it become possible to open up work on the Edward River and the Pascoe River.
- 6 To guard and protect the Torres Straits men who are working with the pearling and fishing fleets in all spiritual dangers.

THANKSGIVINGS.

We thank Thee and bless Thee, O Lord.

- 1 For the improvement in the spiritual life at the Mitchell River Mission.
- 2 For the faith of the unshepherded population in the Gulf Country.
- 3 For the blessings vouchsafed on new Missionary enterprises undertaken in the Diocese.

THE CARPENTARIAN

For the Diocese of Carpentaria,
North Australia

XIII., No. 93 THURSDAY ISLAND, JANUARY 1, 1924.

Price 2/6 a Year

Published on the first day of each quarter

Post Free

NOTICE.

All communications to be addressed to the Editor of The Carpentarian, Bishop's House, Thursday Island, to whom subscriptions may be sent.

The address of the Secretary for the Carpentarian Association in England is Miss Theodora Scarth, Bearsted, Kent, England.

Information can be obtained from the Bishop or from the Diocesan Secretary.

NOTICE TO CONTRIBUTORS

All contributions of Parish News, etc., should reach the Editor before the last day of February, May, August, and November in each year.

Diocese of Carpentaria.

Bishop :

RT. REV. STEPHEN HARRIS DAVIES,
Thursday Island, Queensland,
Consecrated Lady Day, 1922.

Administrator :

REV. F. W. SLADE, B.A., Th. Schol.

Sub-Dean :

REV. F. W. SLADE.

Diocesan Secretary :

REV. F. W. SLADE, Postal Address: Box 57, Thursday Island, Queensland, Australia.

Commissaries :

REV. J. JONES, M.A., All Saints', S. Kilda, Melbourne.

REV. C. B. MIRRELEES, Springhill, Maesmore, Gloucester, England.

REV. W. J. B. SCOTT, 16 Little Grosvenor Street, London, W. 1.

REV. CECIL EDWARDS, Holy Trinity Rectory Woolloongabba.

Rectors :

REV. B. S. COLE, Cooktown.

REV. I. LL. SKELTON, Darwin.

REV. F. W. SLADE, B.A., Thursday Island.

REV. E. TAPPS, Mossman.

Honorary Lay Readers :

MR. H. F. L. FINNISS, Darwin.

HIS HONOUR JUDGE ROBERTS, Darwin.

Diocesan Council :

REV. F. W. SLADE, B.A.

REV. J. J. E. DONE.

REV. W. H. MACFARLANE, Th.L.

MR. GEO. CLARK.

MR. A. SULLIVAN.

DR. VERNON.

Honorary Legal Adviser :

HIS HONOUR JUDGE MACNAUGHTON

Aboriginal Mission, Mitchell River

MR. J. W. CHAPMAN.

REV. H. MATTHEWS, J.P. (Supt.)

MRS. MATTHEWS.

MISS F. SMITH.

MRS. TRELLOGEN.

Roper River Mission :

MR. DYER.

REV. R. D. JOYNT.

REV. H. E. D. WARREN (Supt.)

MR. H. L. PERRIMAN.

MR. E. C. H. LOUSADA.

MISS CROSS.

MRS. DYER.

MISS DOVE.

Torres Straits Mission :

REV. J. J. E. DONE.

REV. W. H. MACFARLANE, Th.L.

REV. J. W. SCHOMBERG.

*REV. JOSEPH LUI.

*REV. POEY PASSI.

DEACONESS HATTON, Moa.

MISS MARY BANN, Moa.

* Native Deacons.

Cowal Creek Mission :

Supervised by the REV. J. DONE.

Teacher : SATRAIKA.

The Diocese.

The See was founded in 1900, and consists of such part of Queensland as bounded by the sea on the north and east by the Northern Territory on the west and by a line drawn from lat. S. 19d. 30min. on the western boundary Queensland due east to par. 144deg. and thence N. to lat. S. 16deg. 40min. and thence east to the sea, together with the whole of the Northern Territory, comprising an area of not less than 620,000 square miles. The population, which is very widely scattered over this immense area, consists of about 10,000 white and 5,000 Japanese, Chinese, and other aliens and 35,000 aboriginals. The white population is mainly mining and pastoral. The See town is Thursday Island, a pearl centre north of Cape York.

Finance.

The Diocese has no endowments beyond the Bishop's income of £395 per annum. Every parish needs a grant from central funds which come from subscriptions to the Diocese, and grants from English Societies.

Special Collections.

On Easter Day the offertory alms are given to the Clergyman of the Parish, and on Good Friday to the Australian Board of Missions.

THE CARPENTARIAN.

BISHOP'S LETTER.

In looking through my diary for the last three months I find that during six weeks of this period I was away from the diocese. The Bishop of North Queensland, who had been ill for some time, was compelled at last to take a rest I was glad that it was possible for me to give some time to his diocese, where the presence of a Bishop was needed for confirmations in over twenty places. A full account of my travels in the neighbouring diocese must be left for the next issue.

During this quarter confirmations have been held at Mabuiag, Darwin, Thursday Island, Boigu, and Saibai. Before leaving for my annual trip to the Northern Territory the "Herald" came to Thursday Island, and took me out to Mabuiag, here I was glad to see that a new Sunday School building had been erected, for the Church here has been giving some anxiety, the roof was moved in a cyclone some time ago, it leaks badly, and no one could be quite certain how strong it was, but as the hurricane in March last did not move it in any way, it must be stronger than was supposed, yet it is good to have another large building for use in emergency. It is in this Church that one of the lamps which is hung to a beam in the roof acts as a wind gauge this lamp is always swinging slightly, and as the wind increases so does the movement of the lamp. When this movement reaches a certain point, the Parish Priest knows that the winds at sea are too strong to put out in; when the Island boats came in, confirmation was given, and I returned to Thursday Island.

It was about this time that the Inspector for Schools was on a visit to Thursday Island, the opportunity was taken of discussing certain school matters with him, the chief being the matter of getting a High School class started, owing to our geographical position it is almost impossible for children brought up on the Island to make use of the educational advantages offered by the Government. I was also able to discuss with the Inspector the possibility of his inspecting those schools in the Islands that the Church is responsible for.

Two Sundays were spent in Darwin, but a full account of this visit appears elsewhere. This year I was able to journey overland to the Roper River Mission, holding services at Pine Creek and Maranboy as we passed through. At Emungalan I was glad to find F. Finniss in charge of the day school, he has started a Sunday School class, it is here that a priest would make his headquarters when travelling amongst the people who live outback in the Territory. I hope that you remember in your intercessions for this diocese that a priest is needed for this very rough work, for probably most of the travelling would have to be done by horse, and one would be often alone. Rev. H. E. Warren met me at Emungalan, our journey across to the Mission taking three days, the track was rough in places but no worse than some of the roads in Western Queensland. During the few days that I spent at the Mission we had a quiet day, here the children were learning some new hymns, it took a great deal of patience to get them out of the habit of revising the hymns as they sang them, one revision was:—

Oh for a face that will not shrink
Though pressed by many a foe.

I was glad to spend a few days at Groote Eylandt, the devastation made by the hurricane in March was very evident. It seemed that more than half the timber in the scrubs was lying on the ground, broken off or blown down, especially I noticed that a beautiful shady grove of nutmeg trees were all destroyed. The journey from Groote Eylandt to Thursday Island by the Holly was not of the best, the engine was running very badly, and, of course, gave up work when the sea rose at all, and the Holly never was any use as a sailing boat, so with head winds and no engine, we were moving West instead of East at times, what exactly was the matter with the engine I did not know, but Daniel, a full-blooded aboriginal from the Roper, whose work it was to swing the engine whenever it stopped, which was very often, told his mates on deck that he knew what was the matter, "Bingie belong engine humbug along kerosene." I am told his diagnosis was right. On our seventh day out from Groote Eylandt we arrived in Thursday Island.

A week later I left by the Herald for the northernmost parts of the diocese, Boigu, Saibai, and Dauan. At Saibai the foundations of the new Church have been put in, further work will be done here after the North-West. We collected the Dauan confirmees and took them over to Saibai, where altogether 54 persons received confirmation.

ST. PAUL'S, MOA.

A new roof had to be put on the Mission House at St. Paul's. This was to be fibrolite in place of the old rusty iron. Fibrolite is heavier than iron, so it was necessary to make sure that the timber in the roof would stand the extra weight. Upon examination of the house it was found that the wall plate was larger than the ground plate, this raised suspicions. A more careful examination showed other very serious defects, as for example, a space of twelve feet without a stud; there was only one thing to be done, to pull it down and rebuild, the pulling down was not hard or troublesome, when a certain amount of roof timber, etc., had been removed, the whole place collapsed on to the ground. Rev. J Schomberg is now busy rebuilding or rather building an entirely new house, whilst he is training the students at college, and caring for three village Churches.

The following is taken from the Thursday Island "Parish Gazette":—

MOA MISSION.

At one time this was frequently mentioned in these columns, being almost an appendage to this parish, but for over seven years it has had its own Resident Priest, and we have not now the same connection with it. Yet we would not have our readers forget it; it is the nearest mission to us, and is quite an active centre of spiritual work. It is the only place in Australia where men of the Australoid races can be trained for holy orders, an essential part of Church work. The population has more than doubled, and this year eleven of the men have formed a registered firm and chartered a ship in which they are now searching for beche-de-mer and trochus shell. The mission house which had become ruinous is now being rebuilt. Plans are in hand for erecting a new Church of large size to be built of ashlar work, the present building being inadequate. There are many signs of steady progress.

THE CIRCUMCISION.

Cardinal Newman, when he was Vicar of St. Mary's Church, Oxford, that is in the days when he was still in the Anglican communion, preached sermons full of instruction for Christian people; the following are some quotations from his sermon preached on the Feast of the Circumcision, in which he tries to persuade people to be careful to observe all the ceremonies of the Church.

When Our Lord came to John to be baptised, He gave this reason for it, "Thus it becometh us to fulfil all righteousness," which seems to mean—"It is becoming in Me, the expected Christ, to conform in all respects to all the rites and ceremonies of Judaism, to everything hitherto accounted sacred and binding." . . . It was on this account that He was circumcised We sometimes meet with men, who ask why we observe these or those ceremonies or practices; why, for example, we use Forms of Prayer so cautiously and strictly? or why we persist in kneeling at the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper? why in bowing at the name of Jesus? why we lay such stress on these things? These and many such questions may be asked and all with this argument: "They are indifferent matters; we do not read of them in the Bible." Now the direct answer to this objection is, that the Bible was never intended to enjoin us these things, but matters of faith; and that though it happens to mention our practical duties, and some points of form and discipline, still, that it does not set about telling us what to do, but chiefly what to believe; and that there are many duties and many crimes which are not mentioned in Scripture, and which we must find out by our own understanding, enlightened by God's Holy Spirit. For instance, there is no prohibition of suicide, duelling, gambling, in Scripture; yet we know them to be great sins; and it would be no excuse in a man to say that he does not find them forbidden in Scripture, because he may discover God's will in this matter independently of Scripture. Matters of faith, indeed, God reveals to us by inspiration, because they are supernatural; but matters of moral duty, through our own conscience and divinely-guided reason; and matters of form, by tradition and long usage, which bind us to the observance of them, though they are not enjoined in Scripture. This is the proper answer to the question, "Why do you observe rites and forms which are not enjoined in Scripture?" But I shall make another answer which is suggested by Our Lord's conforming to the Jewish Law in the rite of circumcision. Scripture tells us what to believe, and what to aim at and maintain, but it does not tell us how to do it; and as we cannot do it in this manner, or that, in fact, we must add something to what Scripture tells us. For example, Scripture tells us to meet together for prayer, but since it does not tell us the times and places of prayer, the Church must complete that which Scripture has enjoined generally.

THE DANGER OF UNREALITY.

There is a great danger in our religious services to fall into the bad habit so common in every day life, of using expressions and words without bothering to be careful to see that we mean exactly that which they say. For instance when one hears a large congregation singing that popular hymn of John Newton's "How sweet the Name of Jesus sounds," the thought flashes through one's mind, if all those singing this hymn really mean what they are saying, why is it that so much evil still exists in everyday life? The use of unreal expressions is a great offence against truth, and it is to be hoped that in any Prayer Book revision we may be guarded against being asked to use expressions that may be unreal to careless worshippers. Percy Dearmer says that "it was a vice of the sixteenth century to combine heartless crime with hearty words of penitence," and we have inherited phrases from the sixteenth century which we use in expressing our repentance. Such words as "the remembrance of them is grievous unto us; the burden of them is intolerable," is not always true in the mouths of a general congregation; do members find the burden of their sins committed since the previous Sunday intolerable? The prelude to Matins and Evensong encourages this unreality even more, this was noticed by John Ruskin 40 years ago, when he wrote, "Nothing in the various inconsistency of human nature is more grotesque than its willingness to be taxed with any quantity of sins in the gross, and its resentment at the smallest parcel of them in detail. And the English Liturgy, evidently drawn up with the amiable intention of making religion as pleasant as possible to a people desirous of saving their souls with no great degree of personal inconvenience is perhaps in no point more unwholesomely lenient than in its concession to the popular conviction that we may obtain the present advantage, and escape the future punishment, of any sort of iniquity, by dexterously concealing the manner of it from man, and triumphantly confessing the quantity of it to God. . . . Among the much rebuked follies and abuses of so-called 'Ritualism,' none that I have heard of are, indeed, so dangerously and darkly 'Ritual' as the piece of authorised mockery of the most solemn act of human life, and only entrance of eternal life—Repentance."

NEW CHURCH AT SAIBAI.

For a little more than a year the people of Saibai in Torres Strait have been making preparations by gathering stones and burning lime for the building of their new Church. A good lime is made from lumps of coral taken off the reefs which abound in Torres Strait. The coral is first dried, then put on piles of firewood, which have been placed in a large shallow hole, and when all is ready, the kiln thus made is fired.

In October of this year, a definite start was made with the actual building by putting in the foundations. For a week, work was fast and furious. Labour was voluntary, but over sixty men—every available man—came to work, in fact a lot of women wished to help as well, and gave a hand carrying stone. We were fortunate in getting a stone bottom in our trenches, which were mostly between three or four feet deep.

One man was appointed overseer, and he divided the workers into gangs. Four canoes were requisitioned for more stone, and their crews leaving home long before daylight, came in all day laden with stone, returning for more as soon as they had discharged their cargoes. Another gang was sent to the kiln for lime (others again were employed in mixing the mortar), which they carried to the site of operations in large baskets, while the rest made the excavations, and, in due course, filled the trenches with stone and mortar.

(From Brisbane "Daily Mail," by arrangement with the proprietors).
HUMPY.

Old style of residence at Cowal Creek,

At the close of the day the conch shell was blown as a signal to knock off, and the people assembled, as they were, on the grass for Evensong. Of course, all were tired at the end of the week, and all through the work was arduous under a blazing sun, but it has never been my lot to work with such a willing and good tempered crowd.

After the Nor'-west season, the foundations will be topped off and the walls of the building commenced, and it is hoped that in a year or two, the new Church, "Holy Trinity," will be ready for dedication, especially as the necessary money is in hand for the roof and windows.

—J. D.

COWAL CREEK.

Some 17 miles to the south of Cape York, emptying itself into the Endeavour Strait is a small stream locally known as "Small River," but marked on the map "Cowal Creek." At the mouth of this creek is a settlement of aboriginals, numbering in all some 150. They appear to be the remnants of the tribes who once inhabited the extreme north of the Cape York Peninsula. Some have come from Newcastle Bay on the East Coast, and are undoubtedly descended from the tribes who killed the explorer Kennedy in 1848, and some have come from Mt. Adolphus, that table topped island seen by steamer passengers as they round the most northerly point of the continent, on their way to Thursday Island and the East.

Little seems to have been done for these people either from an educational or religious point of view, although they are practically within sight of Thursday Island, and are in constant communication with that place, but a certain cast of feature and discolouration of skin proclaims the fact of the white man's propinquity.

In April last a definite start was made by the Anglican Church and a mission established. A party visited the settlement, erected a stringy bark house, planted some coconuts, and placed a full-blooded Torres Strait islander in charge. He will carry on under the direction of one of the priests of the Torres Strait mission. This islander daily holds school for the 17 children available, and is endeavouring to impart some of his own knowledge of gardening and aptitude for work, as well as to instill into the minds of his flock something of the principles of religion.

The people own a "company" cutter in which they are expected to work for pearlshell and other products of the sea, and this cutter is

DWELLING.

The beginning of civilised building at Cowal Creek.

manned and captained by themselves. They have much to learn however, but it is hoped that the day is not far distant when they can be trusted to work as regularly and as well as do their neighbours in the island of the Torres Strait. A goodly number of young men are "signed on" to work in the pearling or bech-de-mer luggers of Thursday Island, and by this means are able to support some at least of the inhabitants of the settlement.

Fish, wild yams, and game abound, so that there is every reason to expect these people to be entirely self-supporting. The Church is responsible for the teacher and his salary, but school materials are provided by the Government through its Aboriginal Department.

The local Protector has made few but reasonable regulations, and has wisely substituted a period of reproductive work in place of useless fines as a punishment for ordinary misdemeanours.

THE CATHEDRAL PARISH.

The town has sustained a heavy bereavement by the passing of Annie Dunwoodie, at the age of 52 years, a very faithful Christian and a citizen whom it will be most difficult to replace. She has been a good friend during many years to very many in the town, and was always a strong influence for righteousness. Widowed very young, she overcame the difficulties of that situation in a manner that earned respectful affection and admiration; her two sons both returned from the war and are with us, her daughter passed away some two years since. Most of the people have a feeling of personal loss at her departure from us, and the sympathy all express with her family is heartfelt.

Our dedication festival is observed on the first Sunday in October, but does not yet attract much attention. We hope that it will become more attractive each year, and that all will be glad to join in praying for a blessing on the parish and in thanking God for the work it has done for Him on the souls of its people. We notice that this old and widespread custom of the Church of England, recommended by the Convocation in the sixteenth century and by the Lambeth Conference fifty years ago, is likely to be ordered in the revised Prayer Book, which we may expect to be authorised shortly. There is a practical convenience in all parishes keeping their local festival on the same day, and on a day which comes at a suitable time in the Christian year.

The Parish societies, namely, the Mothers' Union, the Girls' Friendly Society and the Quetta Club, have now gone into recess in expectation of the early arrival of the rains, and are to resume their meetings next Easter. Our branch of the Girls' Friendly Society has been specially active in social matters this year, and has held quite a number of evenings to which the members invited their own friends, sometimes to assist in raising money for various objects, sometimes purely for social purposes.

The requiem which is said annually on November 2nd, and which it is specially our duty to offer as we are a memorial church, and with the dedication, All Souls is observed with steadily increasing interest, and the friends of the departed are grateful for it.

With the advice of the Parochial Church Council, the English Hymnal is being introduced, having been used for the first time on Christmas Day. The advantages of the new book have been carefully explained to the people, as well as the reason for publishing new collections of hymns from time to time, and the musical methods which should be used in hymn tunes. We expect that the services will be more hearty, and more expressive of the devotion of the worshippers, with the aid of this book.

Extensive repairs have been effected to the South Sea Home, including new cement piles throughout; it was a long time since much work had been done at this building, and decay is rapid in the tropics, so that repairs were necessary to preserve the structure from ruin. The cost of this work does not fall on the parish, as the building is used for diocesan purposes.

The parish institute has been completed by the addition of its veranda, which was part of the original design, when the building was erected in 1903, and which improves it greatly for parish gatherings. The whole now needs painting, and it is hoped that will be done before the wet season sets in hard. The vicarage has been thoroughly painted, and all the property is now in good order.

On November 22nd, a Cafe Chantant was held in the church grounds, to raise money for building funds, and the gross proceeds were above £106. The institute veranda served as a concert platform, and the audience found it much pleasanter to listen to music while seated at refreshment tables in the open air than crowded in a heated hall. Between musical items, coffee and ices were served to the patrons by a band of willing helpers, there was a sweets kiosk and other side shows, boxing booth and fish pond. Our best thanks are tendered to all the helpers, and all are specially grateful to the concert party, who made the evening an artistic success with vocal and instrumental music. On these occasions, much hard work is done by men and women who have plenty else to do, and who help cheerfully. In accordance with the custom of the diocese, nothing like gambling is indulged in, and at these functions all the patrons manage to enjoy themselves without that excitement.

INDENTED LABOUR.

In the Thursday Island "Daily Pilot" for Wednesday, November 11, 1923, the following item of news was reported:—

Hobart, Tuesday.—Asserting that thousands of Japanese are in North Queensland, and that they are every week becoming more arrogant, Mr. Ford, the Queensland delegate, moved at the Returned Soldiers' and Sailors' Congress to-day, that in view of the present situation at Thursday Island in regard to Japanese, the Federal Government be requested to take over the island as a federal territory, to maintain a garrison there, and to keep there permanently one war vessel. . . . The congress passed the motion unanimously.

It does seem most unfortunate that speakers who have the power of Mr. Ford, are not more careful in their statements, for one feels sure that such a resolution would not have been passed unanimously if the true facts were known.

The latest figures in regard to the indented labour in North Queensland in October of this year are:—

Japanese and Malays, 541, and Papuans, 190, a total of 731. Since these figures were published some of this indented labour has been returned to its own country, there are not even one thousand Japanese in North Queensland. The next point is that it is doubtful if any inhabitants of Thursday Island, white or coloured, desire a Commonwealth war vessel permanently established in this port. H.M.A.S. Geranium has twice caused a disturbance when in port, whereas H.M.S. Fantome, which has been in port here much more often, has caused no disturbance, so one says if any war vessel, let us have one not manned by an Australian crew.

There is a further point, that Mr. Ford, with the whole of this congress, desire to hand over Thursday Island to the very authority that is bringing about the state of affairs that is being complained of; the White Australia policy is being broken by allowing labour to be indented into the North, such labour can only be indented by the permission of the Federal Minister, it is not the Queensland State Government that wants this indented labour, but it is forced to receive it by the Federal Government. The compulsion that is put upon the Queensland State Government to accept this indented labour causes that Government great trouble and expense, for there is a large Aboriginal population in North Queensland, which has to be protected by the Queensland State at the cost of the Queensland State taxpayers from the evils arising out of indented labour: for example, the Queensland State Government assists the Aborigines to become self-supporting by helping them to own and work their own pearling luggers, there are plenty of pearl shell beds where the depths are not more than eight or nine fathoms, these beds can be worked with ease by the Aboriginal, but he gets very little chance, for the indented labour cleans these beds up before going to those of greater depth, which cannot be worked by the Aboriginal, thus the native population has great difficulty in maintaining itself, and certainly has nothing left over to help the Queensland Government to bear the cost of maintaining their schools; this is one instance, another would be that the white pearler prefers even Papuan labour to Aboriginal labour, not because it is better, but because he can get seven days' work a week out of the Papuan, and certainly the Islander refuses to work unnecessarily on a Sunday.

There is yet a further reason why those who wish to see the Aboriginal given fair and just treatment, do not want the Federal Government to have any power over the Aboriginal. This seems to be a very hard judgment on the ability of the Federal Government to administer justly and fairly where the Aboriginal is concerned, especially as the Federal Government is the authority in this country which has pledged itself to care for the Child races. This pledge was given in common with other nations after the great war, it is honoured by its breach by Federal Ministers. The following quotation from the report of the Administrator of the Northern Territory for the year ended June 30, 1922, and printed and published by command of the Government of the Commonwealth of Australia, will shew how much the Commonwealth Government is prepared to guard and protect the child race in its territory:—

ABORIGINES.

“Wherever it can be done without danger or serious inconvenience to neighbouring white residents, I am of opinion that it is best to as much as possible leave aboriginals alone to lead their own free and natural lives until, if it is really desired to attempt their civilization, efficient agencies for the purpose are organized and set in motion.

In regard to the half-caste side of the question, the discreditable fact cannot be ignored that the number of halfcastes in the Territory is increasing, and so far as can be seen, must inevitably for many years yet continue to increase. I can conceive of no legislation less drastic than such as would be intolerable to any Australian community that would be effective in putting an end to the present prevailing miscegenation, and since this cannot be stopped, it only remains to do the best possible for the unfortunate products of it.

With this end in view, I have been collecting information and making personal enquiries the results of which embodied in a report will have reached you before this report is published.” Evidently the child race in the Northern Territory is the White race who need protection from the Aborigine.

When one compares this statement of policy accepted by the Commonwealth Government, and compares it with the following quotation taken from the "Australasian" for September 22, 1923, it is easy to understand why it is to be hoped that the Federal Government will not be placed in a position in North Queensland to undo the work that is being done by the Queensland Government now.

QUEENSLAND ABORIGINES.

It is interesting to mark from year to year the official view of the condition of the aborigines. Popularly it is supposed that they are fast passing away, and that it will not be long before their requiem has to be sung. Compared with their former numbers, certainly they have grown few, but a good many remain, and the chief protector is of opinion that there is no reason why the remnant should not be preserved, and become gradually larger. The estimated aboriginal population is now 17,000, and while some of those in the far north remain almost in their natural state, most others are gathered in reserves or under the wing of missions, which carefully look after them. Government supervision is constant and comprehensive, and as far as possible they are kept from contact with those debasing influences which spell disease and death to them. In an interesting way the problem whether the race can be saved from extinction is being solved. Mr. J. W. Bleakley, in his last report, says definitely that contrary to common belief, the blacks are not dying out fast. On the contrary, he points out, during the last three years, the births have exceeded the deaths. "This improved vitality," he adds, "is particularly noticeable on the self-contained reserves, where the native is segregated from the evils to which, if the popular prophecy is to be fulfilled, their extinction will be due. It is not inevitable that they should die out. The evidence does not support such a conclusion sufficiently to justify treating their case with indifference. . . . It has been demonstrated beyond dispute that, placed in conditions where they are afforded protection and given a reasonable chance of self-support, they can readily adapt themselves to better social conditions, and be trained towards a partial, if not complete, self dependence." That is important evidence. Mr. Bleakley is continually in contact with the aborigines, and he is able to judge the results of segregation, and a mild educational process without any attempt to force upon them a civilisation for which as yet they are unfit. On this work the State spends about £41,000 a year, and, on the whole, seems to be getting good value for the money. At least to some extent atonement is being made for the neglect and cruelty of earlier days.

And yet this Queensland State Government has never pledged itself to the other nations of the world to care for the child races. It is a humane government trying to do its best for the peoples who come under its care, facing boldly this problem of how to deal with its Aboriginal population, only hampered, as far as one can see from Thursday Island, by the Commonwealth Government.—S. C.

NOTES.

Rev. F. W. Slade was appointed by the Bishop to be Administrator of the Diocese in his absence. Appointment made October 23, 1923.

Mrs. Trellogen left the Mitchell River Mission in October, 1923.

Mr. J. E. Wainwright was appointed and licensed as lay-missionary at the Mitchell River Mission, November 25th, 1923. We welcome Mr. Wainwright to the Diocese and hope that he will be able to do many years of work here.

Rev. W. H. and Mrs. MacFarlane with their family left on furlough in the middle of August, and returned to Thursday Island early in December, where their cutter "Oituli" was awaiting them. They discovered, however, that she had "no passenger accommodation," being fully occupied by throngs of those insects which take possession of every vacant ship in these waters with industrious speed, and in incredible multitudes; however, little things like that don't matter much in these latitudes. The fumigation was soon complete, and Mr. MacFarlane sailed her for Darnley on the 14th December, to arrive in plenty of time to prepare for Christmas.

Rev. R. Joynt, with his adopted son, T. Hampton, returned from the South in October, and left later for the Roper River.

H. L. Perriman left for the South in November. H. L. Perriman with E. Lousada was living on Groote Eyelandt at the time of the hurricane.

Deaconess Hatton left in November on furlough, during her absence the school at St. Paul's will be carried on by Mary Bann, with assistance from College students. Jack Done went South on the same boat as the Deaconess, but it will be many months before he returns North. He will enter King's School, Parramatta, next year. This has been made possible through the Governours of King's School placing a Bursary at the disposal of the Bishop of Carpentaria for the son of any clergyman working in his diocese.

A benefaction to be known as the Florence Smith Benefaction has been given to the diocese. Whilst this money is to be used especially for the benefit of James Lay, son of Jack Geibo, and Seisan, daughter of Samwell, some of the money may, if the Bishop thinks fit, be used to assist a Mitchell River Mission boy through his college course at Moa.

THE UNUTTERABLE BEAUTY.

By G. A. STUDDERT-KENNEDY.

God give me speech, in mercy touch my lips,
 I cannot bear Thy beauty and be still,
 Watching the red gold majesty that tips
 The crest of yonder hill,
 And out to sea smites on the sails of ships,
 That flame like sudden stars across the deep,
 Calling their silver comrades from the sky,
 As long and ever longer shadows creep,
 To sing their lullaby,
 And soothe the tired eyes of earth to sleep.
 Thy radiance of glory strikes me dumb,
 Yet cries within my soul for power to raise
 Such miracles of music, as would seem
 Thy splendour in a phrase,
 (And store it safe for all the years to come.
 O God Who givest songs too sweet to sing,
 Have mercy on Thy servant's feeble tongue
 In sacrificial silence sorrowing,
 And grant that songs unsung,
 Accepted at Thy Mercy Seat, may bring
 New light into the darkness of sad eyes,
 New tenderness to stay the stream of tears,
 New rainbows from the sunshine of surprise,
 To guide men down the years,
 Until they cross the last long bridge of sighs.

—The Churchman.

A BANKER ON MISSIONS.

The director in China of the International Banking Consortium, Mr. F. W. Stevens, lecturing before the Pekin Union Medical College, paid an unexpected and earnest tribute to Christian missions. Mr. Stevens said that he was not speaking as a religious man and his remarks were the first he had made publicly on a religious subject, but that they were the reflection of a business man deeply interested in China. He said he wished to put some questions to the critics of Christian missionaries, as follows:—

Do you know of anything more repulsive in human form than Chinese beggar women, and do you know that it is educated Christian missionary women who are little by little getting them and their children off the streets, and getting them into a self-supporting condition? . . . Do you know that about 85 per cent. of China's exports are products of the soil; and that Christian mission institutions are doing nearly all that is being done at all for their economic as well as their spiritual and social welfare? Do you know that the modern system of education in China began with the work of the Chinese mission teachers, and that modern medicine was mediated to China by Christian medical missionaries? . . . Do you know that the building up of the nursing profession in China is at the present time almost entirely in the hands of missionaries and of Christianized Chinese? . . . Do you know that although leprosy has existed in China from time immemorial, the first lepers' hospital was established by a missionary society? . . . Do you know of a single organized activity in China, on a scale of importance, that aims at moral improvement, or that is calculated to bring it about, and that is not traceable in its origin to the Christian missions? I have been inquiring among all kinds of people, from many parts of China, without finding one; and the failure to find one has made a deep impression upon me.

—The Churchman.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS.

The diocesan secretary has received the following sums:—

Diocesan fees	3	13	6
Natives' Accustomable Dues	1	15	0
From the Carpentarian Association	200	0	0
From Walter and Eliza Hall Trust—
Sustentation	75	0	0
Children's Bursaries	30	0	0
Interest, Diocesan Church Management Fund	7	18	0
For A.B.M., from Mabuiag	0	10	0
from Mossman	3	12	8
For a dinghy engine for "Herald," per S.P.G.	22	15	0
For Torres Straits Mission, per S.P.C.	0	16	9
From Darnley	0	8	0
From Murray	6	12	3
From Moa	5	2	7
From Badu	4	1	3
From Poid	0	10	4
From Yam	2	0	0
From the Lord Bishop, donation	25	0	0
For Mossman Church Building Fund, from the Lord Bishop, donation	10	0	0
For native students, income Morrison money	23	2	0

Subscriptions to "The Carpentarian": Mrs. Clarke, 2/6; Mrs. Woodhead, 2/6; Miss Hatton, 2/6; Mrs. Zahel, 5/-; Mrs. W. S. Wilson, £1.

BALANCE SHEET.—MITCHELL RIVER MISSION.

RECEIPTS AND EXPENDITURE FOR THE YEAR ENDING DECEMBER 31st, 1923.

RECEIPTS.		£	s.	d.
By Australian Board Missions	...	1403	13	10
" Government Grant	...	500	0	0
" Donations	...	109	9	7
" Discount	...	22	15	2
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...
	...

LIABILITIES AND ASSETS.

LIABILITIES		ASSETS
£	s. d.	£	s. d.
Matthews, Rev. M., Special Account 8 18 3	National Bank of Australasia Ltd. 256 12 6
Frutts, T. 17 5 0	Torres Straits Mission 150 0 0
Hospital Account 6 6 6	J. Tunny 6 0 0
Boys' Accounts 208 5 5
Excess Receipts over Expenditure as above	£695 3 2
Excess Expenditure over Receipts, 1922	523 5 10
	<hr/> 171 17 4
	<hr/> £412 12 6		<hr/> £412 12 6

INTERCESSION PAPER

Jan., Feb., March, 1924.

INTERCESSIONS.

We beseech Thee to hear us, O Lord.

That it may please Thee :

That Priests may be found who are willing to work amongst the scattered white population in the Queensland Gulf Country and in the Northern Territory.

To assist with Thy grace the students at S. Paul's College, Moa.

To give wisdom and guidance to those responsible for future developments in the Missionary work in this Diocese.

That the Commonwealth Government may pursue a more enlightened policy in dealing with the Aborigines in the Northern Territory.

That the Queensland Government may find well qualified Christian teachers for their schools in the Torres Straits Islands.

THANKSGIVINGS.

We thank Thee and bless Thee, O Lord.

1 That John Edward Wainwright has volunteered to undertake work at the Mitchell River.

2 For the 240 persons who received confirmation in this Diocese last year.

3 For the health and well-being of the Church staff of the Diocese in 1923.

THE CARPENTARIAN

For the Diocese of Carpentaria,
North Australia

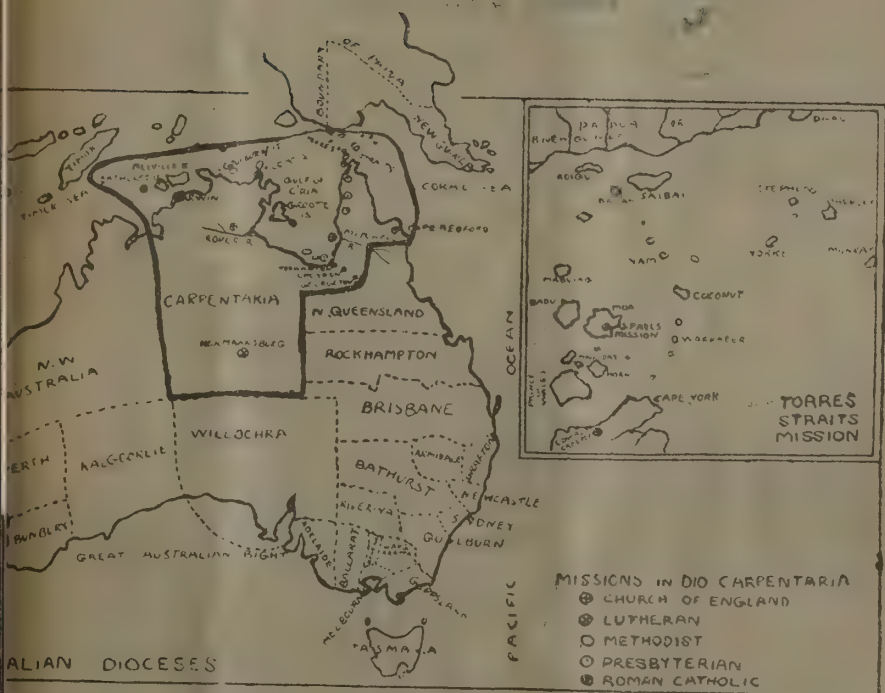

CXIII., No. 94

THURSDAY ISLAND, APRIL 1, 1924.

Price 2/6 a Year

Published on the first day of each quarter

Post Free

NOTICE.

All communications to be addressed to the Editor of The Carpentarian, Bishop's House, Thursday Island, to whom subscriptions may be sent.

The address of the Secretary for the Carpentarian Association in England is Miss Theodora Scarth, Bearsted, Kent, England.

Information can be obtained from the Bishop or from the Diocesan Secretary.

NOTICE TO CONTRIBUTORS

All contributions of Parish News, etc., should reach the Editor before the last day of February, May, August, and November in each year.

Diocese of Carpentaria.

Bishop :

RT. REV. STEPHEN HARRIS DAVIES.
Thursday Island, Queensland.
Consecrated Lady Day, 1922.

Administrator :

REV. F. W. SLADE, B.A., Th. Schol.

Sub-Dean :

REV. F. W. SLADE.

Diocesan Secretary :

REV. F. W. SLADE. Postal Address : Box 57, Thursday Island, Queensland, Australia.

Commissaries :

REV. J. JONES, M.A., All Saints', S. Kilda, Melbourne.
REV. C. B. MIRRLEES, Springhill, Maesmore, Gloucester, England.
REV. W. J. B. SCOTT, 16 Little Grosvenor Street, London, W. 1.
REV. CECIL EDWARDS, Holy Trinity Rectory Woolloongabba.

Rectors :

REV. B. S. COLE, Cooktown.
REV. I. LL. SKELTON, Darwin.
REV. F. W. SLADE, B.A., Thursday Island.
REV. E. TAFFS, Mossman.

Honorary Lay Readers :

MR. H. F. L. FINNISS, Darwin.
HIS HONOUR JUDGE ROBERTS, Darwin.

Diocesan Council :

REV. F. W. SLADE, B.A.
REV. J. J. E. DONE.
REV. W. H. MACFARLANE, Th.L.
MR. GEO. CLARK.
MR. A. SULLIVAN.
DR. VERNON.

Honorary Legal Adviser :

HIS HONOUR JUDGE MACNAUGHTON.

Aboriginal Mission, Mitchell River :

MR. J. W. CHAPMAN.
REV. H. MATTHEWS, J.P. (Supt.)
MRS. MATTHEWS.
MISS F. SMITH.
MRS. TRELLOGEN.

Roper River Mission :

MR. DYER.
REV. R. D. JOYNT.
REV. H. E. D. WARREN (Supt.)
MR. H. L. PERRIMAN.
MR. E. C. H. LOUSADA.
MISS CROSS.
MRS. DYER.
MISS DOVE.

Torres Straits Mission :

REV. J. J. E. DONE.
REV. W. H. MACFARLANE, Th.L.
REV. J. W. SCHOMBERG.
*REV. JOSEPH LUI.
*REV. POEY PASSI.
DEACONESS HATTON, Moa.
MISS MARY BANN, Moa,
* Native Deacons.

Cowal Creek Mission :

Supervised by the REV. J. DONE.
Teacher : SATRAIKA.

The Diocese.

The See was founded in 1900, and consists of such part of Queensland as is bounded by the sea on the north and east by the Northern Territory on the west and by a line drawn from lat. S. 19deg. 30min. on the western boundary of Queensland due east to par. 144deg. E. and thence N. to lat. S. 16deg. 40min. and thence east to the sea, together with the whole of the Northern Territory, comprising an area of not less than 620,000 square miles. The population, which is very widely scattered over this immense area, consists of about 10,000 whites, 5,000 Japanese, Chinese, and other aliens and 85,000 aboriginals. The white population is mainly mining and pastoral. The See town is Thursday Island, a pearling centre north of Cape York.

Finance.

The Diocese has no endowments beyond the Bishop's income of £395 per annum. Every parish needs a grant from central funds which come from subscriptions to the Diocese, and grants from English Societies.

Special Collections.

On Easter Day the offertory alms are given to the Clergyman of the Parish, and on Good Friday to the Australian Board of Missions.

THE CARPENTARIAN.

BISHOP'S LETTER.

During this last quarter I have been away from the Diocese far more than I had meant to be, the excuse must be that in addition to the circumstances of which I was aware (my promise to take confirmations in the neighbouring diocese), other events happened which led me off to Brisbane first and then on to Sydney for five days.

Within the next three months many things are happening in the Diocese of the greatest importance, events that are bound to have their effect on the life of the Church in North Queensland, and that demand from us our greatest efforts of prayer and faith; faith because they are ventures for God, and there is no certainty that results will be as it is expected that they should be, and prayer for those who are to be the principal parties in each venture.

First and chief must come the ordination of two more Torres Straits Islanders to the diaconate, two Islanders had been ordained some years ago, and are now going to have twelve months further preparation before being advanced to the priesthood, but that it should be possible to find two more men from a population of under 3,000 souls who are fitted for ordination is a striking event that we must be most thankful for; this is one step further in the forming of a self-contained Native Church, and as it partakes of the nature of a foundation stone in such Church there is need that it be strong.

Next is the opening of the Mission on the East coast of the Cape Forke Peninsula; this had been spoken of and delayed so often that we dare hardly to say a word about it for fear something may again occur to cause further delay and disappointment, but a Superintendent has been appointed, H.R. Rowan, who is at present a master on the staff of All Souls School at Charters Towers; and a lugger has also been purchased for the use of this Mission, which it is expected will sail from Thursday Island in June on its first voyage to the Mission territory.

Then the third venture is at the Edward River where J. W. Chapman, with two Mitchell River Mission boys, will establish himself in June, a whale boat with engine and sails has been purchased for this work, this will enable the mission to keep in touch with the head station at the Mitchell; here the methods that have proved to be so successful at Cowal Creek will be adopted, but Cowal Creek is in touch with the outside world and the men from there know the ways of the Torres Straits Islanders, whereas the Edward River tribe is cut off from everyone, will they settle down and send their children to school without any inducement?

These events are all of a missionary nature, they are all ventures, and it is quite easy for any or all of them to be disastrous failure and hereby cripple the work of the Church in the North for years to come; but I feel sure that the principal participants will be strengthened by the prayers of the faithful.

STEPHEN CARPENTARIA.

CONFIRMATION TOUR IN NORTH QUEENSLAND.

On the confirmation tour that I undertook in the neighbouring diocese nearly every centre of population was visited within the space of two months. There were some things that one remarked upon, first came the confusion in the geographical situation, to tell people at Charters Towers that they were not living in Northern Queensland seemed like teaching heresy, one had to continually arouse oneself and remember that most people thought that Queensland ended a few miles north of Cairns, and the name given to their diocese helps to confound their ideas on the geographical situation; that most of North Queensland was in the diocese of Carpentaria, and that their own diocese was mostly Central Queensland, seemed fresh information. Then one had to adapt oneself to more speedy methods of transport 'tis true we have bits of railways in Carpentaria, but even they do not indulge in daily train services, and our sailing boats always arrive, but the timetable depends on the wind and no one really worries if it is to-day or to-morrow; but on this tour a very drastic alteration of ideas had to take place, for not only were the means of communication much better, but that pernicious practice of speeding up was in full force in the Church life; the best instance was the race we had between Atherton and Herberton, between the early morning service at Atherton on the Sunday and the 10 a.m. service on the same morning at Herberton, the race over the range per motor-car was a great effort, we won; that is, there was just time enough for me to put on robes and enter the Church in time to preach. Then, of course, there was the return to the little wooden and iron Churches that one remembered from Brotherhood days. It helps one to appreciate more the stone, concrete, and lime-cement Churches of the North.

Confirmation was given in twenty-seven places, over the course of forty-three days, starting first from Cairns one worked back or west along the line on to the Tableland; this was followed by a trip to Townsville, and west from there to Cloncurry, staying for a few days at Charters Towers, where there was a prize distribution at All Souls School, and the largest of the confirmations in the Parish Church. On returning from the West a visit was paid to the Ingham parish, in which parish I was glad to be able to call on Mrs. Pitt, who has always supported the Mitchell River Mission in a most generous way. After Christmas in Townsville the parishes of Ayr and Proserpine were visited in the South. Just before leaving that diocese, I was glad to hear that their own Bishop, after being operated upon in London, was well on the way to recovery, and would shortly be returning to his Diocese.

SOUTHERN TRIP.

On my return from assisting in the Diocese of North Queensland I found that matters had moved on suddenly in connection with our opening a Mission on the East coast of the Cape York Peninsula. Any thing definite in regard to the opening of this Mission had been delayed and postponed so often that it came as a pleasant surprise to know that after three years the Government and our own Church authorities in the south were prepared to do something. There were many details and some difficulties still to be overcome so that it seemed best to go to Brisbane and Sydney to interview Government and Australian Board of Mission officials. Satisfactory arrangements were made of which the details must appear later, sufficient to say now that Ketch, the "Mikado," has been bought for the work, that H. J. Rowan, who is at present on the staff at All Souls School, Charters Towers, is to be Superintendent, and that he is on the "Mikado," with Rev. J. J. Done on the "Herald," will leave Thursday Island about mid-June for the scene of the future mission work.

My trip to the south also brought another great pleasure to me, that was that I was able to be in Sydney for the Commemoration of the Centenary of the Consecration of S. James' Church. The Priest in charge had asked me to preach, and this I had had to refuse, as I had expected to be miles away, but other Diocesan matters brought me down in time for the Centenary. We are very proud of anything 100 years old in this young country for it takes us back to the very beginning of white settlement, and S. James' Church is associated with the earliest Church History of Australia; the foundation stone was laid by Governor Macquarie on October 7, 1819, the Consecration took place on February 11, 1824, the Rev. Samuel Marsden acting as Consecrator. The various services on the Sunday and Monday were very well attended, the Bishop of Armidale preaching a most eloquent sermon at the chief service on Monday morning.

My return to the Diocese illustrates the difficulties of travel in a young country. I was journeying by the new mail train service from Brisbane to Townsville, a distance of 838 miles, hoping to catch a boat at Townsville for home. There had been very good rains about. First we came to a washout on the line; this caused a seven hours' delay; then the Burdekin River was flowing over the low level bridge, and only after much delay was it decided to row passengers and luggage over in boats. This took most of twenty-four hours; another washout was discovered, fortunately just before we ran into it, more delay, which enabled another river, the Haughton, to come down in flood, so there was more boating to be done. Townsville was reached on Tuesday night instead of early on the Sunday morning. Much to my joy I heard that the boat I expected to catch was still at the quay, the rain had stopped the loading of her cargo of beef. The histories of the diocese that were in parcels, and which the Railway said must be treated as parcels and could not be called personal luggage, were left with all the other parcels in the van on the side of the Burdekin River. We are still hopeful of getting them.

"LEAH," A NATIVE OF THE MITCHELL RIVER.

MITCHELL RIVER MISSION.

The last news to come through before the wet weather set in reported that all the staff were well. "Leah," a native of the Mitchell River, is acting as assistant teacher at the school, and from reports received is performing her work very well.

Miss Doris Downing, of Maryborough, Victoria, has been accepted as Teacher for the Mitchell River. Miss Downing is at present in the Victorian Educational Department, and will be leaving for the Mitchell about the end of April.

The Queensland Government has given an increased grant of £100 a year towards the work at the Mitchell in consideration of our undertaking work from there on the Edward River, a whaleboat with engine and sails has been purchased for this work.

THE OLD TESTAMENT.

This article consists chiefly of quotations from a book by the Bishop of Pretoria, which rather surprised the vicar, who did not know that these difficulties were so widespread.

Many people are fatally familiar with a variegated assortment of odds and ends of Old Testament knowledge. They think they ought to believe that all the scriptures contain strict historical truth, and that all the characters and stories in scripture are edifying and exemplary, including, for example, Jacob swindling his brother by the slimmest of dodges, and Jael savagely murdering a sleeping and confiding guest. And they imagine unnatural marvels where none are recorded, as about the animals in Noah's ark or the speech of Balaam's ass.

Minds must be swept clear of deposited lumber. There are incorrect beliefs or semi beliefs about the Old Testament which have been closely intermixed with the faith of many generations. Many have a theory that all the ancient scriptures are verbally and literally inspired, though such a theory is not taught by the Church and is no part of Christianity. Preachers have hesitated to say that we must definitely leave that theory behind, and the hesitation has had widespread evil effects; it has spread the idea that Christianity is incompatible with intellectual candour.

The great mass of the general public is not familiar with the knowledge of those who give themselves to the study of the Bible with the aid of modern learning.

Instead of believing in inspired writings we must learn to recognise inspired men. God never wrote a book; no book was ever inspired. He wrote upon the hearts and minds and consciences of living men. The acceptance of so many printed bits of truth must give way to the understanding of a people's continuous experience. The Bible is a human as well as a divine book.

Some parts of the Old Testament consist of folklore, neither invented nor taught by the writers, but used by them to be the medium for expressing great truths about God and man and the world, truths which the writers knew by experience and inspiration. This old folklore was wonderfully adapted by teachers in the sixth and following centuries B.C., who put it into the holy books for the purpose of conveying the conclusions to which life had brought them.

For instance, the story of the Fall is not the history of what happened once upon a time, but is the verdict of religious conscience on life. Man found himself at war with himself, made for righteousness but in fact perpetually falling from his true estate. To express this, and much more, the editor put the fall-myth into the Bible; and it is daily verified by every mother's son alive.

Hence we must go to the Old Testament to find comrades in our difficulties, men who faced all the troubles of life, who met with oppression, injustice, hardship, who endured financial embarrassments and failure and sickness, yet did not desert God but kept their faith and kept on coming back to it when they had been tempted to doubt God's power and goodness.

We must find our way to a constant, inspiring faith as those men found it; and their experience, which they were inspired to record in the holy books, has proved of incalculable value in leading multitudes to God. To neglect the Old Testament is to neglect a powerful weapon against evil; to use it devoutly is to gain great benefits in the search for personal salvation.

But the worst mistake is to try to make a book take the place of the living church; active participation in the life of the church is always necessary to true and living faith. The instruction given to the children in this parish will prevent the wrong ideas mentioned above, but it will not make them know God unless they are taught by experience to seek him in his church.—“Parish Gazette.”

MARRIAGE FESTIVITIES AT THE ROPER RIVER MISSION.

(Contributed.)

The marriage of Timothy and Sarah was celebrated, on January 15th, 1924, at 11 a.m., at St. Catherine's Church, Roper River Mission Station.

Great and widespread interest has been taken in the event for a long time past, not only because of the fact of the Bride and Bridegroom being popular amongst their fellows on the Station, and also of Timothy making a very favourable impression on a large number of people when he visited south, but because of these two being the first Native missionaries on the staff of the Roper River Mission.

As is generally the case, the children were most enthusiastic in helping with the preparations. Under the guidance of the lady missionaries, hymns and Psalms were practised, cooking operations were attended to, the school room cleared of its fixings and decorated with greenery from the bush, paper streamers, bon-bons, fans and a wedding bell, the effect being very pretty and complete when the tables were decorated with lilies and amber blossoms.

The benefits of the simple dress in this part of the world was evidenced by the fact that a lady missionary retired at 10.30 a.m. to dress the bride and bridesmaid and herself, and was ready in good time for the service at 11.

The Rev. R. D. Joynt, foster-father of the bridegroom, conducted the service and throughout there was a reverend and happy spirit which was a great joy to the missionaries present, and it showed that the children fully appreciated all that had been taught them concerning marriage in the light of Christian teaching. The service set forth in our Prayer Book was followed, even to the reading of the exhortation at the end. The choral part included the hymn: “The voice that breathed o’er Eden,” the 126th Psalm and the hymn, “O Perfect Love,” sung by the congregation during the signing of the Register.

The bride, who was given away by Mr. A. J. Dyer, wore a single gown of white muslin hair dressed with orange blossom and a tulle veil. The latter being made by the Girls' Friendly Society of Golden Square, Bendigo. She carried a beautiful sheaf of white lilies. The bridesmaids, Ester and Naomi, two fellow confirmees were gowned in white and carried amber poinsettia bouquets. The bridegroom and his best man—Mr. E. C. H. Lousada—wore the usual white duck suits and white boots common to the Territory.

The hanging of a lucky shoe on the bride's arm by Dinah, was a very pretty incident as the happy couple passed down the aisle. Dinah is the baby Christian of the Mission. Photos were taken, then all sat down to the Wedding Breakfast in the decorated school room. The menu was simplicity itself, consisting of freshly baked rolls, cocoa, and a four-tiered iced and decorated wedding cake.

The toasts of the King and of the Bride and Bridegroom were honoured with cocoa. The latter toast being proposed by the Rev. R. D. Joynt and supported by Messrs. Dyer and Lousada and accompanied with musical honours.

The Superintendent—The Rev. H. E. Warren—who was unavoidably detained at Groote Eylandt, wrote a very fine letter in the name of the whole C.M.S., conveying their best wishes to Mr. and Mrs. Hampton; and welcoming them as the first Native Assistant Missionaries. This letter was read to the gathering by Mr. Dyer, and a copy handed to the Bridegroom. The latter fittingly responded, returning thanks for the good wishes and presents, a large number of which had been received from people whom he had met down south.

Previous to the wedding a display of their presents had been arranged in the dinging-room. The whole Station, including little Anthony—in his "motor-car," viewed with great interest all the tokens of love and affection.

At 3 p.m., the happy couple left on horse back for Mission Gorge, which is the holiday resort of the Roper Mission. After a short stay there, they will return to the Roper Mission and board the "Holly" for Groote Eylandt, where it is proposed they should labour till next October, when they expect to take up their life's work at the Roper River Mission Station.

R. D. JOYNT,
C.M.S., Roper River.

January 15th, 1924.

NOTES.

We regret to announce the departure of the Rev. B. S. Cole from the diocese. B. S. Cole first undertook work in this diocese in April, 1911, when he went for some months to the Mitchell River, later he went to S. Paul's, Moa. For the last four years he has been Rector of Cooktown. Rev. B. S. Cole has been offered and has accepted work in Brisbane. No appointment has been made to Cooktown at present.

The Rev. C. G. Lane will shortly be coming to the diocese. He will be licensed as Mission Priest in the diocese for a time.

Sailor Gabey and Captain Oth are to be ordained Deacons on Sunday, May 4, and the second after Easter, they will be licensed; the one as Curate at Boigu, and the other as Curate at Dauan with Saibai.

Rev. Joseph Lui and Rev. Poey Passi are coming into College for twelve months' study before their ordination to the Priesthood.

The Chairman of the Australian Board of Missions is to visit the diocese this year. He will come across from Papua in the "Maclaren King," and expects to arrive in Thursday Island about August 21. He hopes to be able to visit S. Paul's, Moa; Saibai; Daruley; Mabuiag; and Badu in the first week. He will then leave for the Mitchell River Mission and expects to spend Sunday, September 7th, at that Mission; the "Maclaren King" is to bring him back to Thursday Island and take him down to Yarrabah, calling at the new East Coast Mission on his way. The Chairman's time is limited, as he hopes to be at Rockhampton for the Provincial Synod, September 23.

The North Queensland Bush Brotherhood have promised to pay two visits this year into the Gulf Country for us. In May, the Rev. B. M. Challoner hopes to visit Croydon and Normanton; towards the end of July the Rev. E. C. Pond hopes to visit Burketown and Normanton.

A group of Moa Island men have formed themselves into a Company and have purchased their own lugger, the "Dulcia." We wish them every success in their new venture; they work down the Barrier Reef as far as Townsville and Cairns collecting beeche-de-mer and trochas shell. Deaconess Hatton returned from her furlough by the "Montoro," on March 16, and left for S. Paul's, Moa, within a few days by the "Bonzai."

TO A TORRES STRAITS SEA SHELL.

O beauteous shell, marked by the Master's Hands,
Created by His Will and wondrous care,
With tints as delicate as rainbow bands
And intricate effects of tracery rare.

The azure blue of tropic seas is thine,
The golden shaft of evening sun's last ray
Has left its impress in thy rich design;
And sea ferns brown in their shades display.

And pencilling as from an artist's brush
Forms characters as of an ancient scroll;
Written maybe to bid us stop and hush
To the message here interpreted for all.

Written beneath the sea, yet by the Lord
That made all things, both in the Heaven and earth;
Who is our God, our Father, King adored;
Whose love extends to things of smallest worth.

Even to those who have denied His name;
Yet precious in His sight they still must be;
"Seek ye the Lord, your Saviour now acclaim,
And be ye clothed with immortality."

—W.W.L. P.

Fourteen centuries ago in Rome, a proconsul, a retired centurion, rich merchant, a travelled gentleman, discussing the rumour that

Gregory the Pope intends to send Augustine and some forty monks to Britain:

"A good worthy man, Gregory, but with no knowledge of the world, and dreadfully addicted to sentimentality. Recall the absurd fuss he made when he was Archdeacon over the angel faces of some little fair-haired Angels in our market-place. Why, everybody knows that the Angles or Saxons, or whatever they call themselves, have quite a decent religion of their own, or at any rate as good a one as they require for their particular needs. What I say is, "Leave them alone. Ten to one, if you upset their native beliefs, you will only corrupt them." And just think how much more good Augustine and his companions could do at home. I consider it is an utter waste of effort to try to Christianize a few of those remote islanders."

—"The Church Times."

"Lest ye become as little children ye cannot enter into the kingdom of Heaven."

Now, little children submit their will and reason to their elders. S. Teresa says, "As we are never absolute masters of our own will, so as to employ it purely and simply for God, till we subject it wholly to reason, obedience is the true means of bringing about that subjection which can never be brought about by much reasoning, because our nature and self-love can furnish so much on their side that we shall never come to an end, and very often will make that which is most reasonable, if we have no liking for it, to seem folly because we have no inclination to do it.

There is so much to be said of this inward struggle, that we shall never come to an end, and so many are the means which Satan, the world, and our flesh employs in order to warp our reason. Is there, then, any help for it? Yes; as in a very doubtful question of law men go to an arbitrator, and weary of pleading, put the matter in his hands, so let the soul go to someone fully bent on pleading no further or thinking of its cause, but relying on the words of Our Lord, who saith, "He that heareth you heareth Me," regardless of its own will. Our Lord makes so much of this submission and justly so, for we make Him thereby Master of the freewill He has given us; for by the practice thereof, now conquering ourselves wholly, at other times after a thousand struggles, thinking the decisions given in our case to be folly, we conform to that which is commanded us by the help of this painful exercise; but at last, painfully or not, we do it, and our Lord on His part helps us so much, that as we submit our will and reason for His sake, so He makes us masters of them both."

COOKTOWN NOTES.

The advent of the festive season of Christmas brought to our civic and Church life a temporary renewal of life and activities. Many of those who had been away at their employment for months made it the occasion of family reunion, and we were also cheered with some visitors to the town.

On the 15th December, St. Mary's Guild ran their bazaar in aid of the funds of the Church. Great credit is due to this small band of workers for their wonderful collection of needlework. Critics pronounced it as being of a very high order. Friends of the Church backed up their efforts by contributions in various ways. It was more than pleasing to see the great number of people present at the afternoon opening, and also during the evening. The gross takings were a great reward and encouragement to industriousness, for they amounted to £73. The Churchwardens were greatly cheered by such a substantial contribution to the coffers of the Church.

The Christmas services were splendidly attended. At the 7.30 a.m. celebration of H.C. most of the communicants were in attendance, and it was a rightful and refreshing testimony to the Blessed Truth of the Incarnation of Jesus Christ.

The eleven o'clock Eucharist had a good congregation, but fewer communicants. The adornment of the Church was dignified; the white Christmas lilies and the touch of virgin blue at the altar gave a very reverent tone.

It is with deepest regret that we have to record the death of a faithful and consistent Churchman in the person of Thomas Edmund Thomas. His interest in Church affairs as a Churchwarden, parochial councillor, and communicant extended over 36 years.

His activities as a citizen in the Municipal Council gained for him the respect of the whole community. Quiet and reserved, yet always to be relied on, his advice was sound and practical. His kindness in the past tided the Church over financial straits, and his advice and assistance could always be secured. We shall miss his presence amongst us, but his consistency ought to be an inspiration to slackers.

Previous to the public funeral, which was a glowing testimony to his worth and respect, the casket rested before the altar of the parish Church. May he rest in peace, and may light perpetual shine upon him.—B.S.C.

DO YOU READ IT?

Quite a small proportion of people who belong to our communion read missionary literature. Yet the missionary cause is the biggest thing that any human being can become interested in. One useful method of acquiring knowledge of the subject—especially the doings of the living Church in out-of-the-way places—is by subscribing to a missionary journal. The Australian Board of Missions is our official organisation for attending to the “biggest thing.” The A.B.M. issues an increasingly fascinating journal each month under the name of the “A.B.M. Review.” It is illustrated, and is assisted by pens and typewriters in many climes. The cost is two shillings per annum.

We draw attention to the “A.B.M. Review” in this issue, more especially as special efforts are being made to increase its circulation. If you are not a subscriber hand in your name for a copy to the rector of your parish, or send 2/- along to A.B.M. office, 242 Pitt Street, Sydney. Specimen copies will be supplied either by the clergy or the Secretary, at the A.B.M. Office.

POSTAGE STAMPS.

Thursday Island—the see town of the Diocese—is the headquarters of the A.B.M. Stamp Department. The hon. secretary is Mr. H. J. Simpson, whose postal address is Box 62, Thursday Island. He will be pleased to supply packets of stamps at a cost of 5s. upwards. None are kept in stock, but these packets are made up to suit the stated requirements of purchasers as nearly as possible. If you have a stamp collecting friend tell him of this opportunity of acquiring fresh specimens for his collection. The A.B.M. Stamp Department specialises in what is known as the "Torres Straits" packet which sells for 10/6, and is sent by registered post. It mainly contains Papuan stamps, Pacific Islands, and obsolete Australian States.

Contributions of stamps are always welcomed. But do not send common Australian or English. Lightly postmarked Commonwealth Stamps over 2d. in original value are useful, but especially all issues in Papua, Fiji, Solomons, New Hebrides, Gilbert, and Ellice, and Samoa.

Approval books are sent out to responsible collectors, who are either known to the hon. secretary or who can produce references preferably to the parish priest.—H.G.S.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS.

The diocesan secretary has received with thanks the following sums:—

Interest, Diocesan Church Management Fund	34	1	1
For Torres Straits Mission—
From Mabuiag Island	2	9	0
Boigu Island	6	19	0
Darnley Island	4	11	0
Murray Island	3	16	8
Yorke Island	3	7	9
Dauan Island	2	18	0
Moa Island	16	8	0
Badu Island	18	7	0
Poid Island	8	7	0
Coconut Island	12	0	0
Stephen Island	0	6	0
Sabai Island	3	9	0
Yam Island	5	0	10
Donation, Miss Hempsted	5	0	0
Mabuiag hymn books, sales	1	12	0
Mer Bibles, sales	0	5	0
Diocesan Fees	1	1	0
For A.B.M., from Thursday Island Sun. School	1	9	8
For Bishopric Endowment Fund, from Mossman	1	0	0
Parochial Assessments, Mossman	2	2	0
Natives' Accustomable Dues	4	0	0
Clergy Endowment Fund	27	6	0
Walter and Eliza Hall Trust Grants	50	0	0
Christian Legacy Income	14	0	0
For Mitchell River Mission—
From Mrs. Pritt	10	10	0
Moa Heralds	1	4	0
Subscriptions to the diocese, per A.B.M.	159	14	10
From Dio. of Newcastle	20	0	0
W. J. Paull	5	5	0

EXPENDITURE.

	£	s.	d.	£	s.	d.	RECEIPTS.	£	s.	d.
Magazine	53	7	9	Balance 1.1 '23			Sundry Disbursements and Refunds (M.R.M.)
Less Subscriptions	19	9	6				Subscriptions to the Diocese			590 2 3
Religious Instruction in State Schools				33	18	3	Waller and Eliza Hall Trust Grants			100 0 0
Bishop's House Maintenance	74	9	3	1	10	0	Diocesan Fees			18 19 6
Less Contributions	17	10	0				Parochial Assistants			150 0 0
Printing				56	19	3	Carp. Association Donations			4 9 0
Melanesian Work				1	0	0	Less Credited to Magazine A/c	200	0	0
Cowal Creek Mission	40	18	10	152	17	4	Clergy Endowment Fund Income			188 0 0
Less Donations	1	0	0				Christison Legacy Income			53 13 2
Grants to Parishes				39	18	10	Interest			29 4 5
Priests' Insurance Premiums				171	0	0				66 1 6
Sundry Stipendiary Payments				67	10	0
Postages, etc.				16	16	0
Interest				7	14	0
General	51	7	10	33	4	10
Less Refunds	7	2	0
Balance 31/12/'23	44	5	10
	609	3	0
	£1,235 16 4

STATEMENT OF ASSETS AND LIABILITIES at 31st December, 1923.

LIABILITIES.

	£	s.	d.	£	s.	d.	ASSETS.	£	s.	d.
Christison Fund	272	13	10	Stocks			Commonwealth Savings Bank			175 0 0
Deaconess Buchanan Memorial Fund	174	7	0	Fixed Deposits			Q.N. Bank Current Account			96 1 0
Forsayth Ch. Building Fund	39	14	2	Mission House						1522 15 0
Georgetown Ch. Building Fund	33	16	10							100 18 0
Cathedral Building Fund	2	3	5							17 16 0
Louisa Bancroft Legacy	103	7	8
Gertrude Robson Legacy	126	7	3
Saibai Ch. Building Fund	136	3	8
Bursaries	70	17	6
Mossman Ch. Building Fund	97	9	5
Sundry Trusts (Gulf Car Fund, etc.)	224	8	0
Native Deacons' Life Ins. (from N.A.D. 33)	21	18	3
Excess of Assets	1303	7	0
	609	3	0
	£1,912 10 0

£1,235 16 4

£1,912 10 0

SPECIAL TRUSTS: STATEMENT OF RECEIPTS AND EXPENDITURE for the Year ended 31st December, 1923.

EXPENDITURE.		£	s.	d.	RECEIPTS.		£	s.	d.
S. Andrew's Waterside Mission Grants	45	0	Balance 1/1/23—
Mission House	29	16	Total Liabilities	846	8
Sundry Trusts—	0	Less Assets Special Trusts, ..	194	5	1	4
Gulf Car Fund	..	1	16	0	Liab. entered in error, 1922 ..	3	2	0	..
Dinghy Engine, "Herald"	..	39	18	0		197	7	1	..
A.B.M. Donations	41	14	Christison Fund Interest	649
Torres Straits Mission	59	19	Deaconess Buchanan Memorial Fund Interest	1
Mitchell River Mission	157	2	Forsyth Church Building Fund Interest	3
Mitchell River Cattle	82	11	Georgetown Church Building Fund	6
Children's Bursaries	13	13	Cathedral Church Building Fund	6
Balance, held in Special Trusts—	60	0	Louisa Bancroft Legacy	23
Total liabilities, 31/12/23	..	1303	7	0	Gertrude Robson Legacy	16
Less assets in Special Trusts, 31/12/23	..	17	16	0	Saibai Church Building Fund Interest	4
					S. Andrew's Waterside Mission Grants	5
					Bursaries, Interest	1
					Mossman Church Building Fund	8
					Mission House	40
					Sundry Trusts—	0
					Gulf Car Fund	197	17
					Dinghy Engine "Herald"	25	8
					Morrison Money	23	2
					Miss Hempsted for Spec. T.S.M.	5	0
									0
					A.B.M. Donations	251
					Torres Straits Mission	7
					Mitchell River Mission	0
					Mitchell River Cattle	6
					Children's Bursaries (W. and E. Hall Trust)	3
					Native Deacons' Life Ins. (from N.A.D. 33)	0
									157
									2
									9
									18
									7
									0
									4
									16
									0
									7
									5
									7
									5

Examined and found Correct.

E. J. HENNESSEY, Auditor.

January 12th, 1924.

F. W. SLADE,

Hon. Diocesan Secretary.

GLENNIE MEMORIAL SCHOOL, TOOWOOMBA

Principal: MISS LAWRENCE.

GLENNIE PREPARATORY SCHOOL, TOOWOOMBA

Principal: MISS SUTTON.

Church of England School for Girls, Toowoomba. Under control of the Brisbane Diocesan Council.

Patron: His Grace the Archbishop of Brisbane.

THE GLENNIE MEMORIAL SCHOOL gives Education up to Senior and Matriculation standard. Specialities: Music, Singing and Art.

THE PREPARATORY SCHOOL receives pupils up to 13 years of age, and prepares candidates for the State Scholarship Examination.

Reduction for Sisters.

Fees for both Schools on application.

The "Church Standard."

Posted to any Address for 12s. 6d. per Annum.

THE CHURCH STANDARD holds the unique position of being the only independent weekly paper published in the interests of the Church of England in Australasia.

Published every Friday Morning.

Appeals to all Members of the Church of England, Members of the C.E.M.S., Churchwardens, Side-men and Parochial Councillors, Sunday School Teachers, Lay Readers, Catechists, and Clergy.

Specimen Copies on application to

THE CHURCH PUBLISHING Co. LTD.

ROYAL INSURANCE BUILDINGS, 16 SPRING STREET, SYDNEY.

ST. MARGARET'S, BRISBANE

CHURCH OF ENGLAND HIGH SCHOOL FOR GIRLS

Under the management of the Sisters of the Society of the Sacred Advent

Pupils prepared for examinations of the University of Queensland, Public Service and Associated Board R.A.

There are two Boarding Houses beautifully situated on extensive grounds overlooking the Brisbane River

BOARDERS RECEIVED FROM THE AGE OF EIGHT

For Prospectus Apply SISTER-IN-CHARGE

ST. CATHARINE'S, STANTHORPE

CHURCH OF ENGLAND HIGH SCHOOL FOR GIRLS
Under the management of the Sisters of the Society of the Sacred Advent

Pupils prepared for examinations of the University of Queensland, and Associated Board R.A.

ADDITIONAL HOUSE SECURED
INCREASED ACCOMMODATION FOR BOARDERS

For Prospectus Apply SISTER-IN-CHARGE

Church of England Girls' Schools

UNDER THE MANAGEMENT OF THE
SISTERS OF THE SACRED ADVENT.

S. ANNE'S, TOWNSVILLE, Quarterly Fees for Boarders	£10 10s.
S. MARY'S, HERBERTON " " " "	£15 15s.

Pupils prepared for Queensland University and Associated Board R.A.
Examinations. Commercial Subjects taught. Open-air sleeping
accommodation if required.

In connection with S. Mary's, Herberton, there is a separate House for Boys under nine years of age. Quarterly Fees, £12 10s.

UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS-URBANA

3 0112 104300378